VOLUME XLIX, PART V.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

SIXTY-SECOND CONGRESS, THIRD SESSION,

PROCEEDINGS, APPENDIX, AND INDEX.

PROCEEDINGS.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 27, 1913.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who always givest us the victory in Christ, we thank Thee that Thou dost never leave us nor forsake us. Though Thou takest from our side friends and counselors, yet Thou dost not take from us Thy loving kindness. We thank Thee, our Father, for the life, the character, and the public service of him whom we this day remember and, remembering, honor. We thank Thee for the privilege of laboring with him for the common weal and for the blessed memory of his life. We commend to Thee those to whom this sorrow is most deep and tender, and pray Thee to keep them and us evermore in Thy heavenly care.

And unto Thee, who art the first and last and whose we are, living or dying, be all glory and praise on earth and in heaven now and forevermore. Amen.

Mr. GALLINGER took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

NEW MEXICO STATE CLAIMS (S. DOC. NO. 1112).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Department of the Interior for an appropriation of $32,000 for the purpose of surveying and establishing boundaries of certain small holding claims in the State of New Mexico, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES MINT, PHILADELPHIA, PA. (S. DOC. NO. 1111).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending for inclusion in the general deficiency appropriation bill an item of appropriation for placing iron grilles at windows, United States Mint, Philadelphia, Pa., $10,000, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 6176. An act for the relief of Gibbes Lykes; and

S. 7385. An act to relinquish the claim of the United States against the grantees, their legal representatives and assigns, for timber cut on Petaca land grant.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 28812) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28730) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BARTLETT, Mr. BORLAND, and Mr. GOOD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 3947. An act to provide for a bridge across Snake River, in Jackson Hole, Wyo.; and

H. R. 27827. An act to amend section 70 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

SENATOR FROM OKLAHOMA.

Mr. GORE. I present the credentials of my colleague [Mr. OWEN], reelected to the Senate from the State of Oklahoma, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be read.

The credentials of ROBERT L. OWEN, chosen by the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1913, were read and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a joint resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Maine, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution by Senate and House of Maine Legislature, seventy-sixth session.

Whereas there is pending before Congress a bill known as the McLean bill, Senate Document No. 6497, to afford Federal protection to migratory game and insectivorous birds; and

Whereas there is a general sentiment in favor of such protection, and an urgent request has been made for the enactment of such law: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That Congress be, and hereby is, urged to enact a law insuring ample protection to migratory game and insectivorous birds.

Resolved, That the legislatures of all States of the United States be, and they are hereby, urged to join in this request by the adoption of this or similar resolution.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and hereby is, directed to print and transmit copies of this resolution to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to the several Members of said bodies representing this State therein; also to the legislatures of all other States of the United States.

CARL E. MILLIKEN, President.
JOHN A. PETERS, Speaker.

In senate chamber, February 10, 1913: Read and adopted. Sent down for concurrence.

W. E. LAWRY, Secretary.

House of representatives, February 10, 1913: Read and adopted in concurrence.

W. R. ROIX, Clerk.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, STATE OF MAINE,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, J. E. Alexander, secretary of state of the State of Maine and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in legislature assembled with the original thereof as filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Maine, on the 12th day of February, 1913, and that it is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have caused the seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Given under my hand at Augusta this 12th day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen and in the one hundred and thirty-seventh year of the Independence of the United States of America.

[SEAL.] J. E. ALEXANDER,
Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of members of the Pokagon Tribe of Pottawattomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to facilitate the reclamation of shore lands for the Burnham lake-front improvement project on Lake Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. OVERMAN presented a petition of the congregation of Race Street Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Statesville, N. C., praying for the passage of the so-called Kenyon-Sheppard interstate liquor bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a petition of Mad River Grange, No. 71, Patrons of Husbandry, of Waterbury, Conn., praying for the passage of the so-called Page vocational education bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Lewiston, Me., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of members of the Athene Club of Bangor, the Seneca Club of South Paris, the Woman's Club of Orono, the Past and Present Club of Fairfield, the Skowhegan Club of Skowhegan, the Progressive Club of Lisbon, the Searchlight Club of Rumford, the Columbian Club of Bethel, the Pine Cone Club of Clinton, the Conklin Class of Portland, and of the Woman's Club of Newcastle and Damariscotta, all in the State of Maine, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation transferring the control of the national forests to the several States, which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. GRONNA presented sundry affidavits in support of the bill (S. 8304) for the relief of Rodger Caplette, which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Maine relative to Federal protection of migratory game and insectivorous birds, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DU PONT presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Wilmington, Del., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland presented memorials of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Chestertown, and Rock Hall, in the State of Maryland, and sundry citizens of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented a memorial of the board of directors of the Massachusetts Peace Society, of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for Federal pay for the National Guard, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the directors of the Massachusetts Peace Society, of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation authorizing the construction of more than one proposed new battleship, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SHIVELY. I present Senate concurrent resolution 2 of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 2.

A concurrent resolution requesting the Representatives and instructing the Senators in Congress from the State of Indiana to vote for and use their influence for the passage of a bill now pending before Congress to place the officers of the Civil War on the retired list as a matter of honor to them.

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Representatives in Congress from the State of Indiana be requested and the Senators from the State of Indiana be instructed to use their influence and to vote for the bill now pending in the Congress of the United States to place the officers of the Civil War on the retired list as a matter of honor, and other matters connected therewith.

Resolved further, That the secretary of the senate is hereby instructed to send a certified copy of this resolution to each of the Representatives in Congress and to the Senators, with instructions, as above indicated, to be certified to by the secretary of the senate and signed by the president of the senate and attested by the secretary.

I hereby certify that the above is a full, true, and complete copy of senate concurrent resolution 2, adopted by the senate on the 13th day of February, 1913, and concurred in by the house on the 14th day of February, 1913.

WM. P. O'NEILL,
President of Senate.

Attest:

WADE H. FREE,
Secretary of Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from F. S. F. Dearborn, New Hampshire State regent, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Suncook, N. H., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUNCOOK, N. H., February 26, 1913.

Senator GALLINGER,
Washington, D. C.:

Please support the bill for memorial bridge to Arlington.

Respectfully, yours,

F. S. F. DEARBORN,
New Hampshire State Regent,
Daughters of the American Revolution.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CATRON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 24296) for the relief of Alonzo D. Cadwallader, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1324) thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20511) for the relief of Samuel Butter & Co., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1327) thereon.

Mr. BACON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 25781) to amend section 77 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1328) thereon.

Mr. ROOT, from the Committee on Industrial Expositions, to which was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. LEA on the 21st instant, providing that the Government of the United States participate in the National Conservation Exposition to be held at Knoxville, Tenn., during the fall of 1913, etc., intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1332) thereon.

Mr. BRYAN, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 8497) to repeal section 3 of an act entitled "An act making appropriation for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1329) thereon.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 7620) for the relief of Ernest C. Stahl, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1330) thereon.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8921) for the relief of William H. Seward, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1331) thereon.

CORPORATIONS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CUMMINS. I submit a report from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, together with the individual views of certain members of the committee. I ask that the report be printed and also that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to request that, in addition to the usual number of this report, there be printed a thousand additional copies for the use of the Interstate Commerce Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the report will be read.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not ask for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not direct it. The Chair simply wanted to know what the Senator reports on.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is a report pursuant to Senate resolution 98, agreed to July 26, 1911, and as the result of a certain investigation which was ordered by that resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that the report be printed in the RECORD, and the Senator from Minnesota requests that 1,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Committee on Interstate Commerce. Without objection, that order will be made.

The report (No. 1326) is as follows:

CONTROL OF CORPORATIONS, PERSONS, AND FIRMS ENGAGED IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CUMMINS, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, submitted the following report, pursuant to Senate resolution 98:

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the following resolution—

"Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to inquire into and report to the Senate at the earliest date practicable what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to the creation and control of corporations engaged in interstate commerce, and what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to persons or firms engaged in interstate commerce, and for this purpose they are authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress at such times and places as they may deem desirable or practicable; to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, to conduct hearings and have reports of same printed for use, and to employ such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants as shall be necessary, and any expense in connection with such inquiry shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee"—

begs leave to make the following report:

On the 26th day of July, 1911, the Senate adopted the foregoing resolution, and acting under the authority and in pursuance thereof the Committee on Interstate Commerce provided for open hearings upon the subject matter of the resolution. The hearings began on the 15th day of November, 1911, and were continued from day to day for more than three months, during which time 103 men appeared before the committee, and their statements, together with the exhibits and documents submitted by them, fill 2,799 printed pages. A printed copy of these statements, exhibits, and documents, including an index, laws, and reference concerning industrial combinations in foreign countries, and a collection of judicial decisions touching the power of Congress in the regulation of commerce among the States, in all, five volumes, is herewith presented to the Senate.

While the committee is conscious that some of the matter adduced at the hearings and submitted as a part of this report is not relevant to the questions under consideration and of little worth, it believes that, upon the whole, the hearings have furnished one of the most valuable contributions that can be found in the literature of the subject. It is not yet ready to report any of the bills which are now before it, and which propose specific modifications of or additions to the existing statute; nor is it prepared at this time to report a substitute for them. It hopes that it may be able before the close of the present session to act finally upon these bills and recommend in definite form the legislation which it may think necessary or wise to meet modern business conditions. It is, however, prepared to answer the general inquiries propounded in the resolution, and in view of the overwhelming importance of the subject it ventures to add to the direct response some observations upon the origin, purpose, and effect of the enactment commonly known as the antitrust law, to indicate wherein it is inadequate, and to suggest the general scope of further regulation.

The committee is of the opinion:

First. That the statute should stand as the fundamental law upon the subject, and that any supplemental legislation for more effectual control and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce should be in harmony with the purpose of the existing statute.

Second. That, whatever may be our views respecting the power of Congress to enact a general Federal incorporation law, it is neither necessary nor desirable at this time to provide for the organization under act of Congress of industrial corporations which propose to engage in commerce among the States and with foreign nations.

Third. That it is desirable to impose upon corporation now or hereafter organized under State law, and engaged or proposing to engage in such commerce, further conditions or regulations affecting both their organization and the conduct of their business, and also to impose further conditions or regulations upon persons, copartnerships, and other associations now engaged, or hereafter engaging, in such commerce, the general character of such regulation to be the same as those laid upon corporations, except such conditions or regulations as are in their very nature peculiar to the corporate form of commercial activity.

It is plain that the first question to be answered in considering what additional legislation upon the subject is necessary or desirable is a vital one. It is this: Should Congress attempt to maintain competitive conditions in the general interstate commerce of the country, where they still exist, and to restore such conditions where they have been destroyed, or should it accept the complete or partial overthrow of competition and resort to some other method of protecting the people against the power of combination and monopoly?

Without doubt the chief if not the only object in mind, when the antitrust law was passed, was to maintain competition as an effective regulating force in business by making it unlawful to enter into any contract or combination in restraint of trade or commerce among the States or with foreign nations, or to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, such trade or commerce. The bill introduced by Senator Sherman, out of which the present statute grew, was in terms directed against the suppression of competition. After a long debate and much reflection the Judiciary Committee of the Senate reported a substitute in which "restraint of trade" was the thing forbidden instead of interference with competition. This was accepted not because there was any abandonment of the desire to preserve competition, but because there was a common law on the subject well established and carefully elucidated in the English decisions. The common law was that both contracts and acts in restraint of trade were injurious to the public welfare, and therefore opposed to public policy. The Congress of 1890 very wisely borrowed the language of the common law and with it came the learning of the judges, who had from time to time declared and expounded it. It is not the purpose of the committee to recite the development of the English doctrine. It was not always stated with exact accuracy and there is some inharmony of expression, but it may be said with confidence that a restraint of trade consisted of such unreasonable restriction of competition as impaired substantially, and to the public injury, the freedom of trade or the freedom to trade. Interference with free competition was generally but not necessarily a restraint of trade, for there were some restrictions that could be put upon competition and upon competitors that left the competitive force as an adequate protection to the people. Hence the common law was that unreasonable, unfair, undue restraint upon or interference with competition or competitive conditions constituted a restraint of trade.

The committee has made this comment upon the common law, and pointed out the distinction between "restraint of competition" and "restraint of trade" in order that it may be fully understood in its analysis of the conflict between the earlier and later opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States relating to the construction and application of the antitrust statute.

The committee will not at this time enter upon an extended argument respecting the policy of maintaining competition or competitive conditions in the business of the country. It is well understood that there are many distinguished students and highly trained thinkers who believe that the age of competition is past, and that for the struggle which competition involves there should be substituted combination and cooperation, under such regulation and supervision as will protect the people from the oppression of monopolistic power, and added to the students and thinkers who have reached this conclusion through mere observation and investigation there are many men engaged in commerce, and who therefore speak from a practical standpoint, who have also concluded that some form of regulated monopoly or concentration should be adopted. All these men, whether theorists or otherwise, admit that if we abandon the effort to maintain competition the Government must undertake, directly or indirectly, to fix prices for the combinations or monopolies. The committee feels that the time has not yet come for so radical a departure from the long-established policy of the country, and it hopes that the time may never come when it will be necessary for the Government to assume the task of establishing prices for general commodities. It believes that the progress of the world depends in a large measure upon that fair, reasonable rivalry among men which has hitherto characterized the advances of civilization.

It is frequently declared that the law can not compel men employed in like business to compete with each other. There is a sense in which this is true, but it is only technically true. What is meant when we use the phrase "maintaining competition" is maintaining competitive conditions. We can both create and maintain competitive conditions, and until human nature is revolutionized when competitive conditions exist there will be actual competition, but if for some extraordinary reason that should fail there will be at least a potential competition tending to prevent undue prices and unfair practices. Without going further into the issue between regulated competition and regulated monopoly, the committee reiterates its finding that the antitrust statute should stand and that every possible effort to create and preserve competitive conditions should be made.

Assuming, therefore, that Congress should maintain the policy established by the antitrust law and should make it more effective by additional legislation, if it be within our power to do so, the committee calls attention to the interpretation which the Supreme Court has given to the statute and to the application of its provisions which that tribunal has made in cases which have come before it for decision. It is not the intent of the committee in this report to review the opinions of the Supreme Court one by one, but rather to select certain types which will either demonstrate the wisdom of additional legislation or show that the law is adequate as it is.

The committee selects for the purpose indicated the following cases, all of which arose under the statute now being considered:

United States v. E. C. Knight Co. (156 U. S., 1).
United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association (166 U. S., 290).
United States v. Joint Traffic Association (171 U. S., 505).
Hopkins v. United States (171 U. S., 578).
Northern Securities Co. v. United States (193 U. S., 197).
Standard Oil Co. v. United States (221 U. S., 1).
United States v. American Tobacco Co. (221 U. S., 106).
United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Co. (not yet reported, opinion delivered Dec. 2, 1912).

The committee does not give a statement of the facts in each of these cases, for to do so would greatly prolong the report, and it will be taken for granted that those who are interested in the subject are already familiar with the facts as they appear in the Supreme Court reports.

The rule of law announced in United States v. Knight Co. and in Hopkins v. United States is that a restraint of trade however unreasonable is not prohibited by the antitrust statute, no matter how general or disastrous the interference or restraint may be upon commerce among the States unless it directly affects such commerce. There is a general understanding among the judges and lawyers of the country that the Knight case has been overruled or modified in subsequent decisions. Undoubtedly it can be fairly inferred from the recent opinions of the court in like cases that, if the facts of the case were now presented, it would be held that the restraint was direct; but the rule of law established has never been questioned by the court and has been emphatically reasserted in every prominent opinion hitherto rendered. The committee does not bring these cases forward for the purpose of disputing the soundness of the rule under existing legislation. Its object is to disclose, as clearly as possible, the scope of judicial discretion, and therefore of business uncertainty which it creates. In every prosecution under the act wherein there is proven or admitted a contract or combination which restrains trade among the States, the first thing that the court must ascertain and declare is whether the restraint is direct or indirect. In the Knight and Hopkins cases, and others of that type, it was held to be indirect. In the Northern Securities Co., Standard Oil Co., and American Tobacco Co. cases it was held to be direct. It is obvious that the opinion of any given man in any given case upon this question, whether he be judge or not, must depend largely not upon his learning in the law but upon his training and bent in the economy of commerce. The result has been, and necessarily will be, that the law officer of the Government before he institutes a prosecution must determine whether the restraint is direct and immediate, and the court in order to decide the issue must employ the functions of the legislator rather than the lawyer.

The consequence is twofold: First, the Department of Justice will ignore a great many unlawful transactions because there will be doubt as to whether the interference with interstate or international trade is direct or indirect; second, the business community has found itself and will find itself in a state of uncertainty as to whether a particular transaction is to be judged by the law of the State or the law of the Nation. It is not claimed that this undefined and undefinable field of judicial discretion can be wholly occupied by legislation, but it is manifest that it is the duty of the legislative branch of the Government to circumscribe it within the closest practicable bounds. The committee will recur to this subject in connection with another aspect of the judicial power, and contents itself now with a statement of its conclusion that there should be further legislation specifically prohibiting certain forms of associations, combination, or monopoly which admittedly restrain trade and commerce among the States and with foreign nations, but which may be held by the courts to be indirect or remote interferences.

The committee has first referred to the point just mentioned, not because it is first in importance, but because it first arose. It now passes to another and more serious weakness in the law as now interpreted.

In the Trans-Missouri Freight Association case there developed a controversy among the members of the Supreme Court that was carried on with unabated vigor through the 15 years intervening between the opinion in the Freight Association case and the opinion in the Standard Oil Co. case. In this period the vicissitudes of life and the changes upon the bench which necessarily ensued converted the opinion of the court in the Freight Association case into a single dissenting opinion in the Standard Oil Co. case, and the dissenting opinion in the former case into the opinion of the court in the latter case. In the Freight Association case Mr. Justice Peckham, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"Second. The next question to be discussed is as to what is the true construction of the statute, assuming that it applies to common carriers by railroad. What is the meaning of the language as used in the statute that 'every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal'? Is it confined to a contract or combination which is only in unreasonable restraint of trade or commerce, or does it include what the language of the act plainly and in terms covers, all contracts of that nature?" (Page 327.)

The learned justice answered the question thus propounded many times and in great variety of phrase in the course of the opinion, and the committee quotes some of these answers.

"When, therefore, the body of an act pronounces as illegal every contract or combination in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, etc., the plain and ordinary meaning of such language is not limited to that kind of contract alone which is in unreasonable restraint of trade, but all contracts are included in such language, and no exception or limitation can be added without placing in the act that which has been omitted by Congress (p. 328).

"But we can not see how the statute can be limited, as it has been by the courts below, without reading into its text an exception which alters the natural meaning of the language used, and that, too, upon a most material point, and where no sufficient reason is shown for believing that such alteration would make the statute more in accord with the intent of the lawmaking body that enacted it (p. 329).

"The arguments which have been addressed to us against the inclusion of all contracts in restraint of trade, as provided for by the language of the act, have been based upon the alleged presumption that Congress, notwithstanding the language of the act, could not have intended to embrace all contracts, but only such contracts as were in unreasonable restraint of trade. Under these circumstances we are, therefore, asked to hold that the act of Congress excepts contracts which are not in unreasonable restraint of trade, and which only keep rates up to a reasonable price, notwithstanding the language of the act makes no such exception. In other words, we are asked to read into the act by way of judicial legislation an exception that is not placed there by the lawmaking branch of the Government, and this is to be done upon the theory that the impolicy of such legislation is so clear that it can not be supposed that Congress intended the natural import of the language used. This we can not and ought not to do (p. 340).

"The conclusion which we have drawn from the examination above made into the question before us is that the antitrust act applies to railroads, and that it renders illegal all agreements which are in restraint of trade or commerce as we have above defined that expression, and the question then arises whether the agreement before us is of that nature" (p. 341).

The issue was clearly joined by Mr. Justice White (now Chief Justice), who in his dissenting opinion, in which Justices Field, Gray, and Shiras concurred, thus stated the question:

"To state the proposition in the form in which it was earnestly pressed in the argument at bar, it is as follows: Congress has said every contract in restraint of trade is illegal. When the law says every, there is no power in the courts, if they correctly interpret and apply the statute, to substitute the word 'some' for the word 'every.' If Congress had meant to forbid only restraints of trade which were unreasonable it would have said so; instead of doing this it has said 'every,' and this word of universality embraces both contracts which are reasonable and unreasonable" (p. 345).

The distinguished justice begins his answer to the proposition just quoted as follows:

"I commence, then, with these two conceded propositions, one of law and the other of fact: First, that only such contracts as unreasonably restrain trade are violative of the general law; and second, that the particular contract here under consideration is reasonable, and therefore not unlawful if the general principles of law are to be applied to it" (p. 344).

Again:

"Its title is 'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies.' The word 'unlawful' clearly distinguishes between contracts in restraint of trade which are lawful and those which are not. In other words, between those which are unreasonably in restraint of trade, and consequently invalid, and those which are reasonable and hence lawful" (p. 352).

Again:

"If these obvious rules of interpretation be applied, it seems to me they render it impossible to construe the words 'every restraint of trade' used in the act in any other sense than as excluding reasonable contracts, as the fact that such contracts were not considered to be within the rule of contracts in restraint of trade was thoroughly established both in England and in this country at the time the act was adopted" (p. 354).

Again:

"Indeed it seems to me there can be no doubt that reasonable contracts can not be embraced within the provisions of the statute if it be interpreted by the light of the supreme command that the intention of the law must be carried out, and it must be so construed as to afford the remedy and frustrate the wrong contemplated by its enactment" (p. 355).

It will be noted that but once in the dissenting opinion is the word "unreasonable" used to qualify the phrase "in restraint of trade." It is generally employed to qualify the word "contract." There is some difference between saying that there may be a reasonable interference with competition or freedom in trade or freedom to trade which did not at the common law constitute a restraint of trade, and saying that there can be under our statute a reasonable restraint of trade. But this was only the beginning.

Two years later the suit of the United States v. Joint Traffic Association came on for decision. Again Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court, and upon the point we are considering there seems to have been no change in the attitude of the members of the court toward it. It is instructive to observe, however, that in referring to Hopkins v. The United States, in which the opinion was handed down at the same term, the learned justice said:

"In Hopkins v. The United States, decided at this term, post, 578, we say that the statute applies only to those contracts whose direct and immediate effect is a restraint upon interstate commerce * * * the effect upon interstate commerce must not be indirect or incidental only" (p. 568).

Five years thereafter the well-known Northern Securities case was decided, and the struggle was renewed with intense earnestness. Mr. Justice Harlan rendered the opinion of the court, and this is the way he stated the question:

"Is the act to be construed as forbidding every combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the States or with foreign nations? Or does it embrace only such restraints as are unreasonable in their nature? Is the motive with which a forbidden combination or conspiracy is formed at all material when it appears that the necessary tendency of that particular combination or conspiracy in question is to restrict or suppress free competition between competing railroads engaged in commerce among the States? Does the act of Congress prescribe, as a rule for interstate or international commerce, that the operation of the natural laws of competition between those engaged in such commerce shall not be restricted or interfered with by any contract, combination, or conspiracy" (p. 328)?

In answering the question he probably goes a little further than Justice Peckham. He states as the conclusion to be drawn from former opinions of the courts:

"That the act is not limited to restraints of interstate and international trade or commerce that are unreasonable in their nature, but embraces all direct restraints imposed by any combination, conspiracy, or monopoly upon such trade or commerce; * * *. That every combination or conspiracy which would extinguish competition between otherwise competing railroads engaged in interstate trade or commerce, and which would in that way restrain such trade or commerce, is made illegal by the act; * * *. That to vitiate the combination, such as the act of Congress condemns, it need not be shown that the combination in fact results or will result in a total suppression of trade or in a complete monopoly, but it is only essential to show that by its necessary operation it tends to restrain interstate or international trade or commerce or tends to create a monopoly in such trade or commerce and to deprive the public of the advantages that flow from free competition (p. 331).

"Whether the free operation of the normal laws of competition is a wise and wholesome rule for trade and commerce is an economic question which this court need not consider or determine. Undoubtedly there are those who think that the general business interest and prosperity of the country will be best promoted if the rule of competition is not applied. But there are others who believe that such a rule is more necessary in these days of enormous wealth than it ever was in any former period of our history. Be all this as it may, Congress has in effect recognized the rule of free competition by declaring illegal every combination or conspiracy in restraint of interstate and international commerce" (p. 337).

Mr. Justice Brewer was with the majority of the court in the Trans-Missouri Association case, and he concurred in the decision in the Northern Securities Co. case; but upon the question we are discussing he rejected the reasoning of Justice Harlan and adopted the views expressed by Justice White in the former case. He said:

"Instead of holding that the antitrust act includes all contracts, reasonable or unreasonable, in restraint of interstate trade, the ruling should have been that the contracts there presented were unreasonable restraints of interstate trade, and as such within the scope of the act. That act, as it appears from its title, was leveled at only 'unlawful restraints and monopolies.' Congress did not intend to reach and destroy those minor contracts in partial restraint of trade which the long course of decision at common law had affirmed were reasonable and ought to be upheld. The purpose rather was to place a statutory prohibition with prescribed penalties and remedies upon those contracts which were in direct restraint of trade, unreasonable, and against public policy. Whenever a departure from common-law rules and definitions is claimed, the purpose to make the departure should be clearly shown. Such a purpose does not appear and such a departure was not intended" (p. 361).

The Chief Justice and Justices White, Peckham, and Holmes dissented. Justice White, while discussing many phases of the relation between the General and the State Governments, finally rested his opinion upon the Knight case, holding that there was no direct restraint of interstate commerce. Justice Holmes, while concurring with Justice White, took occasion to say, in substance, that the method adopted by the defendants for the suppression of competition did not constitute a restraint of trade in the sense of the antitrust law.

With the Northern Securities case there terminated one distinct, striking period in the interpretation and application of the antitrust statute. It is needless to inquire at length whether or not the views of the court, as expressed in the opinions of Justices Peckham and Harlan, were in exact harmony with the common law as to the meaning or definition of the phrase "restraint of trade." Even if these learned judges were not quite successful in distinguishing the difference, at the common law, between a restraint of competition and a restraint of trade, it still remains true that for more than 13 years repeated decisions of the highest tribunal of the country had declared that every contract or combination which prevented free competition was a restraint of trade, and that, if the restraint directly affected commerce among the States, then the contract or combination was unlawful, under the first section of the act.

Inasmuch as the committee is of opinion that legislation should be so clear in its terms as not to admit of unlimited judicial discretion, it pauses here a moment to point out just what the range of discretion was under the decisions ending with the Northern Securities case. It is manifest that the inquiry that the court was then required to make in each case was this: Has the evidence established a restraint of trade; that is to say, has the evidence established a contract or combination which interfered with free competition?

There was some but not great latitude for difference of opinion upon such an inquiry, and the uncertainty in the application of the law was reduced to a minimum; nor would the uncertainty have been much increased if the inquiry had been as to an unreasonable interference with free competition, which would have been the inquiry had the common-law understanding been strictly adopted by the Supreme Court.

If the more recent construction of the statute were in harmony with the earlier decisions, further legislation might nevertheless be required; but it is unnecessary to make the inquiry. That question is purely academic, for the later rulings have completely reversed the former ones, in so far as the phase of the subject now being discussed is concerned.

On the 15th day of May, 1911, the case of the Standard Oil Co. v. The United States was passed upon by the Supreme Court. Chief Justice White (formerly Justice White) delivered the opinion and reiterated, as the conclusion of the court, the views that he had so forcibly urged as a dissenter 15 years before. It was not necessary for the court to deal with the question at all, inasmuch as it found the defendants guilty of a restraint of trade under any and every meaning of the term, but for the very purpose, the committee assumes, of advising the country that a new rule had been adopted, so that business might be guided by it, it was stated in the most emphatic way imaginable that the statute which declares that "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations is hereby declared to be illegal" means that a contract or combination in order to be illegal must cause an undue restraint of trade. The following quotations from the opinion will need no comment:

"That in view of the many new forms of contracts and combinations which were being evolved from existing economic conditions, it was deemed essential by an all-embracing enumeration to make sure that no form of contract or combination by which an undue restraint of interstate or foreign commerce was brought about could save such restraint from condemnation. The statute under this view evidenced the intent not to restrain the right to make and enforce contracts, whether resulting from combination or otherwise, which did not unduly restrain interstate or foreign commerce, but to protect that commerce from being restrained by methods, whether old or new, which would constitute an interference that is an undue restraint" (pp. 59, 60).

Again:

"In other words, having by the first section forbidden all means of monopolizing trade—that is, unduly restraining it by means of every contract, combination, etc.—the second section seeks, if possible, to make the prohibitions of the act all the more complete and perfect by embracing all attempts to reach the end prohibited by the first section" (p. 61).

That the Chief Justice intended to announce a rule at variance with the declarations of Justice Peckham and Justice Harlan in the Trans-Missouri Freight Association and Northern Securities cases is made clear in the following extracts:

"The question is pertinent and must be fully and frankly met, for if it be now deemed that the Freight Association case was mistakenly decided or too broadly stated, the doctrine which it announced should be either expressly overruled or limited. * * * And in order not in the slightest degree to be wanting in frankness, we say that in so far, however, as by separating the general language used in the opinion in the Freight Association and Joint Traffic cases from the context and the subject and parties with which the cases were concerned, it may be conceived that the referred to conflicts with the construction which we give the statute, they are necessarily now limited and qualified" (pp. 68, 69).

The learned Chief Justice contends that this rule of construction, which he repeatedly calls the "rule of reason," must be applied in order to prevent the entire overthrow of the statute.

It is one of the interesting things in our judicial history that so great had been the change in the personnel of the court that when the dissenting opinion of Justice White in 1896 became the opinion of the court in 1911 Justice Harlan was the only member remaining to protest against the reversal. He recorded his dissent in one of the most vigorous opinions that can be found in the reports, but for the purposes which the committee has in view it is not necessary to do more than to mention it.

Justice Harlan has passed away, and it may be assumed that the Supreme Court is now unanimously in favor of the doctrine so often and so ably promulgated by Chief Justice White. The rule was reasserted in the American Tobacco Co. case and has not since been questioned by any member of the court.

It is true that in the important opinion rendered in the suit of the United States v. The Union Pacific Railroad Co., Justice Day says:

"The act is intended to reach combinations and conspiracies which restrain freedom of action in interstate trade and commerce and unduly suppress or restrict the play of competition in the conduct thereof," citing as authority the Joint Traffic Association case.

It is true also that the court quotes, with apparent approval, the following extract from Mr. Justice Harlan in the Northern Securities case:

"In all the prior cases in this court the antitrust act has been considered as forbidding any combination which by its necessary operation destroys or restrains free competition among those engaged in interstate commerce; in other words, that to destroy or restrict free competition in interstate commerce was to restrain such commerce."

But thereafter the court says:

"In the recent discussion of the history of the meaning of the act in the Standard Oil Co. and Tobacco Co. cases this court declared that the statute should be given a reasonable construction with a view to reaching those undue restraints of interstate trade which are intended to be prohibited and punished."

The fair conclusion is that it is now the settled doctrine of the Supreme Court that only undue or unreasonable restraints of trade are made unlawful by the antitrust act, and that in each instance it is for the court to determine whether the established restraint of trade is a due restraint or an undue restraint.

Whatever may be the opinion of the several members of the committee with respect to the soundness of the rule as now established, the committee as a whole accepts it as the present law of the land. It is profoundly convinced that, in view of the rule and its necessary effect upon the business of the country, the inherent rights of the people, and upon the execution of the statute, it has become imperative to enact additional legislation.

The committee has full confidence in the integrity, intelligence, and patriotism of the Supreme Court of the United States, but it is unwilling to repose in that court, or any other court, the vast and undefined power which it must exercise in the administration of the statute under the rule which it has promulgated. It substitutes the court in the place of Congress, for whenever the rule is invoked the court does not administer the law, but makes the law. If it continues in force, the Federal courts will, so far as restraint of trade is concerned, make a common law for the United States just as the English courts have made a common law for England.

The people of this country will not permit the courts to declare a policy for them with respect to this subject. If we do not promptly exercise our legislative power, the courts will suffer immeasurable injury in the loss of that respect and confidence so essential to their usefulness. It is inconceivable that in a country governed by a written Constitution and statute law the courts can be permitted to test each restraint of trade by the economic standard which the individual members of the court may happen to approve. If we do not speedily prescribe in so far as we can a legislative rule by which to measure the forms of contract and combination in restraint of trade with which we are familiar or which we can anticipate, we cease to be a Government of law and become a Government of men, and, moreover, of a very few men, and they appointed by the President.

It may be that the Supreme Court will be so enlightened and so alert that its opinion respecting what is due and what is undue restraint of trade will be in harmony with an awakened public conscience and a disinterested public judgment, but to fashion our conduct upon that hypothesis is to repudiate the fundamental principles of representative government.

When the commercial development of the country is considered, when the forms of industrial activity are taken into account, it must be admitted by every student of affairs that the policy of the Government with respect to restraints of trade and commerce should remain a judicial question in those cases only in which Congress can not prescribe a definite rule.

In order to look at the subject in the light of illustration, it is suggested that there will presently come before the courts the combination centered in the United States Steel Corporation. In the end nine justices of the Supreme Court will be asked to say whether the restraint of trade brought about through this combination is a due or an undue restraint, and the answer which each justice makes to that question will depend upon his individual opinion as an economist or sociologist, the conclusion of the court being in substance an act of legislation passed by the judicial branch of the Government to fit a particular case.

Further, it is believed by many thoughtful people that a substantial identity in the managing boards of competing corporations constitutes a restraint of trade and is harmful to the public interest. If such a case were brought before the court, what would be the "rule of reason?" What guide would the court have in determining whether such community of directors or managers was a due or an undue restraint of trade?

Again, suppose there were a dozen establishments in a given field of production competing with each other and six of them were to consolidate, employing half of all the capital and advancing the consolidated enterprise to a dominating position in the trade, where would the judge go for light in determining whether the restraint of trade was due or undue? These illustrations might be indefinitely extended, but it would serve no useful purpose to multiply them.

The committee does not intend in this report to indicate the terms of the act or acts that should be passed to supply the court with such legislative tests and standards as will limit the scope of judicial discretion. To do so would be to report upon the bills now before it, and that the committee is not prepared to do. It is prepared however, to say that Congress should, in as far as is possible, specifically prescribe certain conditions upon which persons and corporations shall be permitted to engage in commerce among the States and with foreign nations. These conditions should be of a character that will tend to preserve reasonable competition, or substantially competitive conditions, and to compel independence in both organization and conduct. They should be so clear that the business world can understand them and go confidently forward, guided by them.

Not only should such conditions be imposed upon those who are engaged or propose to engage in commerce among the States, but our legislation should further recite certain known forms of combination and declare them to be unlawful because in restrain of trade. With respect to other forms, we should declare that if restraint is established the burden of proof is upon the persons or corporations involved to show that the restraint is reasonable.

These suggestions are not made solely for the better protection of that general body of our citizens, commonly called the people, who must deal with, buy from, and sell to the combinations sought to be regulated, but are made also in the interest of safety and certainty for the men who compose what is ordinarily known as the business community.

There are many forms of combination, and many practices in business which have been so unequivocally condemned by the Supreme Court that as to them and their like the statute is so clear that no person can be in any doubt respecting what is lawful and what is unlawful; but as the statute is now construed there are many forms of organization, and many other practices that seriously interfere with competition, and are plainly opposed to the public welfare, concerning which it is impossible to predict with any certainty whether they will be held to be due or undue restraints of trade.

The committee does not conceal the difficulty of reaching an agreement concerning the details of the legislation just outlined, but it has no hesitation in reporting that legislation of the general character pointed out is both wise and necessary.

The committee further reports that if the additional legislation, the general scope of which has been pointed out, is enacted it will be very desirable to accompany such legislation with a measure establishing a commission for the better administration of the law and to aid in its enforcement. It may be fairly said that there is need of such a commission, even though the present statute is not supplemented in any manner; but it is apparent that if the new legislation is enacted the need of a commission will become more imperative.

There are three general fields in which the commission could work to the great advantage both of the people for whose protection the law exists and the people against whom it is directed.

First. If the Bureau of Corporations were converted into an independent commission composed of trained, skillful men, and clothed with adequate authority, there could be gathered more complete and accurate knowledge of the organization, management, and practices of the corporations and associations engaged in national and international commerce than we now have. In saying this the committee does not mean to disparage the work of the Bureau of Corporations as hitherto carried on, but, valuable as the work has been, it is believed that a greater service could be rendered by a commission with a distinct organization with adequate appropriations and added authority. Moreover, it is clear that the constant inquiry into and investigation of interstate commerce in order to ascertain whether the law is being violated should be more closely connected with prosecutions for violations, when found to exist, than at the present time.

Second. When the conditions upon the fulfillment of which persons and corporations may engage in commerce among the States and with foreign nations are imposed, as the committee has heretofore recommended, there will be some of them upon which the Government must act with administrative promptness rather than with judicial deliberation and delay. For instance, suppose Congress were to declare, as the committee thinks it ought to declare, that no corporation should be permitted to engage in interstate or international commerce unless it be honestly capitalized, and that when anything but money is accepted for its stock that the value at which the property is so taken must be its fair, reasonable value. It seems clear that a corporation proposing to enter business should have an opportunity to come to some governmental tribunal and say, here is the property purposed to be taken for stock, and here is the price at which it is to be taken, and thereupon ask for approval or disapproval of the proposition. It would be most unjust in such a case to allow the corporation to go on for years and then be told that it must cease to do business because the value of the property was less than the par value of the stock issued for it.

And, again, suppose that 10 out of 20 manufacturing establishments heretofore in competition with each other desire to consolidate into one enterprise. There ought to be a way in which the men in such a venture could submit their plan to the Government and an inquiry made as to the legality of such a transaction, and if the Government was of the opinion that competitive conditions would not be substantially impaired there should be an approval, and in so far as the lawfulness of the exact thing proposed is concerned there should be a decision, and if favorable to the proposal there should be an end of that particular controversy for all time. Such results as these can be attained in no other way than through a commission which, though administrative in its character, would, in some instances, exercise quasi judicial functions. It is believed that through the intervention of such a body of men the legislative policy with respect to combinations and monopolies could be vastly more effectual than through the courts alone, which in most cases will take no cognizance of violations of the law for months or years after the violations occurred and when the difficulty of awarding reparation for the wrong is almost insurmountable.

The committee has not attempted to be comprehensive as to the usefulness of the commission in this field, and has made these suggestions only to indicate in the most general way the assistance that could be rendered in the enforcement of the law.

Third. One of the most serious problems in connection with suits brought under the antitrust act is to find the proper method of disintegrating combinations that have been adjudged unlawful. The dissolution of a corporation or a series of associated corporations must often involve the consideration of plans for reorganization in order that the property which has been unlawfully employed may thereafter be lawfully used in commerce. The courts are not fitted for the work of reconstruction, and whatever jurisdiction they now have, or that may hereafter be conferred upon them with respect to such matters, it can not be gainsaid that a commission the members of which are in close touch with business affairs, and who are intimately acquainted with the commercial situation, might be extremely helpful in the required readjustment.

Respectfully submitted.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. POMERENE.

With the report in general I am in accord. But there is one feature of it about which I desire to be more explicit, and that is the paragraph discussing the certainty of the provisions of the Sherman law as applicable to certain cases and its uncertainty as applicable to others.

I approve the view that—

"There are many forms of combination and many practices in business which have been so unequivocally condemned by the Supreme Court that as to them and their like the statute is so clear that no person can be in any doubt respecting what is lawful and what is unlawful."

There are other forms of organization and acts which seriously interfere with competition, such as interlocking directories, watering of stock, selling of merchandise in one locality at a less price than in another, and other practices which are so contrary to sound business principles and good morals that they can and should be specifically controlled or prohibited by statute. As to these, in the interest of certainty, there should be other and further legislation. But, whatever may be the additional legislation, there will be many other contracts, combinations, and practices in "undue and unreasonable restraint of trade," which it is impossible for Congress to define by statute, because any attempt to so define them will, in practice, be found to exclude many other contracts, combinations, and practices which are equally inimical to the public good. As to these we must always depend upon the sound wisdom and discretion of courts and juries for relief, just as in the past we have been obliged to trust to their judicial administration.

To illustrate: We know that legislatures and courts have constantly refused to define fraud because the multiplicity of acts and circumstances involved in human affairs make it impossible of definition.

The same may be said with equal truth as to what constitutes "undue or unreasonable restraint of trade."

It is said with a great deal of force that men are not always able to tell in advance whether certain acts are in "undue or unreasonable restraint of trade." But however difficult this may be, it is no reason why they should be left for decision to the selfishness of interested parties uncontrolled by judicial decision under the principles of the common law or under the broad provisions of the Sherman law.

In criminal cases it is often difficult to say in advance whether a given state of facts constitutes a reasonable doubt. But is that a reason why courts and juries should not attempt to say in a specific case whether there was, in fact, a reasonable doubt or not?

In negligence cases it is equally difficult to say whether a given state of facts constitutes contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff or reasonable care on the part of the defendant. But can this be urged as a reason for not leaving special cases to the judgment of the court and jury?

In my judgment, what is "undue or unreasonable restraint of trade" must, in many cases if not in most cases, be left largely for judicial determination, and sound judgment and good morals will be a sufficient guide for those who are actuated by a proper public spirit rather than by selfish motives.

While I believe there can be some additional legislation along the lines indicated, I am firmly of the opinion that the Sherman law is a clear and certain guide for reasonable men who desire to comply with the law and do not exert themselves to evade its provisions.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. TILLMAN.

The undersigned, after carefully considering the antitrust statute or Sherman law, agrees to the first proposition laid down by the committee contained on the second page of this report, and to that portion of the second proposition beginning with the words "it is neither necessary nor desirable at this time to provide for the organization under act of Congress of industrial corporations which propose to engage in commerce among the States and with foreign nations." It would be unwise for Congress to interfere by Federal corporation acts, and he believes it wiser to leave such things where they now are, to the States.

With the third proposition the undersigned is not now prepared to express concurrence, preferring to wait until the specific conditions and regulations contemplated are presented for decision.

He assents to the lucid and masterly exposition in the report of the vacillation of the Supreme Court of the United States, which has made the minority opinions of 15 years ago become the majority opinions now. That powerful tribunal has thus reversed the law on a most important question relative to crimes in connection with trusts and monopolies, and instead of a congressional statute we have judge-made law. These opinions were rendered in lawsuits of all sorts; and thus made by piecemeal, instead of properly explaining and defining the scope of the antitrust law, have made it a judicial question to be decided by the judges trying the case, whether a proven destruction of competition operating as a restraint of trade is to be prohibited and punished because contrary to law, or is to be allowed to go unwhipped of justice because the judges think it is not an "unreasonable" crime, but one which may be permitted.

The undersigned agrees that Congress should legislate so as to destroy any such preposterous and dangerous judicial discretion, because such discretion was never contemplated by the Constitution.

The undersigned is not now prepared to say that a new national commission should be established for the better administration of the antitrust law. He is inclined to believe that we have too many commissions now, composed largely of so-called "lame ducks," both Democrats and Republicans, who have been defeated at the polls and are given these places mainly as a compensation and means of support. He thinks Congress ought to perform its own functions rather than surrender them to commissions thus created by Executive appointment.

He does not assent to the particular language used on any point in the report of the committee, except where he has specifically so stated.

As the committee is not now ready to propose specific measures of legislation, he prefers to wait and to listen to the recommendations of the incoming President of the United States.

B. R. TILLMAN.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. GORE.

I concur in the main body of the report and in the conclusions arrived at, except as to the specific recommendation looking to the establishment of a commission. Upon that recommendation I reserve my judgment for the present. I could not yield my assent to this proposition without first considering both the principles and details of any measure proposing such a commission. My ultimate assent would depend upon the constitution and character of the commission and upon the extent and limitation of its powers and purposes. It may be possible that a commission could with propriety be vested with power to pass upon the form of a proposed organization, but no commission should have authority to grant indulgences as to methods, conduct, and operations of any such organization.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. NEWLANDS.

Whilst I agree with the general conclusion reached by Mr. CUMMINS in his report, I have not been able to study with sufficient care the decisions of the Supreme Court relating to the trusts to enable me to form an independent opinion as to his analysis of them. For years I have contended that if at the time the Sherman Act was passed (the date of its passage being almost contemporaneous with that of the Interstate-commerce act regarding the railroads) we had organized an interstate trade commission similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and with somewhat similar powers of investigation and correction, we would have prevented or remedied many of the abuses which have since grown up, and that we would have gradually evolved a system of commercial law, through administrative process, as complete as that which has been built up regarding our system of transportation.

I presented my views relating to this matter at the first hearing of this committee regarding the control of corporations on the 4th day of August, 1911, and on the 16th of November, 1911 (hearings, pp. 1 to 26, inclusive). I then discussed a bill for the organization of an interstate trade commission (Senate bill No. 2941), which was introduced by me on the 5th of July, 1911, and a substitute bill of the same number introduced by me August 21, 1911.

As a result of the additional light shed upon this subject by the hearings, I introduced in the Senate, on February 26, 1912, a bill (Senate bill 5485, 62d Cong., 2d sess.) entitled "A bill to create an interstate trade commission," etc.

Later on, as a result of subsequent consideration, this bill has been amended, and I present it with the alterations as a tentative proposal for criticism and suggestion. The bill as amended is annexed hereto.

Whilst I believe that the Sherman Antitrust Act should not be altered, I believe that it should be supplemented by such legislation as is shown to be necessary by the experience of the time. Such variety of view exists as to what this supplementary legislation shall be that I do not believe early legislation on this line is practicable. But I do believe that all can agree upon an interstate trade commission with powers of investigation and correction, and with the power to aid the courts in the administration of the Sherman Act and other supplementary legislation; and I believe that such a commission should be organized immediately, so that Congress can soon have the benefit of the recommendations which it will make as the result of its experience.

I shall not enter into any labored argument upon this question. I shall simply content myself with quoting from previous utterances in the Senate.

In the Senate, January 11, 1911:

"Mr. NEWLANDS. * * * The railroad commission bill furnishes a model for the action of Congress upon matters involving minute and scientific investigation. Had we followed the same method regarding trusts that we followed regarding railroads, we would have made much better progress in trust regulation. The antitrust act was passed 21 years ago, about the same time that the railroad commission was organized. The railroad question is practically settled; the settlement of the trust question has hardly been commenced. Had we submitted the administration of the antitrust act to an impartial quasi judicial tribunal similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission instead of to the Attorney General's office, with its shifting officials, its varying policies, its lack of tradition, record, and precedent, we would by this time have made gratifying progress in the regulation and control of trusts, through the quasi judicial investigations of a competent commission and through legislation based upon its recommendations. As it is, with the evasive and shifting incumbency and administration of the Attorney General's office, oftentimes purely political in character, we find that the trusts are more powerful to-day than when the antitrust act was passed, and that evils have grown up so interwoven with the general business of the country as to make men tremble at the consequence of their disruption."

In the Senate, May 16, 1911:

"Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, whilst I was addressing the Senate yesterday upon the importance of taking up immediately certain questions upon which public opinions has been formed, and crystallizing them into legislation, I referred, among others, to the great questions of the combinations of capital called trusts which have assumed of late years so powerful and menacing an aspect. * * *

"The Supreme Court yesterday acted upon this matter with reference to one of the great trusts in a decision which applies to them all, and as the result probably of the inertia and the inaction of Congress has taken upon itself what the dissenting member of this court, Mr. Justice Harlan, declared to be judicial legislation, and has written into the statute words which Congress never put there; and so to-day we have a decision upholding the antitrust act so far as it applies to unreasonable restraint of trade.

"The question, therefore, presents itself to us whether we are to permit in the future the administration regarding these great combinations to drift practically into the hands of the courts and subject the question as to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of any restraint upon trade imposed by these corporations now existing and to be brought into existence in the future to the varying judgments of different courts upon the facts and the law, or whether we will organize, as the servant of Congress, an administrative tribunal similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission, with powers of recommendation, with powers of condemnation, with powers of correction similar to those enjoyed by the Interstate Commerce Commission over interstate transportation.

"* * * What has been our experience regarding that branch of interstate commerce which covers transportation? Our experience has been that 20 years ago, just about the time the antitrust act was passed, Congress passed the interstate-commerce act, creating a commission as its servant to attend to its duties under rules prescribed by Congress. The regulation of interstate commerce belonged to Congress. Congress wisely saw that it could not undertake that regulation in all its details; that it could not pass rate bills which would be satisfactory to every section of the country; that it could not reduce rates that were claimed to be excessive and increase rates that were claimed to be too low; that it could not correct the varying abuses which creep into the administration of every great enterprise. Therefore it created this commission as its servant, to carry out its will under rules established by it.

"The history of the last 23 years proves the wisdom of our action. By a gradual process of evolution this commission, as the result of gradual improvements in legislation and as the result of constantly increasing powers recommended by it and affirmed by Congress, has become a tribunal second in importance only to the Supreme Court of the land. It has made transportation a science. It has studied all the intricate questions relating to it, and in a recent illuminating decision has formulated a great state paper that has impressed the country and the world with its wisdom.

"Now, contrast that action with other action taken by Congress regarding the trusts. It would have been possible 23 years ago, when the interstate-commerce act was passed, with reference to interstate trade, to have established an industrial or trade commission or board similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission with reference to transportation. If we had done so and had put upon that commission the same class of men who have been appointed upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, we would have had the constant corrective power of that commission applied both to the existing trade corporations and to the trade corporation afterwards created. Many abuses would have been prevented. Many abuses would have been corrected. As a result of the constant study and inquiry of a competent board engaged in this work as a specialization recommendations would have been made to Congress which would have been accepted, as were those recommendations made with reference to interstate transportation, and a great body of administrative law would have been built up and combinations of capital would have been effected without the abuses which have existed during the past 23 years * * *."

In the Senate, June 22, 1911:

"Mr. NEWLANDS. What is the second one which I suggested? I suggested legislation providing, in connection with the Bureau of Corporations, for a board of interstate trade, with powers of examination, correction, and recommendation with regard to interstate trade similar to those conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission regarding interstate transportation. This resolution was offered before the recent decision of the Supreme Court regarding the trusts, and I then declared that, whatever might be the decision of that court, the creation of such a commission was essential. Interstate trade is just as much a part of interstate commerce as interstate transportation. The abuses of interstate trade have become just as great as the abuses of interstate transportation in the past have been. Obviously the teachings of experience lead us to the organization of a commission or board similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission, with a view of taking hold of the great combinations of capital and making them obedient to the law, giving such a commission powers of examination, recommendation, and condemnation similar to those enjoyed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"Since that decision the trust managers themselves have seen a great light, and in public examinations have stated that in their judgment the time has come for as complete regulation of corporations engaged in interstate trade as of corporations engaged in interstate transportation. Whether that regulation will ever extend so far as the regulation of the price itself is a matter to be determined in the future, for Congress will be called upon to decide how great these corporations shall be, what the extent of their capital shall be, what number of plants they shall own, and what shall be the extent of their operations. If they conclude to maintain the principle of competition, even though it leads to destruction, there will then, of course, be no necessity of regulating prices. But if they recognize the principle of helpful cooperation instead of destructive competition, then it will be necessary for them in extreme cases to face the question of the regulation of prices just as the prices of any public utility are regulated.

"I do not venture to express an opinion now as to what course should be pursued with reference to this great question, but it is time that the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate were entering upon an inquiry of the most important question in economics that has engaged the attention of the country since the railroad question was first presented to it."

Quotation from Mr. NEWLANDS'S statement before the committee on the 15th day of November, 1911 (hearings, p. 25):

"I may later on have something further to lay before this committee regarding this bill; but I wish to state at present that since the bill was introduced there has been a wide discussion throughout the country upon two divergent lines of thought, one insisting upon absolutely free and unrestricted competition as the regulator of corporate business, and the other inclining toward allowing large combinations of capital and applying thereto Government supervision and direction as the prime regulator. It is difficult to say now which of these opposing tendencies should or will ultimately prevail. The bill which I have introduced is, in my judgment, adapted to this undeveloped situation. It will help us to determine which of these theories is the correct one; it will furnish to Congress and to the public the accurate and broad information on corporate conditions that is necessary to determine the line of further advance. It does not affect the operation or the enforcement of the Sherman law; its work of publicity and supervision will tend to promote fair competition and keep equally open to all the highways of commerce. On the other hand, it takes the situation as it is, recognizes that there is a large degree of combination already existing, and makes that condition a subject for supervision, study, and report to Congress. Its frankly tentative character and its moderation recommend it as a step upon which all can unite in doing what is imperatively needed for the present without prejudicing the future.

"I trust that the committee will see the wisdom, without waiting for the end of this investigation, of recommending this tentative measure, which will aid in the final solution of all the pressing questions relating to trade corporations."

APPENDIX.

The following is the Interstate Trade Commission bill as tentatively amended by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce:

[S. 5485, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

A bill to create an Interstate Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be referred to and cited as the Interstate Trade Commission act. Corporations a majority of whose voting securities is held or owned by any corporation subject to the terms of this act are referred to herein as subsidiaries of such holding or owning corporation.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby created a body to be known as the Interstate Trade Commission, which shall consist of three members, of whom no more than two shall belong to the same political party. The commission shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the terms of such commissioners so first appointed shall be three, six, and nine years, respectively, and shall be so designated by the President in making such appointments; and thereafter all the commissioners shall hold office for the term of nine years, and shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Vacancies shall be filled by like appointment and confirmation for the unexpired term. Each member of said commission shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year. The office of the commission shall be at Washington, in the District of Columbia, but the commission may hold meetings elsewhere when necessary and convenient.

SEC. 3. That the Bureau of Corporations is hereby transferred to and merged in said commission, and all of the powers, duties, records, papers, and funds belonging or pertaining to the Bureau of Corporations shall hereafter belong and pertain to the Interstate Trade Commission, and all the officers and employees of said bureau shall thereupon be officers and employees of the Interstate Trade Commission. The said commission shall also have a secretary, a chief clerk, and such clerks, inspectors, examiners, experts, messengers, and other assistants as from time to time may be necessary and as may be appropriated for by Congress.

SEC. 4. That all corporations engaged in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, excepting common carriers, shall from time to time furnish to the commission such information, statement, and records of their organization, business, financial condition, conduct, and management and the organization, business, financial condition, conduct, and management of their subsidiaries at such time, to such degree and extent, and in such form as may be prescribed by the commission; and the commission at all reasonable times, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall have complete access to all records, accounts, minutes, books, and papers of such corporations and their subsidiaries, including the records of any of their executive or other committees. Failure or neglect on the part of any corporation subject to this act, or of any of its subsidiaries, to comply with the terms of this section within such time after written demand shall have been made upon such corporation by the commission requiring such compliance, as shall be fixed by the commission, shall constitute a misdemeanor, and upon conviction such corporation shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 for every day of such failure or neglect.

SEC. 5. The information so obtained shall be public records, and the commission shall from time to time make public such information in such form and to such extent as it may deem necessary.

SEC. 6. That the district courts of the United States, upon the application of the commission alleging a failure to comply with any order of the commission or alleging a failure to comply with or a violation of any of the provisions of this act by any corporation subject thereto, shall have jurisdiction to issue a writ or writs of mandamus or injunction or other order enforcing such order of the commission or commanding such corporation, its officers and employees, to comply with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. That for the purposes of this act the commission shall have the power to require by subpœna the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, contracts, agreements, documents, or other things of every kind and nature whatsoever relating to any matter under investigation by the commission. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing, and in case of disobedience to a subpœna the commission, or any party to a proceeding before the commission, may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section.

And any of the circuit courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any corporation subject to the provisions of this act, or other person, issue an order requiring such corporation, or other person, to appear before said commission (and produce books, documents, and papers, if so ordered) and give evidence touching the matter in question, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying.

The tetimony of any witness may be taken at the instance of a party in any proceeding or investigation pending before the commission by deposition at any time after the inquiry is instituted. The commission may also order testimony to be taken by deposition in any proceeding or investigation pending before it at any stage of such proceeding or investigation. Such deposition may be taken before any person authorized so to do by the commission and who has power to administer oaths.

Any person may be compelled to appear and depose, and to produce documentary evidence, in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce documentary evidence before the commission as hereinbefore provided. Such testimony shall be reduced to writing.

Witnesses whose testimony is taken under the provisions of this act shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like service in the courts of the United States.

No person shall be excused from attending and testifying, or from producing books, papers, documents, or other things before this commission or in obedience to the subpœna of the commission whether such subpœna be signed or issued by one or more of the commissioners on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to criminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. But no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify under oath or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before said commission in obedience to a subpœna issued by it in a proceeding instituted upon its own initiative: Provided, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying. The purpose of this provision is to give immunity only to natural persons who under oath testify in response to a subpœna of the commission in an inquiry instituted by the commission.

SEC. 8. That the said commission shall, on or before the 1st day of January in each year, make a report, which shall be transmitted to Congress. This report shall contain such information and data collected by the commission as it may deem of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of commerce, together with such recommendations as to additional legislation relating thereto as the commission may deem necessary.

SEC. 9. That any person willfully making or furnishing to said commission any statement, return, or record required by this act, when knowing such statement, return, or record to be false in any material particular, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 10. That in case a final decree shall be issued against any corporation under the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, or under sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 27, 1894, the court entering such decree may, in its discretion, refer to the commission its decree, with instructions to take evidence, consider such facts, and report to the court the findings as to method of dissolution or reorganization as the commission shall consider best fitted to carry out such decree; if a reorganization takes place under a decree, the commission shall inform itself respecting the reorganization, and if it is of the opinion that it is not in harmony with the decree it shall, through counsel, inform the court for such action as the court may take.

SEC. 11. That the said commission may at any time, upon complaint of any person or corporation, or upon its own initiative, or upon the request of the Attorney General, or of the corporation affected, investigate any corporation subject to the provisions of this act for the purpose of determining whether such corporation has been guilty of a violation of the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, or under sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of an "Act to reduce taxation," etc., which became a law August 27, 1894, or of any of the provisions of this act, and may hold such hearings and take such evidence as it may deem necessary; and in case the commission shall find that such corporation has been guilty of a violation of the provisions of said acts or of this act it shall make a finding, stating the facts, and prescribing the acts, transactions, and readjustments necessary in order that said corporation may thereafter comply with the terms of said acts and of this act, and shall transmit a copy of the said finding in full to such corporation. If within 60 days after transmitting said finding, or such extension thereof as shall be given by the commission, the corporation shall not have complied with the terms of the finding and shall not have performed the acts prescribed as necessary to make it comply with the said acts or with this act, the commission shall report the fact of noncompliance to the Attorney General, together with a copy of such finding, for his action under the said acts or of this act. But the commission may, if it deems it proper, report the facts to the Attorney General without calling upon such corporation for compliance with said acts or with this act.

Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to prevent or interfere with the Attorney General in enforcing the provisions of the act to protect commerce, etc., approved July 2, 1890.

MINORITY VIEWS.

The undersigned members of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce are unable to agree to the report of the majority of the committee on Senate resolution 98, as to "what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to the creation and control of corporations engaged in interstate commerce and what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to persons or firms engaged in interstate commerce."

While certain features of the report are commendable, there are several conclusions therein which do not accord with our views, and therefore we are prevented from approving the report as a whole.

W. M. CRANE.
FRANK B. BRANDEGEE.
GEORGE T. OLIVER.
HENRY F. LIPPITT.

JENNIE M. ALDRICH.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 469, submitted by Mr. BURNHAM on the 20th instant, reported favorably thereon, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Jennie M. Aldrich, widow of L. W. Aldrich, late a messenger of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

GERTRUDE WILSON.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 471, submitted by Mr. CRANE on the 21st instant, reported favorably thereon, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Gertrude Wilson, widow of Washington Wilson, late a laborer of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

PROPOSED FINANCIAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 477, submitted by Mr. PENROSE on the 25th instant, reported favorably thereon, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to make investigations into internal-revenue, customs, currency, and coinage matters, and to compile and prepare statistics and documents relating thereto as directed from time to time by the Senate and as may be necessary, and to report from time to time to the Senate the result thereof; and for this purpose they are authorized to sit, by subcommittee or otherwise, during the recess or sessions of the Senate during the Sixty-third Congress at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary, the expense of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and the committee is authorized to order such printing and binding as may be necessary for its use.

CHARLES H. ARBUCKLE AND BESSIE VON HARTEN.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 453, submitted by Mr. BRISTOW on the 6th instant, reported favorably thereon, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Charles H. Arbuckle, who served as clerk to the Hon. Kirtland I. Perky, Senator from Idaho, from January 25 to February 6, 1913, the sum of $66.67, being at the rate of compensation now paid to clerks to Senators; and to Bessie Von Harten, who served as stenographer to Senator Perky for the same period, the sum of $40, being at the rate of compensation now paid to stenographers to Senators.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE submitted an amendment proposing to repeal so much of the act of June 30, 1913, as relates to additional appointments as cadets or cadet engineers in the Revenue-Cutter Service, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. BURTON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for salaries and expenses of the International Waterways Commission, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,000 to pay Emma Morris, widow of Frank H. Morris, late Auditor of the Treasury for the War Department, who lost his life on December 22, 1900, while in the discharge of his official duties in the Winder Building, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 toward the construction of a graving dry dock to connect the Delaware River and Reserve Basin, Philadelphia, Pa., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $175,000 for the extension to the depot of supplies, United States Marine Corps, Philadelphia, Pa., including the purchase of site, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $300,000 for the construction or purchase of a testing or wrecking pontoon for submarines, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURTON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,033.94 to pay balance for rent of temporary quarters at Cleveland, Ohio, for the accommodation of Government officials from October 31 to December 22, 1910, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—MANEUVER GROUND, TULLAHOMA, TENN.

On motion of Mr. LEA, it was—

Ordered, That permission be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the original manuscript of Senate Report No. 1303, relating to permanent maneuver ground, Tullahoma, Tenn.

LISTS OF CLAIMS AND JUDGMENTS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a resolution calling for the judgments of the local courts, that we may have them in season for the deficiency bill which is about to be written up. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 478) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to transmit to the Senate the following schedule and lists of claims and judgments requiring appropriations by Congress not heretofore reported to Congress at the present session, namely:

First. Schedule of claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874.

Second. List of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims against the United States.

Third. List of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants and against the United States under the act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations, approved March 3, 1891.

Fourth. List of judgments rendered against the United States by the circuit and district courts of the United States under the act to provide for bringing suits against the Government of the United States, approved March 3, 1887.

DEPOSIT OF PUBLIC MONEYS IN NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 479), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report the list of securities which he has authorized to be accepted as security for Government deposits in national bank depositaries and what has actually been accepted as such security; and further, that he be directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all letters, telegrams, or other communications to or from Government officials relating to the recent Treasury Circular No. 5.

IMPORTATION OF TEAS.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 480), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence, rulings, reports, and orders to or from officials of the Treasury Department during the years 1911 and 1912 relative to the importation into this country of green teas or colored teas and all documents and papers relating thereto in the possession of or under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, together with a statement showing the importation of green teas into this country during the years 1911 and 1912, by whom imported, and the amount so imported.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28730) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. BURNHAM, and Mr. SHIVELY conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 28812. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 28858. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913 and for prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

H. J. Res. 398. Joint resolution to direct and empower the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to revoke licenses under certain conditions, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

COURT LIBRARIES FOR NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on the Judiciary. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4718) to authorize the use of certain unclaimed moneys now in the registry of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio for the improvement of the libraries of the United States courts for said district, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 1325) thereon.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BURNHAM. I am not aware as to what this particular report is, but I hope the Senator will not insist upon its present consideration.

Mr. POMERENE. It is not a matter that there will be any discussion about.

Mr. BURNHAM. We have been trying to avoid all matters of that kind.

Mr. POMERENE. Then I suggest that the bill lie on the table for the time being.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE LOUDENSLAGER.

Mr. BRIGGS. I desire to give notice that on March 1 I shall ask the Senate to consider resolutions commemorative of the life and public character of Hon. HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of New Jersey.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNHAM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 28283, the agricultural appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, a word upon that first. We ought to have an understanding as to what we are going to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable except by unanimous consent.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent. I wish to know if we can not at some time take up the calendar, when we can dispose of a few pension bills in time to get them over to the House. They ought to be passed. It is proposed that we shall proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill rather out of order, as the morning business has not been called. We ought properly to take up the calendar during the morning hour. I fear if we pass over even another day without passing the Senate bills it will be impossible to get them through the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suggest that the Senator ask unanimous consent for their consideration.

Mr. McCUMBER. I intended to do that, but the Senator from New Hampshire made a motion to take up the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. BURNHAM. I would be very glad to join the Senator, but this bill has been delayed somewhat. It is one of the most important of our appropriation bills, and I feel that we ought to proceed now with its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 28283) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. BURNHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, under the head of "Department of Agriculture," on page 1, line 10, before the word "Secretary," to insert "There shall be a"; on page 2, line 1, after the word "Agriculture," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$6,000"; in line 2, after the words "chief clerk," to strike out "$2,000," and insert "$3,000, and $500 additional as custodian of buildings"; in line 8, after the word "clerk," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,250"; in line 10, after the word "each," to insert "six law clerks, at $2,250 each"; in line 11, before the word "law," to strike out "ten" and insert "eight"; in the same line, after the word "each" to strike out "eight" and insert "four"; in line 14, before the word "clerks," to strike out "two" and insert "three"; in line 15, before the word "clerks," to strike out "ten" and insert "nine," and in line 19, after the word "engineer," to strike out "who shall be captain of the watch," so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 15, after the word "Secretary" to strike out "$301,120" and insert "$305,070," so as to read:

Total for Office of the Secretary, $305,070.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Weather Bureau," on page 3, line 18, before the words "chief of bureau," to strike out "One" and insert "There shall be one"; in the same line, after the words "chief of bureau," to strike out "$4,500" and insert "$6,000"; in line 21, before the words "chiefs of division," to strike out "two" and insert "three," and in the same line, before the word "clerks," to strike out "eight" and insert "seven," so as to read:

Salaries, Weather Bureau: There shall be one chief of bureau, $6,000; one assistant chief of bureau, $3,250; one chief clerk and executive assistant, $3,000; one chief of printing division, $2,500; three chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; seven clerks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for salaries, Weather Bureau, on page 4, line 15, before the word "messengers," to strike out "27" and insert "37," and in line 20, after the words "in all," to strike out "$323,260" and insert "$329,460," so as to read:

Six messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $660 each; 37 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $600 each; 87 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $480 each; 5 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $450 each; 27 messenger boys, at $360 each; 1 charwoman, $360; 3 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $329,460.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 24, after the word "employees," to strike out "$585,000" and insert "$590,500," so as to read:

For the employment of professors of meteorology, inspectors, district forecasters, local forecasters, section directors, research observers, observers, assistant observers, operators, skilled mechanics, repairmen, station agents, messengers, messenger boys, laborers, and other necessary employees, $590,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 3, after the word "expenses" to strike out "$105,500" and insert "$106,500," so as to read:

For fuel, gas, electricity, freight and express charges, furniture, stationery, and all other necessary supplies and miscellaneous expenses, $106,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 5, after the word "thereto," to strike out "$42,500" and insert "$43,500," so as to read:

For instruments, shelters, apparatus, storm-warning towers, and repairs thereto, $43,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 10, after the word "grounds," to strike out "$99,000" and insert "$100,000," so as to read:

For rent of offices and repairs and improvements to buildings now completed and located outside of the District of Columbia, and care and preservation of grounds, including construction of necessary outbuildings and sidewalks on public streets abutting Weather Bureau grounds, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 12, to insert:

That from and after July 1, 1913, it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to prepare, sell, barter, or exchange in the District of Columbia, or in the Territories, or in any place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or to ship or deliver for shipment from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, any worthless, contaminated, dangerous, or harmful virus, serum, toxin, or analogous product intended for use in the treatment of domestic animals, and no person, firm, or corporation shall prepare, sell, barter, exchange, or ship as aforesaid any virus, serum, toxin, or analogous product manufactured within the United States and intended for use in the treatment of domestic animals, unless and until the said virus, serum, toxin, or analogous product shall have been prepared, under and in compliance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, at an establishment holding an unsuspended and unrevoked license issued by the Secretary of Agriculture as hereinafter authorized. That the importation into the United States, without a permit from the Secretary of Agriculture, of any virus, serum, toxin, or analogous product for use in the treatment of domestic animals, and the importation of any worthless, contaminated, dangerous, or harmful virus, serum, toxin, or analogous product for use in the treatment of domestic animals, are hereby prohibited. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to cause the Bureau of Animal Industry to examine and inspect all viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products, for use in the treatment of domestic animals, which are being imported or offered for importation into the United States, to determine whether such viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products are worthless, contaminated, dangerous, or harmful, and if it shall appear that any such virus, serum, toxin, or analogous product, for use in the treatment of domestic animals, is worthless, contaminated, dangerous, or harmful, the same shall be denied entry and shall be destroyed or returned at the expense of the owner or importer. That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and hereby is, authorized to make and promulgate from time to time such rules and regulations as may be necessary to prevent the preparation, sale, barter, exchange, or shipment as aforesaid of any worthless, contaminated, dangerous, or harmful virus, serum, toxin, or analogous product for use in the treatment of domestic animals, and to issue, suspend, and revoke licenses for the maintenance of establishments for the preparation of viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products, for use in the treatment of domestic animals, intended for sale, barter, exchange, or shipment as aforesaid. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to issue permits for the importation into the United States of viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products, for use in the treatment of domestic animals, which are not worthless, contaminated, dangerous, or harmful. All licenses issued under authority of this act to establishments where such viruses, serums, toxins, or analogous products are prepared for sale, barter, exchange, or shipment as aforesaid, shall be issued on condition that the licensee shall permit the inspection of such establishments and of such products and their preparation; and the Secretary of Agriculture may suspend or revoke any permit or license issued under authority of this act, after opportunity for hearing has been granted the licensee or importer, when the Secretary of Agriculture is satisfied that such license or permit is being used to facilitate or affect the preparation, sale, barter, exchange, or shipment as aforesaid, or the importation into the United States of any worthless, contaminated, dangerous, or harmful virus, serum, toxin, or analogous product for use in the treatment of domestic animals. That any officer, agent, or employee of the Department of Agriculture duly authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose may, at any hour during the daytime or nighttime, enter and inspect any establishment licensed under this act where any virus, serum, toxin, or analogous product for use in the treatment of domestic animals is prepared for sale, barter, exchange, or shipment as aforesaid. That any person, firm, or corporation who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the purposes and objects of this act, the sum of $25,000, which appropriation shall become available on July 1, 1913, and may be expended at any time before July 1, 1914.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, referring to items preceding the one now reached, the appropriation of $375,000, "to investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice, and for farm demonstration work," I offered an amendment, or, rather, had one referred to the committee, increasing the appropriation to $600,000. I did that because I found out by investigation at the department that the requests for work of this character and for agents to illustrate detailed farm management were far more than the department with the present appropriation were able to comply with. I was informed at the department that they were taking care of about 150 requests of this character, and that about 270 had come in. I was led to look into this matter because of the requests from my State, especially in the first section, for cooperation with the local authorities by the Agriculture Department, and the department informed me that they were unable to comply with these requests. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill explain why this appropriation was not increased somewhat.

Mr. BURNHAM. The amendment suggested in the statement of the Senator from Washington was very carefully considered by the committee. The amount in the item, $375,000, corresponds to the same amount in the next item—the appropriation of $375,000 for farmers' cooperative demonstration and for the study and demonstration of the best methods of meeting the ravages of the cotton-boll weevil. It was thought that the amount was sufficient for the department. The committee understood from the department that the appropriation in the two items is substantially all that could be taken care of.

I wish to call attention to the fact that last year the appropriation was $300,000 for improved farm management and the committee increased that $75,000, making it $375,000. These two items are considered together and have a corresponding purpose. The amount has been increased very largely in the last two or three years for this particular character of appropriation, and the committee thought that the amount allowed here was all that the department could handle.

Mr. JONES. I should like to ask the Senator why these two items occur separately? Why are they not put in the same item—because I would judge by the language that the work is very much the same?

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, that question has come to the committee, and inquiry has been made of the department. The committee understands from the department that while the work corresponds in a degree, yet, with the organization, the department has divided up the work in such a way that it is not convenient to make the change.

Mr. JONES. Is it not a fact that a very large proportion of the second item is used in connection with the boll weevil work?

Mr. BURNHAM. I think that in the beginning the appropriations for meeting the ravages of the cotton boll weevil were largely devoted to the cotton boll weevil, but since then the demonstration work has broadened out in the South until it has come to embrace considerably more than the cotton boll weevil.

Mr. JONES. Is it not a fact that the appropriation is largely used in States that are affected by the boll weevil or that are likely to be affected by it?

Mr. BURNHAM. That may be so; but though the work has been carried on against the boll weevil, considerable sums have been expended outside of those States.

Mr. JONES. My understanding has been that that amount has been almost, if not exclusively, used in those States and sections, so that none of it is available for general farm demonstration work throughout the different sections of the country.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, while I have an impression that quite a large part of it has been devoted to stay the ravages of the cotton-boll weevil, yet a substantial part has been devoted to other purposes; but how it has been divided I can not say.

Mr. JONES. I have no doubt that the money is well used, and I do not object; but I should like to have a larger amount of money so that general farm-demonstration work in the different States of the Union can be carried on. I know the demands upon the committee; I know the committee has considered this matter very carefully, and that they have probably given all they felt they ought to give in this bill. I am not complaining at the action of the committee, and I am not going to offer an amendment to increase this amount, but I should like to see a more liberal appropriation made that could be used, and would be used, throughout the States generally for the purpose of improving farm methods, because I do not believe that we can expend money in any manner better than in improving farm methods and the methods of farm management.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the chairman will allow me, I should like also to say to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that we have pending a bill which provides for large appropriations to be handled through the local authorities—the State colleges of agriculture—for demonstration work.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator from Georgia if there is any probability of getting that bill out of the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; we are going to have another meeting to-day, and are going to try to do so; but, if we do not, we will have to come back to the Senate and lay the situation before it. The matter would still be in the hands of the Senate. I am seeking to urge upon the House conferees some concessions that they can put through, and I still have a hope that we may obtain them. Whether we do or not, however, I think we may confidently rely in the very near future upon the passage of a bill which will provide for a large appropriation, to be duplicated by the States, to be used in each one of the States, through the State colleges of agriculture, for farm-demonstration work. I hope that we may pass it at this session; but, if we do not, the matter will certainly come up afterwards at the next session. The House is committed to it, and I think the Senate is also. So I feel sure that the distribution will take place and that the work which the Senator from Washington advocates will proceed upon even a much broader plan than it has in the past. I think he can confidently rely upon that, and I most earnestly advocate it. I believe the Department of Agriculture thought we were giving them all that they, from a central organization, could successfully handle with their present system.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, I desire to say that the committee felt like making as large an appropriation as they would be justified in making, but the increase of $75,000 in this item and the increase of a large amount in the next item was all that they felt ought to be made at present. The department assured the committee that the amount allowed was all that they could reasonably care for at this time.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, with reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], I earnestly hope that the committee of conference will be able to get together on the measure to which he refers. I can see no reason why it should not do so. The Senate and the House both concur in a certain portion of that bill, and it seems to me that, with reasonable concessions, we ought to get a good measure and pass it at this session.

I find this situation: Several localities in my State would like to have somebody to work with them in the matter provided for in the first paragraph here, the adoption of improved methods of farm management, and so forth. They have made their application to the department, but the department has said that, with the work in hand and the present appropriations, it could not comply with those requests. Those localities are ready to put up money practically to pay the salary of the man whom the department will furnish, if the department will furnish the man. We ought to be able to do that. Furthermore, those localities ought not be required to pay all of this amount. That was the reason I had urged that this appropriation should be increased. Now, it appears that a considerable increase has been made over last year. I know the committee has done the best it could and the best that it felt that it ought to do, and I am not going to urge a further increase; but I do hope that, with the increase made, the Agricultural Department will find it possible to meet some of the requests, at any rate.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 23, line 12, after "$92,000," to strike out "Provided, That $5,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be set aside and used in the investigation and improvement of the pecan industry," so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. What page are we on?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Page 71, line 5.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to go back to page 41. I have been absent.

In lines 16 to 20, page 41, I see a lump-sum appropriation. I am opposed to these lump-sum appropriations, and I am opposing them on all bills. I want to give an example of what occurred here the other day on the Indian appropriation bill. I am on the Appropriations Committee, and we there provide for all the officers, with their salaries. We have ascertained the fact that these lump-sum appropriations slip into appropriation bills, and the departments create their own officers and pay them big salaries, when we have thoroughly investigated every department and have said what officers are needed, and have fixed their salaries. After we have done that, other appropriations of lump sums are made, and additional officers and additional salaries are created.

I am opposed to these lump-sum appropriations. We have kept them out of nearly every appropriation bill since we have ascertained these facts. We all know, here in the Senate, how this evil has grown up. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee how this $83,728 is expended.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from North Carolina was present when we began the reading of the bill. It is now being read for the purpose of considering amendments, the committee amendments being first considered. This is not a committee amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. If I am not in order, I will call the matter up again at a later time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendments are first in order. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 71, line 5, before the word "of," to strike out "Office" and insert "Bureau," and, in the same line, after the word "Roads," to strike out "$274,400" and insert "$322,080," so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 17, after the word "work," to strike out "$17,103,275" and insert "$17,796,580," so as to read:

Total, Department of Agriculture, for routine and ordinary work, $17,796,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Miscellaneous," on page 73, line 20, after "$40,000," to insert "of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available: Provided, That hereafter any class of nursery stock or of any other class of plants, fruits, vegetables, roots, bulbs, seeds, or other plant products of which the importation may be forbidden from any country or locality under the provisions of section 7 of the plant quarantine act approved August 20, 1912 (37 Stat., p. 315), may be imported for experimental or scientific purposes by the Department of Agriculture upon such conditions and under such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe," so as to read:

Enforcement of the plant quarantine act: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act of August 20, 1912, entitled "An act to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants and plant products; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts for plant diseases and insect pests; to permit and regulate the movement of fruits, plants, and vegetables therefrom, and for other purposes," in the city of Washington and elsewhere, including official traveling expenses, telegraph and telephone service, express and freight charges, and all other expenses, employing such assistants, clerks, and other persons as may be considered necessary for the purposes named, $40,000, of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available: Provided, That hereafter any class of nursery stock or of any other class of plants, fruits, vegetables, roots, bulbs, seeds, or other plant products of which the importation may be forbidden from any country or locality under the provisions of section 7 of the plant quarantine act approved August 20, 1912 (37 Stats., p. 315), may be imported for experimental or scientific purposes by the Department of Agriculture upon such conditions and under such regulations as the said Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 13, to strike out:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with the marketing and distributing of farm products, and for the employment of persons and means necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 19, to insert:

That nothing contained in the act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, approved June 26, 1912, shall be so construed as to prohibit the payment from the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture of expenses incidental to the delivery of lectures, the giving of instruction, or the acquiring of information at meetings by its employees on subjects relating to the work of the department authorized by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 5, to insert:

That hereafter section 7 of the act approved August 26, 1912 (37 Stats., p. 626), shall not apply to the payment, out of moneys appropriated or which may be hereafter appropriated in lump sum for the Department of Agriculture, for personal services of employees engaged in strictly scientific or technical work: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall be construed to authorize the transfer of any person employed at a specific salary and the payment of compensation from lump-sum appropriations at a rate greater than said specific salary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 16, to insert:

That on and after July 1, 1913, all publications issued by the Department of Agriculture shall be distributed under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, and the salaries or compensations of persons engaged in addressing, wrapping, mailing, or otherwise dispatching such publications, and necessary expenses for materials and supplies to be used in the work, shall be paid out of the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture. And the Public Printer shall return to the Department of Agriculture the machines, equipment, and unused materials, if any, transferred to the Government Printing Office in compliance with section 8 of the act of August 23, 1912 (37 Stat., p. 414).

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill the object of this provision and why it is inserted.

Mr. BURNHAM. It was strongly recommended by the department. The committee understood that it was greatly for the convenience of those who are seeking bulletins and other information from the department; in other words, that the department could carry on the correspondence—the very large correspondence, extending into millions of letters, I understand—better than a department not familiar with the work of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. SMOOT. We have been in the past trying to consolidate this class of work, and this now seems to be distributing it. I have not had time to look up the question, and I am not going to object to the amendment now, but I thought it was a rather strange procedure.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 5, to insert:

And hereafter every officer or employee whose rate of compensation is specified herein shall receive compensation at that rate or such other rate as may be fixed from time to time by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 9, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with and make an exhibit at the next annual meeting of the International Dry Land Congress, to be held at Tulsa, Okla., during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, illustrative of the investigations, products, and processes relating to farming in the subhumid region of the United States, including labor and all expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $10,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 18, to insert:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the discretion of the President of the United States for all expenses of a National Institute of Agriculture, to consist of not less than five and not more than ten members, in addition to the Secretary of Agriculture, to be appointed by the President of the United States, who shall perform such duties and make such investigations and reports as he may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 2, to insert:

For cooperation with any State or group of States in the protection from fire of the forested watersheds of navigable streams, under the provisions of section 2 of the act of March 1, 1911, entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," $200,000, to be available until the end of the fiscal year 1915: Provided, That any and all unusued balance of the sum of $200,000 heretofore appropriated by the act of March 1, 1911, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the purposes mentioned in said section 2, remainng unexpended July 1, 1913, shall continue available until the end of the fiscal year 1915 for the purpose for which it was appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 20, to insert:

That section 9 of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat., p. 961), entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," be amended to read as follows:

"That such acquisition by the United States shall in no case be defeated because of located or defined rights of way, easements, and reservations, which, from their nature will, in the opinion of the National Forest Reservation Commission and the Secretary of Agriculture, in no manner interfere with the use of the lands so encumbered, for the purposes of the act: Provided, That such rights of way, easements, and reservations retained by the owner from whom the United States receives title, shall be subject to the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture for their occupation, use, operation, protection, and administration, and that such rules and regulations shall be expressed in and made part of the written instrument conveying title to the lands to the United States; and the use, occupation, and operation of such rights of way, easements, and reservations shall be under, subject to, and in obedience with the rules and regulations so expressed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, after line 20, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to demonstrate the practicability of suppressing and eradicating the swine disease commonly called hog cholera, and for this purpose to invite the cooperation of the several States, through such means and agencies as may be found practicable by the department and such States, to suppress and eradicate said disease; and for this purpose there is appropriated the sum of $50,000, including labor and all expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere.

Mr. POMERENE. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the amendment with reference to the suppression of hog cholera. An appropriation is provided for amounting to $50,000. I move to increase it to $100,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 79, line 2, strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000," so as to read:

And for this purpose there is appropriated the sum of $100,000, including labor and all expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere.

Mr. POMERENE. My reason for offering the amendment is because the sum proposed to be appropriated is wholly inadequate for the purpose. In the State of Iowa alone I am advised the loss by hog cholera last year was $15,000,000. In my State the loss was more than $2,000,000. I have these figures from the secretary of the board of agriculture of my State.

In my State in 1911 we appropriated the sum of $75,000 for the purpose of purchasing a farm and adopting methods for the manufacture of serum for the eradication of this disease. Under the guidance of Dr. Paul Fisher, State veterinarian, they have made wonderful progress toward perfecting a serum, but we have been handicapped by the want of proper financial aid.

This is not a matter that one State alone is interested in, but every State which is engaged in swine breeding. I do not think we could expend $100,000 of the people's money to better advantage than in helping to encourage ways and means of checking this disease. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Ohio that the committee took into very careful consideration this matter. They were aware of the very great danger and the great loss by the disease. Yet, relying largely upon what the Secretary of Agriculture said, the committee put the amount at $50,000. The Secretary said, in answer to a question:

I think $50,000 will be a comfortable sum to go in with and make the demonstration.

Mr. POMERENE. With all due respect to the Secretary's judgment, and I have a very high regard for it, I know what our own experience has been in our State. We appropriated in 1911 $75,000, and our State veterinarian was very much handicapped because of the lack of funds.

There are two things to be considered—first, the remedy; and, second, the method of its administration. It is necessary to educate veterinarians throughout the country in the proper use of this remedy. I have been informed that 50 per cent of the efficacy of the remedy depends on the administration.

It seems to me that $50,000 is a very small sum, considering the extent of this industry and its importance to the American people. I feel that this appropriation of $100,000 could be spent economically and to the advantage of the American people. I hope the amendment will be carried.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I do not pretend to know what amount is necessary for this purpose, but I do want to say that I think there will be no question about appropriating a sufficient amount in regard to this matter. It comes home to me from my own State.

In my State we lost hundreds of thousands of dollars last year by cholera, and I do think that the money could be appropriated in a manner, and should be appropriated in a manner, that would help the people, and appropriated in a sum that would be sufficient to eradicate the disease as far as possible.

I hope if the chairman feels that this is not a sufficient amount (and it does look to me that it is a very small amount), he will agree to this extra appropriation, because it is a matter of very great value to the people throughout the country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, precisely the same condition exists in my State. The Secretary of Agriculture happened to visit Columbia, the capital of the State, dur- the National Corn Exposition, and when addressing a body of farmers, the very first question addressed to him was that which the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Maryland propounded to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. His reply as to how much was needed was that they had ample facilities for supplying the veterinarians in the different States with information as to the source of supply of this antitoxin, and the method of administering it to the herd, but that the difficulty had been in getting the veterinarian and those in the several communities interested to apply to the proper source—that is, the Agriculture Department—for the information and to use it when the herd was diseased.

The showing before us was to the effect that $50,000 was ample to gather all the information and the sources of the supply of the antitoxin, and that all that then was necessary was for the State and the community to buy it; that the Government would furnish the instructors as to the method of administering it. That is the way it was explained by the Secretary of Agriculture in my State and by the Secretary of Agriculture to the committee; that it is not a question of more money; that it is a question of the community understanding the source of the supply and the method of administering it; and that $50,000 would be sufficient—all that he could use, in fact.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I make bold to state that in this country in the last year there was a loss of at least $50,000,000 to the farmers as a result of the ravages of hog cholera. In my own State I suppose the loss was at least $10,000,000. I know that in Illinois it has been as much; and in North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, and Missouri the loss has been large. The great prevalence of this disease among hogs has been such as to stimulate the manufacture and sale of a great many bogus hog-cholera serums that have been about as fatal a remedy as the disease itself.

I heartily indorse everything the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has said. It is necessary to have more money for the investigation and experiments and to have some intelligent information that will lead to an intelligent handling of the situation. It does seem to me that the Senator from Ohio is exactly right and that $50,000 is not enough for this important matter. The amount he suggests in his amendment is probably not sufficient, either.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I believe that $100,000 will do no more than $50,000 unless the Government shall not only provide the information as to the sources of this antitoxin but shall also provide the antitoxin. To attempt to do that, as well as to provide for administering it, would cost more than the Government could afford to put into it. As the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] suggests to me, it would fall somewhat into the class of feeding the hog.

I understand the Secretary of Agriculture has all the information needed as to the kind of antitoxin necessary and the methods of administering it, and it is then at the option of the several communities affected whether they will avail themselves of the information of the Agricultural Department as to the proper antitoxin and the method of administering it, and get from the department an expert who will show the local veterinarians or other individuals how to administer it. It is simply a question of availing themselves of what is now available. The Secretary says that $50,000 is as much as he can use advantageously at this time.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I was constrained, when this matter was first called to my attention, to ask that this appropriation be increased to $1,000,000. I think we have expended many millions of dollars within the last few days here that will serve a less purpose than the money that we can expend in this behalf. I did not offer that amendment because I appreciated the fact that our appropriations were growing extravagant, and I felt that perhaps there would be some opposition to it. But think of the situation to-day, with the millions of dollars invested in swine in every State of the Union, with the knowledge before us that in nearly every one of the States hogs are dying off by the thousands, and the farmers are losing the money that is invested in them. Yet we attempt to contract this appropriation so that we are giving but a little more than a thousand dollars for each State. It does seem to me that this is about as parsimonious a proposition as could well be presented to the Senate, considering the enormous interests which are involved. I hope that this amendment will carry.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, this is an item that was inserted in the bill at the request of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. He offered an amendment appropriating $100,000 for this purpose. The Secretary of Agriculture appeared before our committee and this matter was fully discussed. I was one of those who sympathized with the amendment which was offered by the Senator from Iowa, but the Secretary of Agriculture said we can not hope that the Government will undertake to treat each individual case, going to the farms and treating the diseased hog. That is a matter for the States themselves. All that we should ask the Government to do is to send an expert and take in four or five or more counties to make a demonstration, and show the people how to use this serum and show them how to eradicate this disease.

When the question was asked if $100,000 would be required, the Secretary seemed to think that $50,000 would be sufficient for the coming year. Personally I was very much in favor of making a larger appropriation; I was in favor of making it $100,000; but the committee acted upon the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] will be adopted. This is a work in which the Department of Agriculture should help. They have experts; they have studied the subject; and their information would be of great service to the farmers of the country, as has been said by the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. Every year in the farming States thousands of hogs die, and perhaps with information from the department they might be saved. I repeat, I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not yet heard any Senator answer the statement of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. He has stated that the appropriation is all that can be used; that all information necessary has been collected by the department; but that what is lacking is interest in the matter to be taken by the people of the States.

If that be true, if the $50,000 is all that is necessary to collect the information required for this very necessary service—which I grant is a very necessary one—then, it seems to me, there is no necessity of appropriating more.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am glad to see this evidence of economy upon the part of the Senator from Utah with reference to this particular matter.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not said a word about economy, and I am perfectly willing to appropriate $100,000 or $200,000, if it is necessary; but what I state is this: The Senator from South Carolina, a member of the committee, says that the Secretary of Agriculture states that $50,000 is all that is necessary; that that will collect all the information required; that the difficulty is not on the part of the Government of the United States or the amount appropriated, but that it lies in the fact that the information is not asked for by the people in the States where it is needed.

Mr. KENYON. In view of the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] as to the statement of the Secretary before the committee—I am not a member of the committee and did not hear it—relative to the experiments which were necessary to be carried out in the different counties or in groups of counties throughout the country, does the Senator imagine that $50,000 will do even that, to say nothing of an investigation?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know. The Secretary of Agriculture says that $50,000 is all that is required, but if the Senator from South Carolina, who has studied this question, says that $100,000 or $200,000 can be used I am perfectly willing to vote for an appropriation of $100,000 or for $200,000.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator from Utah allow me merely to make a statement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I would like to state to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] that they are laboring under a wrong impression. I want to take this occasion to set myself right. If a million dollars were needed for the purpose of protecting the hog industry of this country, I do not believe that there is a Senator on this floor but who would vote for the appropriation of a million dollars; but the proposition is this: Is the Department of Agriculture to go into the work of furnishing the serum and administering it for each and every owner of a herd, or is the department simply required to gather the data, to furnish the information as to trustworthy antitoxin, then furnish a demonstrator in the community, and teach the owners how to administer the proper remedy?

The department officials came before us and said that they had ample facilities for teaching the farmers or a community how to administer this remedy, but the farmers will not avail themselves of it. Those officials say they stand ready to send men where necessary and that this $50,000 is ample to provide for their expenses in going to the several communities where the disease now exists. The proposition before us is, Are we going to require the department not only to furnish the remedy but to administer it wherever the disease is, or is the department simply to be required to furnish the farmers information as to the proper remedy and the proper method of administering it?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so that there may be no misunderstanding about my position, I will say that if it will take $200,000 or $300,000 of $400,000 for the Government to give to the different States the information necessary on this subject, then I shall have no objection to voting to appropriate that amount. I simply made my statement upon the statement that was made by the Senator from South Carolina. It seems to me that if that is correct, and if $50,000 is all that can be used by the Secretary of Agriculture, it would be nonsense to give more, although, as I said before, I do not know as to that, my only knowledge being gained from the statement made by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as I said——

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to read from the hearings, if the Senator will permit me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I prefer to take the floor in my own right, Mr. President.

Mr. POMERENE. In view of the course this discussion has taken, I feel justified in giving my connection with the matter. This was called to my attention by Hon. A. P. Sandles, the secretary of agriculture of my State; and I want to say he is one of the best secretaries of agriculture that Ohio or any other State ever had or ever will have, and the President elect could do no better than to place him in his Cabinet. After this matter was called to my attention I wrote to Secretary Wilson. I received, under date of February 4, 1913, a letter from him, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 4, 1913.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of February 3. This department, after 10 years of research, found a serum that would prevent hog cholera. The States have not been active in using it. It is proposed by the House Committee on Agriculture to appropriate money to have the Bureau of Animal Industry make demonstrations in certain of the hog-raising States and show the people how to use this serum practically. I think that is likely to go through the House. This department is taking all the interest in it that you would desire.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, at the time I wrote to the Secretary of Agriculture on that subject, I received from Secretary Sandles some resolutions adopted by the Department of Agriculture of the State of Ohio. I send those resolutions to the desk and ask that they may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF OHIO,
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Columbus, February 1, 1913.

Resolutions.

The Ohio State Board of Agriculture, at its meeting January 31, 1913, Columbus, adopted the following resolutions:

"Whereas in the Middle West corn-belt zone hog cholera is prevalent to such degree as to seriously menace swine breeding and swine feeding; and

"Whereas the loss incurred by farmers on account of the ravages of this swine plague annually totals millions of dollars; and

"Whereas the blighting of the swine industry decreases the profits of corn growing, cattle feeding, and general farming to such an extent as to discourage in many instances the continuance of agricultural pursuits; and

"Whereas the decline in production of a meat supply incident to a continuance of the swine plague will materially affect the cost of living and general welfare; and

"Whereas the liability of diseased animals being slaughtered and unknowingly placed upon the market is an important factor affecting the public health: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Ohio State Board of Agriculture, That Ohio Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to urge such legislation, appropriation of funds, and cooperation by the Federal Government that will enable the States in the swine-plague zone to reduce to a minimum, and, if possible, eradicate the dangers and losses from hog cholera."

Respectfully,

A. P. SANDLES, Secretary.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. If the amount is increased to $100,000, I should like to ask the Senator whether he would accept an amendment to his amendment inserting, after the amount "$100,000," the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary"? Then if the work requires $100,000 the money will be available.

Mr. POMERENE. I accept that.

Mr. SMOOT. With that modification I have no objection to the amendment at all.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, further, in view of the statement which has been made by the Secretary of Agriculture that everything is being done which can be done, I beg to say that if anything has been done by the Federal Government Ohio does not know of it, and in corroboration I beg to say that I sent a copy of the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture to Secretary Sandles, of the Ohio State Board of Agriculture, and in reply to that letter I received an answer, which I send to the Secretary's desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF OHIO,
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Columbus, February 13, 1913.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Received yours of recent date advising reference appropriation for hog cholera that $30,000 may be inserted in the agricultural appropriation, also copy of Secretary Wilson's letter.

The statement of the Secretary that the department is taking all the interest in hog cholera that you would desire is a very extraordinary one. His department is almost indifferent toward the needs of the Middle West in this matter. The losses are tremendous, running into many million dollars.

The Iowa officials advise me that the loss in that State alone is over $15,000,000 annually.

Any Senator or Congressman who can secure a half million dollar appropriation for the purpose of affording relief from the terrible loss from the swine plague will be called blessed. Ohio has done more in the manufacture and use of the serum than any other State in the Union, and has done much more than the Federal Government has done, but one State can not control this swine plague.

This question is of such importance as to be worthy the attention of the Government. The indifference of Secretary Wilson will not bring relief to the thousands and tens of thousands of swine owners.

Respectfully,

A. P. SANDLES, Secretary.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to add that Secretary Sandles is one of the men who usually knows whereof he speaks.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am very much interested in what the Senator from Ohio has said about the use of this antitoxin in his State. I have heard of this antitoxin, but I have been a little incredulous about its being an effective remedy for hog cholera. I live in a section of the country where hogs are raised. I can say, from personal knowledge, that in certain counties in the eastern part of my State during the past year at least 20 per cent of all the hogs were destroyed by cholera. If the United States Government, through the Agricultural Department, has any effective remedy for this disease, it has not made it known to the hog raisers of our section of the country. As I understood the Senator from Ohio a little while ago, he said that for about 10 years this remedy had been known and that a great deal had been done in his State toward eradicating this disease. I should like to have the Senator state whether it has been demonstrated there that this antitoxin is an effective remedy for hog cholera.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator's statement is in part correct and in part not correct. I said, perhaps before the Senator came in on the floor, that in 1911 the General Assembly of the State of Ohio appropriated $75,000 for the purpose of purchasing a farm and preparing this remedy, and Dr. Paul Fischer, who is the State veterinarian, has discovered what he believes is a cure. His experiments have been eminently satisfactory. He considers his cure absolutely perfect. I understand that if the hog is inoculated within a reasonable time after it has contracted the disease, Dr. Fischer can cure it; but if it is left until the disease has passed a certain stage the hog is incurable. Our department has been handicapped because we do not have sufficient funds.

Mr. SIMMONS. To what extent has the application of that remedy suppressed this fatal disease in the Senator's State?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have personal knowledge of one instance in which there was a small herd of probably 15 or 20 hogs. At the time the veterinarian was called all of them, save 3, were pronounced past recovery. The other 3 were inoculated and recovered. The feeling prevails in Ohio that with this remedy properly administered we can very greatly reduce, if not entirely control, hog cholera. I think that this appropriation, instead of being $100,000, ought to be a half million dollars.

Mr. SIMMONS. I entirely agree with the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The testimony before the committee tended to show that the so-called remedy, the serum, that is used is not a curative at all but a preventive; in other words, the difficulty the Secretary of Agriculture has had is with the farmers themselves. They are in exactly the same frame of mind as is the Senator to whom I am now addressing my remarks—they are incredulous about it; they do not believe that this serum is a preventive at all. The Secretary says that to undertake to eradicate this disease would be a physical impossibility for the Government. It rests upon the people themselves—the farmers who have hogs to use this serum as a preventive—and the Secretary says it will prevent the disease every time, but it will not cure it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I gather from what has been said that experimentation with this serum has been going on now for about 10 years in some of the States. I assume that if the remedy is an effective one the Federal Government has known of it through its officials for the last 10 years; and yet, Mr. President, there is no evidence in my section of the State, where this disease has been very disastrous, that the Federal Government has exercised itself in the slightest degree to help the farmer. I have personal knowledge that farmers raising hogs in my State whose animals have suffered from this disease have applied to the Agricultural Department for information as to how they might suppress the disease, and I have been advised that they have succeeded in getting no valuable assistance or advice from the Agricultural Department.

I want to say that if there has been discovered any remedy, and if the Agricultural Department can, provided we give them ample funds for that purpose, help the farmers in overcoming this great handicap in connection with agriculture, I myself should hesitate at voting no sum that the department might think necessary for that purpose; but it occurs to me that this matter is still in an experimental stage and that the Agricultural Department itself wants to experiment and see whether it can be demonstrated that the remedy is effective in reaching the disease, and therefore it asks for this more as a fund for experimenting than otherwise.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield further to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Secretary of Agriculture says it is not experimental at all. He says they have absolutely demonstrated its efficacy.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator tell me why he has delayed applying so long, if it is not experimental?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. He has not had the money to use for that purpose. All the Secretary of Agriculture could do, if money were furnished him in the greatest abundance, would be to educate the people to use the serum before the disease broke out among the hogs. If the Government itself undertook to absolutely eradicate the disease it would have to go and inoculate herds that were perfectly well. The administration of the serum after the disease has attacked a herd is absolutely useless. It does not do any good. It is incurable—at least, so the Secretary says, and he depends upon that particular branch of his service to inform him.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator misunderstands me. I am not insisting that the department can do or should do anything more than to teach. I am not insisting that the Government should undertake to go down and cure this disease or do anything except to furnish the information and probably point out the remedy to the farmer. That is all I am insisting upon; and what I was trying to find out was whether it had been demonstrated yet that this remedy was at all effective.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. Senators on this side of the Chamber are unable to hear what is being said, on account of the disorder in the Chamber. I am deeply interested in this amendment, and I should like to hear what is being said about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has appealed to the Senate several times this morning to preserve order. It is impossible for the Chair to enforce his suggestion, and he again appeals to Senators to refrain from loud conversation in the Chamber.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, in reply to the interrogation that the Senator from North Carolina has made, the Secretary of Agriculture, speaking in my State while the cholera was raging over the entire State, was asked by a farmer, a hog raiser, sitting in an audience of perhaps 300 or 400, the direct question, "Have you any suggestion to make as to what we may do in case of hog cholera?" He replied: "We have a remedy that is a preventive that will render absolutely immune the animal inoculated. We are ready to give the information, but the trouble is you do not ask for the information or for the demonstrator to teach you to administer it." He went on to say: "We are ready and willing and anxious to demonstrate the fact that this remedy is efficacious; it will prevent it, but," as has been said here before, "it will not cure." He added that, so far as stamping out cholera was concerned, that would be practically impossible, but that you can render immune an individual herd.

He stated these facts emphatically. I see no reason why the Secretary of Agriculture should attempt to deceive the public. If he has this information in the form of bulletins and has men to demonstrate the work, and a community affected sends for relief, I do not see why he should withhold it when he challenged a crowd of 300 or 400 farmers whose hogs were suffering with the disease by saying: "We have the remedy and can teach you how to apply it. Whenever you get ready to call on us, or let us know where to go, we will furnish you the information and the demonstration."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I introduced the amendment for the appropriation of $100,000. I thought at the time that it was not adequate, but I believed it was better for the present year to limit the appropriation to $100,000.

There is a misapprehension with regard to the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture respecting the matter. I desire to read his statement before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senator GRONNA. Do you believe that $100,000 is more than is required for this purpose?

Secretary WILSON. I had thought it might take $100,000; about that.

Senator SMITH of Georgia. $50,000 would enable you to give demonstrations around in the different parts of the State as to the value of the serum?

Secretary WILSON. Yes, sir.

Senator SMITH of Georgia. But $100,000 would not furnish the serum needed. It would take a vast sum of money if you went into the business of furnishing all the serum that was required?

Secretary WILSON. We can not think of that. That is utterly impracticable.

Senator SMITH of Georgia. But $50,000 would enable you to make a demonstration?

Secretary WILSON. I think $50,000 would be a comfortable sum to go in with and make the demonstration.

The Secretary did not mean, of course, to be understood as saying that under the terms of my amendment he could not use $100,000 profitably for the farmers of this country. Of course the Federal Government has not undertaken, and can not undertake, to furnish the serum necessary for a State like my own. As my colleague has said, we lost last year hogs to the value of more than $15,000,000 on account of the ravages of this disease; and the serum that would have been necessary to prevent this plague would have cost the State of Iowa alone, I venture to say, more than $500,000.

That is not the purpose of this amendment. The purpose of the amendment is to secure the cooperation of the Secretary of Agriculture, not only to demonstrate that the serum will accomplish the purpose for which it is made, but to induce the farmers to so associate themselves that it may be effectually applied. If the serum is used in the beginning, if there is segregation of these animals, the spread of the disease can be prevented. That is the cooperation we want. That is the demonstration we want. One hundred thousand dollars, in my opinion, is a very inadequate sum to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make that demonstration and to insure the cooperation that is necessary for the welfare of the farmers of the United States.

Moreover, one of the chief troubles at the present time is the use of not only worthless serum, but poisonous serum, in the sense of failing to accomplish the remedy. I want the Secretary of Agriculture to make a demonstration that will prevent, in the end, the shipment from State to State of serum that ought not to be administered at all. It is one of the most valuable things he can do for the people of the country. We have suffered, I was about to say, beyond description, because the farmers have been led to use a so-called remedy manufactured in other parts of the country that is worse than useless, that really does a vast amount of harm instead of doing any good whatsoever.

I can not believe that the Senate will fail to appreciate the immense importance of giving to the Secretary of Agriculture every opportunity that he can embrace to limit the destruction among the swine caused by this disease.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I should like right at this point to state that, so far as I am concerned, I am not advocating the $50,000 appropriation. I am simply stating the position taken by the Secretary of Agriculture in a speech in my State and in the statement that he made before the committee.

I am willing to join hands with the Senator from Iowa and those interested in hog culture throughout the United States and vote for any amount of money that this body, in its wisdom, thinks can be advantageously used for the suppression, and if possible the eradication, of this disease. I am ready to join the Senators from the hog-raising States, who have practical knowledge of the condition that exists there more than it does in my State, in voting for any amount that they believe can be used to the best advantage. I want to be understood in regard to that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure the Senator from South Carolina has the interests of the farmers of this country just as much at heart as I have, and is willing to do every practicable thing. In the end we must, in my judgment, pass a law that will apply to serum, as it is transported from State to State, the same rigid inspection that we now apply to meat in order to preserve the health of the people. One of the purposes of this appropriation is to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to take those preliminary steps and to make that preliminary examination that will lead to legislation of the kind I have suggested.

I suggest that there be added, after increasing the appropriation to $100,000, the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary." I am entirely willing to trust the Secretary of Agriculture in the expenditure of this fund. I know that even if he had $100,000 unqualifiedly, he would not expend it unless he believed it to be necessary.

Mr. BURNHAM. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to an amendment beginning on page 12 and running along through several pages, in which it appears that $25,000 is appropriated for the prevention of the importation and sale of injurious serums.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know that; but I desire to suggest to the chairman of the committee that the appropriation of $25,000, of course, will not establish the inspectors that are necessary to carry out that purpose, and we will have to wait for that until some other time.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, in behalf of the committee, I only wish to present here the facts upon which the committee based its opinion. In view of the statements that are made, and in view of the fact that the amendment proposes to appropriate $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, I feel, so far as I have any authority to do so, that I will accept that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 79, line 2, it is proposed to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to a paragraph on page 12. I want to see if it does not cover the very point to which he called attention as being so necessary. I refer to the paragraph beginning on line 7 and going down to and including line 12. The last part of the paragraph is—

And the necessary expenses for investigations of tuberculin serums, antitoxins, and analogous products, $78,680.

Mr. CUMMINS. In my opinion that covers the question of investigation, but it does not cover the establishment of inspectors to examine and to condemn serum that is not made in accordance with the approved methods.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I heartily agree with what the Senator says; and I would suggest to him that it might be well if he would prepare an amendment to the paragraph to which I have called his attention, giving the Secretary power to inspect and to condemn serum other than that recommended by the department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 79, after line 4, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the cultivation, acclimating of potatoes, and the development of improved and disease-resistant types, and for the investigation of leaf roll, dry rot, or other new diseases, and the investigation of causes leading to their decay, $20,000, of which the sum of $5,000 shall be immediately available; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend said appropriation in such manner as he shall deem best, in cooperation with the authorities of the States concerned or with individuals, and to pay all necessary expenses for the employment of investigators, local and special agents, experts, assistants, and all labor and other necessary expenses, including rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as may be required.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, after line 18, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue explorations in the steppe regions of western Siberia for specimens and seeds of yellow-flowered hardy alfalfa for use in experimental tests in semiarid regions in the Northwest, including labor and all expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $5,000.

Mr. JONES. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee as to the character of these explorations. How are they made?

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, I think the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] is familiar with this particular item. I understand explorations have been made, and a very valuable forage crop of alfalfa has been found, particularly what is known as the yellow-flowered hardy alfalfa. This is to pay the expenses, and so forth, of further tests in order to produce a drought-resistant forage plant.

Mr. JONES. Will any of this $5,000 be used in the purchase of these seeds?

Mr. BURNHAM. The Senator from South Dakota is fully informed as to that matter.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Prof. Hansen, of the South Dakota Agricultural College, acting under the direction of the department, has made four trips of exploration upon the steppes of western Siberia and has procured seeds from hardy specimens of what is called the blue-flowered alfalfa. The climate in that region is dry, the region itself is at an elevation, and the winters there are cold, making the climate very similar to that of portions of the Northwest, including some sections of my State.

Mr. JONES. I do not wish the Senator to understand that I am opposing this item. What I think is that there ought to be a larger appropriation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will explain the matter a little further, and then I think the Senator will see that it would not be necessary in this particular case.

Mr. JONES. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Prof. Hansen has secured these seeds, rather small in quantity in the very nature of things, and when he comes to distribute what he has over a large section of the country there is not enough to go very far. The experiments which have been made have been eminently successful. He has made four such trips, and this is a projected fifth trip.

The legislature of my State has made some appropriations for the purpose of cooperating in paying his expenses for this trip, and he has asked in his correspondence for aid only to the extent of $5,000. The Secretary of Agriculture said at the hearing that they were making, in addition to this, some additional explorations out of other appropriations, but he knows Prof. Hansen and what he has done and his familiarity with the situation there, and he approves of this appropriation.

Mr. JONES. Does the professor absolutely think he can accomplish something with this appropriation of $5,000?

Mr. CRAWFORD. He does. His correspondence is in the report. He thinks it can be done by having it used in cooperation with the Legislature of South Dakota.

Mr. JONES. I wish to say to the Senator I do not think we can make a better expenditure of money for seeds than for something of this sort.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is no question about that. But this it not the only provision in the bill that will enable that work to be performed.

Mr. JONES. I know there is another provision in the bill, but I like to see the money taken for purposes of this kind and expended for the free distribution of such seeds.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So would I, but I do not think it is practicable to change the proposition now.

Mr. JONES. It is a very small amount to accomplish anything.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It would be except for the fact that he is cooperating with an association of people, a voluntary association, who are contributing money toward the work, and the legislature of my State is cooperating with them, I understand.

Mr. JONES. I wish to say in this connection that I get, very frequently, requests for alfalfa seed and seed adapted to the arid or semiarid sections, and almost uniformly those requests, when sent down to the department, are refused because they have not the seed. If there is anything we need in the way of seed that will be of benefit, it is seed that is adapted to agriculture in the arid and semiarid sections of the country, and if there is any money we can expend of benefit to people in connection with experiments of this kind, it should be money spent for the purpose of finding out what seeds are adapted to the arid and semiarid sections. That is the reason why I asked about this appropriation. It seemed to me that the appropriation was too small to accomplish anything and that it would be practically a waste, but it appears that it is a special appropriation in reference to a special treatment of the subject.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will read from Prof. Hansen's letter to me under date of February 11, 1913. He says:

> The Conservation and Development Congress was a great success at Pierre, January 28, 29, and 30. The people, especially in the western part of the State, kept me very busy answering questions on alfalfa. The Siberian varieties have done so wonderfully well the past two extremely dry years that the people want more of them. An appropriation of $10,000 has been asked for, and the bill has been introduced to the house at Pierre, for sending me to Siberia again to gather seed. One trouble in gathering seed for the United States Department of Agriculture is that the seed must be delivered at Washington and is sent out over so many States instead of it all coming to South Dakota. But a small additional appropriation from the National Government will be very helpful, as there would be other things besides alfalfa which I could just as well get at the same time.

He has practically suggested the helpfulness of this appropriation, and the Secretary concurred in it, and it was upon that basis that we proceeded.

Mr. JONES. Are there any other sections outside of the Senator's own State interested in this matter?

Mr. CRAWFORD. There are large sections, but Prof. Hansen is connected with our State Agricultural College and his work has come very closely in touch with them, and they have been taking the initiative.

Mr. JONES. I am glad of the information. I shall not ask to have the appropriation increased.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have no reason to believe that Prof. Hansen will object if the amount is made ten thousand dollars instead of five.

Mr. JONES. I have the information that I desired.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like further information from the Senator from South Dakota as to what amount has been appropriated for the purchase of alfalfa seed to be distributed to the farmers for matters of test and investigation. I wish to state that in our State we send out very little packages and the demand for those packages for experimental purposes is at least ten times as great as the supply. We ought to have a supply next year to cover the demand that there is for experimental purposes throughout the Northwest. I hope there will be inserted in this bill an amount that shall be specifically used for that purpose, and which the Committee on Agriculture will say is sufficient, considering the demand that has been made and is being made to-day for those samples.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I am unable to answer the question of the Senator from North Dakota. My experience is the same as his. The pressure of demand for alfalfa seed in the Northwest is growing constantly. It is the one legume that is securing to those people their future. I am not informed. I have not been able to give the time to the work of the Agriculture Committee that I should like to have done. Perhaps the chairman may be able to give some information in regard to this matter; I can not.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the chairman heard my statement and my request for the information. I would be very glad to receive it from him with a view, if it is not in the bill, of offering an amendment by which we will have at least $50,000 or $100,000 to be invested for those seeds alone.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, I have no means of stating the amount of alfalfa allowed except as it appears here in the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I would defer to some one who is on the Committee on Agriculture like my colleague, who perhaps would know exactly whether the amendment should be made, but I should like some amendment which would provide for a sufficient amount to supply that reasonable and just demand, because every bushel of seed that is sent out for that purpose will actually be used for agricultural purposes and in testing the feasibility of raising that kind of alfalfa throughout the semiarid sections of the Northwest.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am very glad that my colleague has called attention to this particular item. I can not state exactly how much money is used for the purchase of alfalfa seed, but the fact of the matter is that such seeds as we are speaking of now can not be bought at any price. The Secretary told us that it took $14,000 to get 70 pounds of the Siberian quality.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator, Can it not be obtained in Siberia? I know, of course, it can not be obtained in the United States; but if it is a product that has been tried out in Siberia and has been found successful and is raised over a considerable area in that section of the country, it certainly seems to me that we ought to be able to get the seed from that section.

Mr. GRONNA. No; the fact of the matter is that this clover was found in the steppes in northern Siberia; they are wild-grown seeds and they have been introduced in this country by Prof. Hansen. They have to be propagated. They are purely a breeding seed. There is no quantity of the seed anywhere in the world, so far as I know.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator from North Dakota permit me?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to say to the Senator from North Dakota that I have talked many times with Prof. Hansen, who is a most interesting man, and I learn from him that he gets a caravan and goes very long distances from railways away in the steppes in Turkestan, where the hardships are almost those of Stanley's Darkest Africa. He can not bring the seeds in large bulk. The results so far as quantity is concerned are necessarily quite limited. It takes time of course after raising from the seed to have it multiplied so as to get an appreciable quantity of the seed.

Mr. McCUMBER. If my colleague will yield to me, I understand from the Senator from South Dakota that we have brought the seeds here sufficiently to justify the assumption that they will be a great success in the northwestern part of the country.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is correct, as testified to by farmers whose letters I have given in the report and by Prof. Hansen himself, and also by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. McCUMBER. Knowing now the importance of this subject in the northwestern section of the country, does not the Senator believe that the Government of the United States would be justified in rendering more assistance to Prof. Hansen than $5,000 would give, or assistance to anyone else in securing those seeds which are so difficult to obtain and whose efforts should be supplemented by the efforts of a sufficient force to bring to our shores the quantity that ought to be used here and for which there is a certain demand?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator from North Dakota is evidently laboring under the impression that the only efforts that are being made to get these alfalfa plants and seeds from Siberia are those made by Prof. Hansen. That is not correct. Prof. Hansen has made four trips there. He was the pioneer in the work. He got the first seeds; he made the exploration; and we want him to go again. But as the exploration work developed it was enlarged, and there is another corps maintained there; there is an appropriation available, and it is being used.

The Secretary of Agriculture, in the first place, said to the committee that the appropriation for Prof. Hansen was not necessary; and it was only because of the fact that Prof. Hansen was so peculiarly well equipped for the work, having been there four times previously, and was cooperating with this association in South Dakota and with the legislature of that State, that it was thought wise to give him this $5,000 assistance.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I think I should state further that when Secretary Wilson appeared before our committee he said:

> The Russian Government—

He is speaking of where these seeds were obtained—

> The Russian Government used to give him—

That is, Prof. Hansen—

> The Russian Government used to give him a couple of soldiers to go with him, and he would pay their expenses, of course. He got within two days' travel of Mount Ararat, where everybody is sure he can trace his pedigree back to Noah. The last time I saw him I said, "Hansen, have you got all the legumes you want out of that country?" He said, "There is one up there in the foothills of Ararat that I want yet." I never would oppose anything that Hansen wanted—never. I know the great good that the man has done, and our people are sending men who have known of his genius up there to gather the fruits of his observation, and they tell me they have a hundred pounds. When he went first and was gone two or three years he brought back about 70 pounds that cost us $14,000. But if you are going to get a panacea for the reclamation of that whole empire of dry land, what is $14,000?

Mr. President, I only read that to show that it would be absolutely impossible to obtain any great quantity of this particular seed. I believe, however, that my colleague [Mr. McCUMBER] is right. We should distribute more alfalfa seeds. I can not now say what kind of alfalfa seeds should be distributed, but I would be very much in favor of adopting the suggestion of my colleague and specify that a certain amount should be appropriated for the purpose of purchasing alfalfa seed to be distributed over the United States, and especially over the semiarid regions of the West.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that on page 27 of the bill there is a provision like this:

> Provided further, That $39,000 of which sum—

Referring to the fund with reference to congressional seeds for distribution—

> or so much thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture shall direct, may be used for the purchase and distribution of drought-resistant field seeds through the Great Plains area and other dry-land sections of the United States.

I take it it is under that provision the Secretary secures alfalfa seeds, and so forth?

Mr. GRONNA. It is.

Mr. JONES. I want to suggest right here to the Senator from South Dakota that I think it would be a good idea to increase that amount from $39,000 to $150,000 and take this out of the free congressional distribution seed farce.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This is the kind of free congressional distribution of seed that I do not want to see abolished.

Mr. JONES. I know it. I want to see the appropriation increased. I want to increase it from $39,000 to $150,000.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Washington and the two Senators from North Dakota that this bill carries an appropriation of $250,000 for the purchase and distribution of seed upon the requisition of Members of the two Houses of Congress. Each Member of the Senate or the House can commute his entire pro rata share of that appropriation into alfalfa seed instead of distributing garden seed by filing a requisition with the Secretary of Agriculture. He can have his entire portion converted into alfalfa seed.

Mr. JONES. The Senator is certainly mistaken in that.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The department have not the seed.

Mr. JONES. They have not the seed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor. Senators must not interrupt without first addressing the Chair and getting permission.

Mr. GORE. No appropriation that we can make can conjure this particular kind of alfalfa seed into existence. I am not mistaken as to the ability of any Member of either House to file his requisition and obtain whatever kind of seed he desires, because I took this matter up with the Secretary of Agriculture last year and he gave me that assurance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee to insert the paragraph from line 19 to line 25, inclusive, on page 79.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, after line 24, to insert:

> That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint a commission to investigate the operations of cooperative land-mortgage banks and of cooperative rural credit unions in other countries, and to fix the compensation of the members of the commission. Said commission is hereby authorized to employ such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants as may be necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere, which employees shall be paid such compensation as the commission may deem just and reasonable, upon a certificate to be issued by the chairman of the commission. For the purposes of its investigations the commission shall be authorized to incur, and have paid upon the certificate of its chairman, such expenses as the commission shall deem necessary: Provided, however, That the total expenses authorized or incurred for compensation, employees, and otherwise shall not exceed the sum of $30,000. Said commission shall submit a report as early as practicable to Congress, embodying therein recommendations as to how the systems of such land-mortgage banks and rural credit unions may best be adapted to the needs and requirements of the people of the United States.

Mr. BURNHAM. I wish to make some additional amendments. On page 79, in line 26, after the word "commission," I move to insert the following:

> As a part of and to cooperate with the American commissioners assembled under the auspices of the Southern Commercial Congress.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNHAM. On page 80, line 17, after the word "unions," I move to insert the following:

> And other institutions for the purpose of increasing agricultural credit facilities.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is one more amendment, which will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 22, after the words "Department of Agriculture," to strike out "$17,593,275" and insert "$18,566,580," so as to make the clause read:

> Total carried by this bill for the Department of Agriculture, $18,566,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The totals will be corrected by the clerks.

Mr. McLEAN. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read:

The SECRETARY. On page 55, after line 19, insert:

> All wild geese, wild swans, brant, wild ducks, snipe, plover, woodcock, rail, wild pigeons, and all other migratory game and insectivorous birds which in their northern and southern migrations pass through or do not remain permanently the entire year within the borders of any State or Territory, shall hereafter be deemed to be within the custody and protection of the Government of the United States, and shall not be destroyed or taken contrary to regulations hereinafter provided therefor.
> The Department of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to adopt suitable regulations to give effect to the previous paragraph by prescribing and fixing closed seasons, having due regard to the zones of temperature, breeding habits, and times and line of migratory flight, thereby enabling the department to select and designate suitable districts for different portions of the country, and it shall be unlawful to shoot or by any device kill or seize and capture migratory birds within the protection of this law during said closed seasons, and any person who shall violate any of the provisions or regulations of this law for the protection of migratory birds shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than $100 or imprisoned not more than 90 days, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The Department of Agriculture, after the preparation of said regulations, shall cause the same to be made public, and shall allow a period of three months in which said regulations may be examined and considered before final adoption, permitting, when deemed proper, public hearings thereon, and after final adoption shall cause the same to be engrossed and submitted to the President of the United States for approval: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect or interfere with the local laws of the States and Territories for the protection of nonmigratory game or other birds resident and breeding within their borders, nor to prevent the States and Territories from enacting laws and regulations to promote and render efficient the regulations of the Department of Agriculture provided under this statute.

There is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying out these provisions the sum of $10,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BURNHAM. I would inquire of the Senator from Connecticut whether the insertion should not be made after line 16, before "general expenses"?

Mr. McLEAN. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I raise a point of order on the amendment upon the ground that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McLEAN. It is very evident that there are half a dozen provisions in the bill standing on precisely similar ground. In regard to the claim that it is general legislation, I do not care to discuss it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I hope that the Senator from Florida will withdraw his point of order on the amendment that has been submitted by the Senator from Connecticut. The Senator from Florida well knows that a similar bill passed the Senate unanimously, and the only way that this bill can become a law at the present session is to put it upon some appropriation bill. The bill which the Senator from Connecticut introduced passed the Senate unanimously, and it would seem to me that having formerly passed the Senate it is not really subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Inasmuch as the bill has passed the Senate without objection the Chair will submit the question to the Senate: Is the amendment in order on the pending bill?

Mr. BURNHAM. In view of the action of the Senate, the Senate having passed the bill, and its present standing in the House, as I understand it, I wish to say that I have no objection to the amendment, and I accept it, so far as I have any authority to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators who are of the opinion that the amendment is in order on the pending bill will say "aye." [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to offer an amendment. On page 17, line 13, after the word "clerk," strike out "$2,500" and insert "$2,750."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, line 13, in the items for the Bureau of Plant Industry, after the words "one chief clerk," strike out "$2,500" and insert "$2,750."

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will accept that amendment.

Mr. BURNHAM. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 11, insert the following words:

Hereafter officials and employees of the Weather Bureau, when transferred from one station to another for official duty, shall be allowed all traveling expenses authorized by existing laws applicable to said bureau notwithstanding any changes in appointments that may be required by such transfers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, with the approval of the chairman of the committee, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 78, after line 20, it is proposed to insert the following paragraph:

That the National Forest Reservation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to investigate and report to Congress at as early a date as practicable upon the feasibility and cost of acquiring land for a national forest for experimental and administration purposes on the watershed of the Potomac River and its tributaries, and upon the watersheds of the streams flowing into Chesapeake Bay situated within 40 miles of the District of Columbia, and said commission is hereby authorized to expend for said purposes any funds appropriated in section 14 of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat., 961), entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate wth any other State or States or with the United States for the protection of waersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable streams."

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, I believe that that amendment is necessary and important, and, so far as I can, I will accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to ask a question in regard to the amendment. How much expenditure will it involve?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that it will involve not one dollar of additional expenditure. So far as the Forestry Commission is concerned, they are only authorized to perform this service. The money has already been heretofore appropriated for the expenses, and the amendment will not require any appropriation whatever.

Mr. BORAH. Does it enlarge or increase in any way the authority or power of the so-called Forestry Commission?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. They are only to investigate and report so far as this proposed park is concerned; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I again rise to a point of order. It is absolutely impossible to intelligently follow what is going on in connection with the pending bill on account of the talking and confusion in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken. The Chair will once more appeal to Senators to preserve order. The business of the Senate will hereafter be suspended when there is such disorder in the Chamber as has frequently occurred this morning.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move, on page 41, to strike out the clause from line 16 to line 20, inclusive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, beginning in line 16, it is proposed to strike out:

For silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations independently or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States and with individuals, to determine the best methods for the conservative management of forests and forest lands, $83,728.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, as I stated earlier in the day, I am opposed to these lump-sum appropriations; but, in addition to that lump sum, I find other lump sums for the same purpose, among them the following:

For investigations of method for wood distillation and for the preservative treatment of timber, * * * $170,000.

For the purchase of tree seed, cones, and nursery stock, for seeding and tree planting, etc., $165,640.

Then, we come down to this provision, on page 41, which I have moved to strike out:

For silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations independently or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States and with individuals, to determine the best methods for the conservative management of forests and forest lands, $83,728.

Out of this lump sum there has been expended the enormous amount of $10,000 to print 1,000 copies of a pamphlet to be distributed around through the colleges for the purpose of securing increase of salaries and creating additional offices. I am glad to see the committee has fixed the salaries and the offices here in this bill; but they have a dendrologist here, and they have a silviculturist. I want to know why they did not specifically provide for his salary as they have provided for other salaries, but have instead appropriated a lump sum in order that the Secretary might fix a salary or create an office.

Mr. BURNHAM. In replying to the Senator, I wish to say that this item has appeared before in substantially its present form; and while the objections of the Senator may have some force in a way, we have here the exact items that go to make up that $83,000 appropriation. The committee had before it the exact items and were fully satisfied that the amount was correct.

So far as the "lump-sum" practice is concerned, I should be glad to have the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who has had longer experience on the committee than have I, make a statement regarding it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming agrees with me that this system has been abused. Not longer than two days ago there was put into the Indian appropriation bill a lump-sum appropriation, which was stricken out on a point of order, because it provided for salaries which were contained in the legislative appropriation bill. That is the way salaries have been increased. After the Committee on Appropriations have fixed the salaries we find lump sums appropriated in other appropriation bills. We found it in the Indian appropriation bill, where the committee had inserted a lump-sum appropriation of $100,000 after the Committee on Appropriations had fixed the salaries for the offices. I ask the Senator from Wyoming if that is not true?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I agree with my colleague on the Appropriations Committee [Mr. OVERMAN] that so far as practicable we ought to avoid these lump-sum appropriations. I think we are traveling in that direction all the time. It is more difficult, however, in this particular department, much of whose work is of an experimental nature. Nearly all of its investigations are more or less experimental; and we have not yet arrived at a place where I feel that we could cut out all these sums. I am inclined to think if the Senator will examine the list of expenditures—I have not examined it closely myself—that he will not ask to have these sums cut out at this time.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to hear the statement to which I have referred read.

Mr. WARREN. It might be well for the Senator to ask that there should be an estimate for next year, if he prefers to do so.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope hereafter the department will send an estimate of the number of men to be employed and their salaries, so that we shall be fully informed as to what we ought to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to hear the information, Mr. President.

Mr. BURNHAM. I should be glad to have the Senator examine it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to know if I have stated the truth. The department spent $10,000 to publish a pamphlet, and they are going to publish another to cost another $10,000. They have four volumes, in which appear most expensive pictures of leaves and tree tracings. I had one of the volumes on my desk and I am sorry that it has been misplaced, for I should like to show Senators for what purposes they are spending the people's money. One pamphlet, as I have said, has cost $10,000. If that is not so, let us see what the cost is. That, however, is my information.

Mr. BURNHAM. The information the Senator desires may be this:

> This appropriation provides for investigations in scientific forestry and for cooperation with States and private owners in forestry practice. It supports, in whole or part, seven experiment stations in the West where trained investigators are studying the problems encountered in the technical administration of the national forests.

Mr. OVERMAN. What I want to know is what that money is to be spent for?

Mr. BURNHAM. There are some figures given. They have a dendrologist at $2,500, although his salary is not fixed in the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. They have also a silviculturalist.

Mr. BURNHAM. Does the Senator desire to have this matter read by the Secretary?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator can give me information as to how many will be employed and how much money has been spent. The fact that such appropriations have been carried for years and years on this and other appropriation bills is no reason why we should not now cut them out. If my recollection is correct about this particular item, it ought to have been cut out long ago. I want to know how the money is to be spent and for what it is to be spent. That is the information I am trying to get.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that, as the committee is not prepared to give the information and as this is a House provision, it might be well for the Senate to strike it out, and then, if the House can show to the conference committee that there is a proper use for the expenditure, it can be restored. We certainly ought not to pass it unless they can show that it is a proper expenditure.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I introduced a resolution to investigate this very department, but it was objected to, as if some one did not want an investigation of that particular department. I had the book to which I have referred on my desk to show to Senators. I hope the Senator will let the item go to conference, and when it goes into conference if the conferees agree that it is all right, I will be satisfied; but I know that great extravgance has followed lump-sum appropriations.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNHAM. On behalf of the committee I offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee on line 23, page 20.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, line 23, in lieu of the proviso inserted at that point by the committee, it is proposed to insert:

> That of the sum appropriated, $10,000 is to be used for testing the waste, tensile strength, and bleaching qualities of the different grades of cotton as standardized by the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BURNHAM. On page 57, line 8, I move to strike out "thirteen" and insert "fourteen," so as to read "fourteen clerks, at $1,000 each."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNHAM. On page 57, line 8, I move to strike out "forty-one" and insert in lieu thereof "forty," so as to read "forty clerks, at $900 each."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNHAM. While I am on my feet I desire to make the suggestion that the Secretary be authorized to correct all totals.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be done.

Mr. JONES. On page 23, line 11, after the word "handling," I move to insert the word "marketing." I know we have a provision in the bill for a Division of Markets, but that may not be accepted. Of course if it is accepted, this will not be retained; but if it is not accepted, then I should like to have this amendment put in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 11, after the word "handling," it is proposed to insert "marketing."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that I offered an amendment which was referred to the committee, reinstating a provision that was put in the bill by the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] at the last session, with reference to the disposal of dead and down timber to homesteaders. I offered the amendment with the word "hereafter" in it to make it a continuing proposition. Am I correct in understanding that the department holds that the provision in the last bill to continuing law, and that therefore it is not necessary to have it inserted in this bill?

Mr. BURNHAM. It has been stated by the officials of that department that they so hold, and that they will act upon that theory.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate and I also want to print in the RECORD and I want the conference committee to take notice of a brief extract to show how this department estimates and the way this money is spent. I read:

Eastern forest studies	$24,000
Western forest studies	40,378
State cooperation	3,000
Forest management in the East	4,600
Dendrology	11,750
Total	83,728

I suppose that the item of $11,750 is to provide for the book to which I have referred. That is the only light on this $83,728 appropriation.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, if the Senator will turn over a little further, he will find the details.

Mr. OVERMAN. Ah, we have been paying two salaries. I am glad the Senator has called my attention to it. We have provided for offices and fixed salaries, and now they come in and ask for a lump sum—I knew that was being done—of $83,728. What is that for? Not for offices created by Congress, with salaries fixed by Congress, but they take the lump sum and appoint a chief at $2,500, an assistant chief at $2,200, a forester assistant, and so on. A long list of offices is created by the chief of the department under the lump-sum appropriation, offices which Congress has refused to create, and for which it has never fixed salaries. That is what I am complaining about in connection with these lump sums. If I had time to go through these estimates—$170,000 for this and $85,000 for that, and so forth—you would find the same thing; you would find them creating offices in the department that Congress would not create if they had the matter before them and full information upon it. That has been done not only under this appropriation, but under others.

I am not complaining of the chairman of the Agricultural Committee, but I am complaining of these appropriation bills; and so long as I stay here these lump sums will have to go out, if the Senate will sustain me, as they have gone out at my instance in several cases. The lump-sum provisions have been abused. The money of the people has been spent in this way in creating offices, and lump sums, designed for the purpose of carrying on some investigation, have been made to fool Congress, while offices with large salaries attached have been created.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I offered an amendment, which was printed some time ago, but I find the copy of the bill I had was not a correct print; so I shall offer the amendment now. After line 1, on page 25, I move to strike out all of page 25, all of page 26, and all of page 27 down to line 23. I do not know whether it is necessary to read all those lines proposed to be stricken out. I can explain the amendment in just a word.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator please state where he proposes his amendment shall begin and end? There was such confusion that I could not hear.

Mr. KENYON. Commencing after line 1, on page 25, striking out everything on pages 25 and 26, down to line 23 on page 27.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will also have to move to strike out lines 23 and 24 on page 27, will he not, because that is the appropriation.

Mr. KENYON. That is the appropriation for the whole Bureau of Plant Industry, while the amendment I have offered only affects the portion of the provision relating to the free distribution of seeds.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the Senator can afterwards change the appropriation if he shall so desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can move to amend further if his amendment is adopted.

Mr. KENYON. That can be done if the amendment is adopted, which I do not think will likely happen, but shall be gratified if it does.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I merely desire to ask the Senator a question. I have not examined the full scope of the Senator's suggestion. It appears that his amendment goes much further than I thought he really intended it to go. I agree with him with reference to a lot of this little nonsense in the way of sending out garden seeds and flower seeds; but I want to know if the Senator seriously means to contend that the provision for securing and distributing seeds adapted to the production, for instance, of drought-resistant plants in semiarid regions should be eliminated, and that the Department of Agriculture should cease its endeavors in that direction?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, no; not at all. I am very much in favor of that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But part of the provision which the Senator is seeking to strike out appears to be devoted to that very purpose.

Mr. KENYON. That may be true as to the item of $39,000 for the purchase of drought-resistant field seeds.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We were discussing a moment ago the matter with reference to the securing of legumes from the steppes of Siberia and taking them out into the semiarid regions of the West.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator is correct as to that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The advantage of that outweighs the abuses of a few cabbage and garden seeds and flower seeds, which I think ought to be cut out.

Mr. KENYON. I have no objection, of course, to the provision to which the Senator refers, and possibly the amendment may be modified so that those items to which he has referred may remain in the bill or a provision placed in it afterwards, if my present amendment should be adopted.

Mr. President, what I am striking at is the wasteful and indefensible expenditure of public money in sending garden seeds and flower seeds all over the United States. I am going to make this protest this year—I do not think it will do any good. Probably one might just as well protest against a river and harbor bill or a public buildings bill, but I am going to make the protest at the next session and to keep on with this protest until it may arouse some sentiment in its favor, because, of all the expenditures of public funds, this has grown to be the most defenseless and the most nonsensical.

The Postmaster General in his report informs us of a deficit—a heavy loss of revenue in 1912—due to the extraordinary amount of franked matter mailed in the political primaries, which made a temporary deficit, but states that since the close of the fiscal year the income of the department has again outstripped the expenditures.

The franking of seeds is but a part of the extravagance of the franking system. I remember, when I was a boy, of my father receiving a large envelope containing some seed packages with the name of a Representative in Congress in the corner. It occupied a very conspicuous place in our affections, and we felt quite delighted to think we were in such close contact with a distinguished Member of Congress. I have been disillusioned since. I asked the Secretary of Agriculture, through a resolution, to furnish the Senate the items of expense of purchasing and preparing for the mails the seeds which are distributed principally in congressional campaigns, and that report has just been printed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, does the Senator allude——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator speaks of distributing seed in congressional campaigns. We distribute vegetable and flower seeds every year. The political seed that goes out in the way of documents, which undoubtedly occasions the greatest amount of the deficit, of course goes out every two years; but the seeds proper go out every year in the same quantity without reference to elections.

Mr. KENYON. It is all political seed, I think, which goes out.

Mr. WARREN. Hardly so, I think.

Mr. KENYON. Last year in the purchasing of vegetable and flower seeds the Government spent over $122,000, and for the packeting and mailing $101,000. For the last four years the Government has spent approximately a million dollars for vegetable and flower seeds, few of which, I think, have ever been known to grow. The number of packages mailed during that time was over 48,000,000. So that this expense is not one alone of purchasing the seeds and preparing the seeds for mailing, but likewise an expense to the postal department for transporting. This constitutes an element in the deficit of the Post Office Department.

Mr. President, I am not objecting to any distribution of valuable seeds. This custom came down to us from the old colonial days. In the early days of the Republic Benjamin Franklin sent from the Old World many valuable plants and seeds, and Thomas Jefferson did the same thing from France. That was a valuable idea, and I will vote for sums of money, as the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] suggests, for valuable seeds and plants which may develop our waste places and assist in anything that contributes to the breakfast table of the world.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to his colleague?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to call the attention of my colleague to a possible change in the amendment that he has proposed. If he were to begin the process of elimination in line 5, page 26, with the words "an equal proportion," and so on, and strike out down to and including the word "department," in line 8, on page 27, would he not cover the point that he has in view?

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator state again at what point he suggests that the amendment should commence or the exclusion commence?

Mr. CUMMINS. The exclusion commences after the period in line 5, on page 26, and continues down to and including the word "department," in line 8, on page 27.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that also the words "And provided also" should be stricken out to the word "That," in line 17, page 27.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is true.

Mr. KENYON. The words "And provided also," on page 26?

Mr. FALL. On page 27.

Mr. CUMMINS. I believe that would provide for what might be called the valuable work of the Department of Agriculture in the way of experimentation, and would take away from the Members of Congress the large collection of seeds which is annually being distributed.

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator offer that as a substitute?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I simply suggest that to my colleague to see if it meets his approval.

Mr. KENYON. I am very agreeable to it.

Mr. FALL. Upon further consideration, I think the original suggestion of the Senator from Iowa is correct, as I notice there is a proviso left in this clause.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I desire to withdraw the amendment I offered, and will offer a new one instead.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa withdraws his amendment.

Mr. KENYON. I now move to amend, by striking out, on page 25, except the first line thereof; page 26, lines 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 up to and including the name "United States," and also, on page 26, the words in line 22, commencing at "Provided also," the remainder of page 26; and page 27 down to line 8, including the word "department" in that line.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, beginning with line 3, it is proposed to strike out that line and all down to and including the name "United States," in line 5, on page 26; also on page 26, line 22, beginning with the words "Provided also," to strike out the remainder of line 22 and all of the language down to and including the word "department," in line 8, on page 27.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if this amendment is meant to be in the form in which it is moved——

Mr. KENYON. Just a moment; I misunderstood the situation, and I want to state it once more. It was not stated as I understood it. I want to withdraw that amendment and get it stated right this time. It is, to strike out, on page 26, from the word "an," on line 5, all of the balance of said page; and all of page 27 down to the word "department," on line 8.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask what page the Senator is referring to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, on line 5, beginning with the words "an equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "department," on line 8, page 27.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not care to take any more time on this matter, but I desire to insert, as a part of my remarks, extracts from letters from two farmers in my State, which I will read.

Mr. DU PONT. I should like to make an inquiry. Do I understand that the amendment strikes out anything on page 25?

Mr. KENYON. No; it does not.

I have received some interesting communications from farmers in my State on this seed proposition, and I make bold to read extracts from two thereof.

One writes me as follows:

> Five of we farmers were in the store here the other day and each had received some packages of seeds from his Congressman. We drew lots to see who should have the seeds, and the man who got them took them over and put them into the stove. We then all went out and each one cranked up his six-cylinder car and went out to his farm. This seed business is an absolute farce, and it is time Congressmen quit thinking they were fooling the voters by sending them seeds.

Another is as follows:

> I wish you would send a package of seeds to Mr. ———

The name need not be mentioned.

> He is one of my enemies in this community. I can know of no way to punish him any more than to have him plant these seeds and try and get anything from them. My wife received some nasturtium seeds last year, planted them in the front yard, and we had quite a crop of cucumbers therefrom. Most of the neighbors here, when they get packages of seeds, laugh about it and wonder if the Congressman thinks that will get him another vote. It is time the Government went out of this kind of business.

I have only this to say: The distribution of seeds, as now carried on, is a farce, and every man knows it; and it ought to stop; it is a wasteful expenditure of public money.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if this amendment should be adopted, would it not leave the law in such shape that parties desiring seed may write to the Agricultural Department and get anything they desire?

Mr. KENYON. I assume that is true.

Mr. BORAH. If it is not true, I am not in favor of this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is impossible for us to hear on this side what Senators are saying.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts can tell me.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand the amendment, it leaves that portion which provides for the distribution of valuable plants and bulbs, which is the foundation of the whole thing.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; it does. There is no question about that.

Mr. LODGE. It leaves those untouched, for distribution to persons who apply, and who are anxious to use them for the purposes for which the appropriation was really intended. I take it that the object of the Senator from Iowa, as it has been my object in years past, is to get rid of the wholesale distribution of common seeds, purchased by contract from seedsmen, and which are sent broadcast through the country, which are neither valuable nor rare, and which do not help in the development of agriculture or horticulture or anything of the kind. They are purely political seeds, and it is a mere waste of the public money.

I have made this protest a great many times, and I am glad to know that somebody else has come into the Senate who is ready to make the same protest.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I simply wanted to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he means by his remarks that he wants to destroy all political seed in America?

Mr. LODGE. That can be confined to printed seeds, the seeds of truth that go out in speeches.

Mr. BORAH. Does not the Senator from Iowa, then, want to turn back to page 25 and strike out—> of which amount not less than $256,100 shall be allotted for congressional distribution.

Mr. LODGE. That is the key of the position. That is the real thing. The rest can be left. We struck out the senatorial and congressional allotments before. If we leave out the money it will stop.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think that ought to go out to be in harmony with the other amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator takes that out he takes out the portion which is used for the purchase of the alfalfa of which we have been talking, and other seeds that are to be used in the territory mentioned, because it is out of the $256,100 that the $39,000 is to be taken.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the sum of $39,000 can be deducted from the $256,100 and reduce the $256,100 by $39,000. That will accomplish the purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it is impossible to hear what the Senators are saying on the other side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Complaint is made that Senators speaking are not heard on the opposite side of the Chamber. They will kindly speak more distinctly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Before the amendment is put and before it is read, I wish to say that if an amendment can be adopted which simply strikes out the seeds that are distributed by Senators and Congressmen I am thoroughly in favor of it. I do believe, however, that there should be seed distribution from the Agricultural Department. I think the plan of that distribution should be to place into localities seeds determined upon by the department which it believes are needed to begin the production of seeds for some particular class of culture which, in the opinion of the department, will advance the agricultural interests of the particular section involved. I should regret exceedingly to have the bill so changed as not to leave money for that purpose. I should be exceedingly pleased if the appropriation now made for seed could be all devoted, and if the department could be required to devote it all, to the selection, propagation, and distribution solely of seeds which, in the opinion of the department, are needed for special localities to begin the culture of something desirable for the locality, but not already known by the locality.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think we all desire to preserve the distribution desired by the Senator from Georgia. That is the wording of the bill—

> For purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants.

That is what we want to preserve. But there is tacked on to that appropriation this great sum of money which is expended merely in buying seeds from seedsmen by contract. They are not valuable. They are of no use for the purpose of propagation, testing, or distribution. They are merely sent out—well, to gratify those who send them, I suppose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is proposed, as I understand, to leave the appropriation for valuable seeds?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And to strike out the appropriation for common seeds?

Mr. LODGE. It should be arranged so as to get rid of the ordinary seedsman's seeds which do not correspond to this description. Of course, in such cases as the Senator from North Dakota suggested, those are just the ones we want to have distributed and have preserved; but what I should like to see gotten rid of is this wholesale distribution of seeds that are of no value and that can be bought at any seedsman's store.

Mr. GORE. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, and also the junior Senator from Iowa, if it would not accomplish the end they have in view merely to strike out the words "for congressional distribution"? That would give the Secretary of Agriculture this appropriation with which to purchase and distribute valuable and rare seeds.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it seems to me that if we should offer a separate amendment, to strike out, in line 12, page 25, the words "of which amount not less than $256,100 shall be allotted for congressional distribution," that would cure the entire evil.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me one moment before he takes his seat, the amount expended for congressional seeds is $256,000. The amount expended for valuable seeds is, in round numbers, $40,000. I suggest that we take out the congressional seeds, say a quarter of a million dollars, and continue the distribution of valuable seeds.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I suggest, as a practical solution of the problem raised by the various suggestions which have been made, that in lines 12 and 13 the words "of which amount not less than $256,100 shall be allotted for congressional distribution," be stricken out, and the words "or as much thereof as may be necessary" inserted in line 12. That will leave the authority for the distribution and they can expend all that is necessary for the distribution of valuable seeds, such as alfalfa, which has been referred to here several times.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am very anxious to do anything I can to further the movement to rid ourselves of this system of distributing seeds. I think it is one of the greatest humbugs that was ever palmed off on an unsuspecting people. The misfortune about it is that Members of Congress willingly make themselves parties to the distribution of these seeds, and then come in and propose to change the law that they can very easily change themselves by refusing to be a party to it and renouncing any right or desire to accept and send out the seeds.

It seems to me we might put an end to this system by simply abolishing it ourselves. There is no reason why that should not be done.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Congressmen should not be tempted any more than anybody else, and the best way to get rid of it is to strike out the provision wholly. It can not be done then, and in that event it will not be expected to be done on the part of any of them.

Mr. WORKS. I am perfectly willing to support an amendment of that kind, but it certainly is an evidence of weakness on our part if we allow ourselves to be tempted in this way.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I want to suggest to the Senator that we have a provision in here that those seeds which are not used or distributed by Senators and Representatives by a certain time shall be disposed of by the department. The result of it would be that the allotment of those who would not take them would then be distributed to those who wanted them.

Mr. WORKS. I recognize that weakness in the law, and had it not been for that I should have refused to accept the seeds myself; but I knew the consequence would be that they would be distributed, anyhow. I am in entire sympathy with the effort to eliminate this provision entirely from the law.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Oklahoma asked a question of me, I think, and I do not know whether it has been answered or not. I have not answered it.

If the amount reserved for congressional distribution were stricken from the bill, which is the purpose of my amendment, the amount of $295,100 would remain, which would be used under the care of the Secretary of Agriculture for the proper expenditure. That would include also the $39,000 to which the Senator from North Dakota has referred. So if this amendment that I have proposed is adopted, it should be followed also by one striking out the portion of lines 12 and 13 which relates to the amount reserved for congressional distribution.

Mr. DU PONT. Should not the words "or as much thereof as may be necessary" be inserted?

Mr. KENYON. In place of that?

Mr. DU PONT. On lines 12 and 13, in place of what you strike out.

Mr. KENYON. I do not catch the Senator's point.

Mr. DU PONT. I suggest inserting the words "or as much thereof as shall be found necessary."

Mr. KENYON. As much of what and for what?

Mr. DU PONT. Of the $295,100.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, yes; there will be no trouble about that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. The proposition was made by the Senator from Oklahoma to strike out "of which amount not less than $256,100 shall be allotted for congressional distribution." Does the Senator from Iowa understand that the $256,100 includes the expense of distribution as well as the cost of acquiring the seeds and putting them into proper form for distribution? If the proposition of the Senator from Oklahoma obtains—by striking out "of which amount not less than $256,100 shall be allotted for congressional distribution"—that will leave the original amount of $295,100 to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in purchasing such seed as is contemplated in the first three lines at the top of page 25, and will also leave the right of the individual to apply for these seeds as he may desire. Does not the Senator think that taking the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma would meet the very object that the Senator from Iowa has in view?

Mr. KENYON. I did not hear the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma. My attention was diverted at the time. What was it?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma was, on line 12, page 25, after "$295,100," to strike out:

Of which amount not less than $256,100 shall be allotted for congressional distribution.

He proposes just to strike out the two lines, instead of the $295,100.

Mr. KENYON. Of course the difficulty with that is this: I notice in reading the section that it would be rather incongruous, because the Secretary is instructed under another section to go ahead and secure these competitive bids.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to suggest that if we should strike out, in lines 12 and 13, after "$295,100," the words down to "and," in line 13—that is to say, strike out the words:

Of which amount not less than $256,100 shall be allotted for congressional distribution—

And then go down to line 19, and, beginning with the last two words in that line, "and in," strike out the balance of that page, all of page 26, and all of page 27 down to:

Provided further, That $39,000 of which sum, or so much thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture shall direct, may be used for the purchase and distribution of drought-resistant field seeds through the Great Plains—

And so forth.

We will leave the Secretary of Agriculture with the appropriation and charged with the duty of using the money to investigate seed problems and distribute himself such seeds as in the opinion of the department might be valuable, and we will eliminate altogether the congressional distribution.

Mr. KENYON. I think the Senator's suggestion is valuable if we are prepared to appropriate that much money for that particular purpose. Does the Senator feel that the amount of $295,100 is necessary or desirable?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would add to the prior language:

Or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. DU PONT. That is what I have already suggested.

Mr. KENYON. I am inclined to think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It will be changed, then, to distribution by the department, the department being charged with distribution for the advancement of agriculture and for the benefits that can be derived from such a distribution.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa, and also the Senator from Georgia, why it would not be satisfactory to do this: If you want to leave in the amount, strike out all of the paragraph after the amount "$296,000," in line 11, down to the proviso on page 27; strike out all the remaining part. That will allow the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase, propagate, test, and distribute valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, and so forth.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It would then be limited to propagation and distribution.

Mr. JONES. Testing would be included, also.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Testing, propagation, and distribution; but he might deem it necessary to make some purchases for distribution.

Mr. JONES. He is allowed to purchase. It begins, "For purchase."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, yes; those are the first words. I do not think we need any of that language, then.

Mr. JONES. I suggest striking out all after the amount "$296,000," down to the proviso on page 27. I suggest that amendment.

Mr. DU PONT. I again suggest to the junior Senator from Iowa to insert the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. KENYON. I have had so many suggestions that I am a little confused, but I think I have it straightened out now. In order to clear the record, I am going to offer the amendment which I will state.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw the amendment he has already offered?

Mr. KENYON. I withdraw my other amendment, and offer the one I am about to state.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa is withdrawn. The Senator from Iowa now offers the amendment which will be stated.

Mr. KENYON. I move to insert on page 25, line 11, after "$296,000," the following:

Or so much thereof as may, in his judgment, be deemed necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's bill does not seem to correspond to the one in the hands of the Secretary as to the numbering of the lines.

The SECRETARY. On line 12, after "$295,100," is is proposed to insert:

Or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. KENYON. I should like to get this straightened out.

Mr. JONES. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the words "$296,000" have been struck out of the bill.

Mr. KENYON. Please let me get this straight. I move, after the figures "$295,100," in line 12, page 25, to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And I move to strike out all the balance of pages 25, 26 and 27, down to the words "Provided further," in line 17, page 27.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, line 12, after the numerals "$295,100," and after the comma, it is proposed to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And beginning with the words in line 12, "of which amount," it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the page, all of page 26, and all of page 27, down to and including the words "and plants," in line 17.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I want to be heard for just a moment before this is voted on. I want to say to the Senator from Iowa that the amount should be amended. I do not see any necessity for appropriating $295,100 for the purchase of seed if you are going to do away with the amount that is allotted to Members of Congress. I was simply going to suggest to the Senator to strike out the $295,100 and insert $50,000, and then put in the proviso. The ten or eleven thousand dollars could then be used for the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of these rare seeds.

Mr. KENYON. I will suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that the matter is left in the discretion and the wisdom of the Secretary of Agriculture. Assuming that he wants to make an experiment along the line that the Senator himself suggested, as to alfalfa, he has a fund at his command. He is not compelled, of course, to use it all. I have confidence that the present Secretary of Agriculture would not in any way abuse that privilege. Certainly the incoming Secretary will not do so. It leaves the fund at his disposal, to investigate and use in a proper way.

Mr. GRONNA. My impression is that if we are to do away with the congressional distribution of seeds we should really reduce the amount that should be appropriated.

Mr. KENYON. I should have no objection to that; in fact, favor it; but I think probably other Senators might.

Mr. GRONNA. We might limit the amount, say, to $100,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it is impossible for me to hear the Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Complaint is made that it is impossible for Senators to be heard. If Senators would address the Chair and face the Chair in conversing with each other, there would be less difficulty.

Mr. GRONNA. I was simply saying that if we do away with the distribution of seeds by Congress the total should be reduced. Instead of appropriating $295,100, we ought to reduce the total amount to about $100,000, and then say how much of it should be used for drought-resisting plants.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. DU PONT. I would suggest that the difficulty is that we have no exact figures; and as this is a committee amendment I suggest that the whole subject should be reviewed in conference. It can be better adjusted there than it possibly can be done here in the Senate.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator, now pending, would strike out the provision of this act which requires a report to be made by the Secretary of the seeds purchased, and so forth, and would also strike out the only provision at all for the distribution of seeds. Senators will notice that in line 8, page 27, there is the only provision for such report and for the distribution of such seed. That is in line 8 and following, down to and including a portion of line 13. That is the only provision for a report from the Secretary and the only provision whatsoever for the distribution of the seeds, except that theretofore contained in the paragraph providing for the distribution by Congress. How these seeds, if the amendment is to be adopted as suggested, would be distributed the Secretary can inform us.

Mr. KENYON. I assume that if there were no direction to the Secretary to distribute, it would not interfere with his right.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator would confine his amendment to striking out all on page 27 down to the words "And provided also," in line 8, but leave the amount to which they are entitled, and provide for a report by the Secretary as to the method of distribution; that is, on the application of people who actually want the seeds, this, Mr. President, would be an amendment to the amendment now pending. I move that the matter stricken out end with the word "department," in line 8 on page 27, leaving the balance of the paragraph on page 27 to stand.

Mr. KENYON. If it is proper, I will accept that amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, line 12, after the numerals "$295,100" and after the comma, insert the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary," and, beginning on line 12, strike out all of the bill down to and including the word "department," in line 8, on page 27.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I think the amount for drought-resisting seed should be increased somewhat, and on page 27, line 18, I move to strike out the amount "$39,000" and insert "$75,000."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Secretary would have the right to use any part he saw fit now, under the bill.

Mr. JONES. I think that is probably true.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I really do not think the provision at the close of page 27 is required at all, but I thought probably we had best not strike it out. He might say he must put them out in that way. But the whole matter for the first year will be left to the Secretary of Agriculture.

We are simply saying to him we are not cutting down the money to be spent for seeds, but we are going to quit distributing them politically, and we are going to see for one year what you will do with it, and when we get the report we will either reduce it or govern ourselves by the result of our experience. I know we are improving on what is going on now.

Mr. JONES. I agree with the Senator, but I was afraid if we left the provision in the Secretary would think it was a direction to use not more than $39,000 for these seeds. I know the supply is short because I have had many requests refused. So it seems to me by leaving the amount we have standing it will not do any harm.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Suppose we just provided that so much thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture shall think necessary may be used for the purchase and distribution of drought-resisting seeds, striking out the appropriation of $30,000.

Mr. JONES. That would be agreeable to me.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if the Secretary did not state to the committee that $39,000 would be sufficient under the conditions now existing for the purchase and distribution of these drought-resisting seeds?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We will be leaving it entirely to the Secretary of Agriculture. We strike out the words "thirty-nine thousand dollars" and leave it broadly for the first year to see what he can do with it. We may feel sure that he will not do worse than it was before.

Mr. JONES. And not specify any amount at all?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Strike out the amount.

Mr. JONES. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 18, strike out "$39,000 of which sum or," so as to read:

Provided further, That so much thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture shall direct may be used, etc.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not carry. I want the next Secretary of Agriculture, whoever he may be, to be bound to consider this alfalfa question. I do not want to leave it entirely in his discretion as to how much he can use for that purpose. I want every dollar's worth of seed that can possibly be purchased from abroad to be brought into this country next year for distribution in the country. The Secretary evidently seems to think he can use at least $39,100. My own belief is that he can find seeds enough to amount to at least $50,000.

It was my intention to move to increase the appropriation to $50,000, so as not to leave it discretionary with the Secretary of Agriculture to select what he himself felt that he would like to give. Having determined ourselves that these seeds are very valuable, we ought to determine at least that the Secretary shall spend so much for them. I do not want to leave it in his discretion, but to compel the purchase of every pound and every bushel that can be purchased for distribution until we equal the demand in this country.

Therefore, I hope the amendment to strike out "$39,000," leaving it in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, will not be adopted.

Mr. FALL. Does the Senator think that the Secretary of Agriculture understands, if we use the term "drought resisting," that it covers the "cold-resisting" seeds in which the Senator is interested? For instance, the Siberian alfalfa which has been under discussion here is a cold-resisting plant——

Mr. McCUMBER. As well as a drought-resisting plant.

Mr. FALL. And not solely a drought-resisting plant. As I understand the object of the Senator from North Dakota, it is to secure seeds which are suitable for that climate, and I think that is perfectly proper, just as it is the object of Senators from the Southwest to secure seeds which are suitable for our region.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think that it is necessary, however, to insert the words "cold resisting."

Mr. FALL. If the Senator is satisfied, I am.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not think any change is necessary, because the region where it is cold is also afflicted with drought in almost all cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What is the amendment now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 18, strike out "$39,000 of which sum, or."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move to strike out the figures "$39,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$50,000," so that it will read "$50,000 of which sum, or so much thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture shall direct," and so forth.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. At first, Mr. President, I was disposed to insist that it was hardly fair to undertake to press for the distribution of this particular class of seed in this way. We have a vastly larger product—that of lint cotton. I might well ask that $200,000, in the same proportion, be devoted to the selection of boll-weevil resisting seed and certain other diseases of the cotton plant. But this experimentation in the dry section is new in its nature, and the immediate use of more for that section is probably a pressing necessity. While I am opposed to the idea of our undertaking to classify the distribution, I am going to vote for the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish the attention of the Senate for a brief time before the passage of the Agriculture appropriation bill. I regard the agricultural appropriations as the most useful made by Congress. I believe we can be more absolutely sure that each dollar spent through this bill brings more than a dollar's worth of return to the general public than we can of any other appropriation.

We can not overestimate the importance to all the people of the successful management of farms in our country. Over one-third of our population are actively engaged upon farms. Not only is this true, but the balance of the people must depend upon the successful culture of the soil for their food supply, for most of the raw material that enters into our industries, for the chief part of our export trade that brings yearly balances in our international settlements, and also for a class of splendid men, strong mentally, morally, and physically, the result in part of the privilege of rural life.

Mr. President, I am gratified we can justly claim that during the past two years we have done something more substantial than before for farm life. We have established a parcel post, which, with its cost varying according to the length of distance packages are to be carried, will enable the farmer to send his small products readily to market, carrying them directly to consumers, and also get back to his farm easily the smaller commodities which he wishes to buy.

We have pending a measure which will carry all the knowledge which has been acquired during the past 25 years in the colleges of agriculture and experiment stations to the farmer on his farm. This measure may not pass at the present session, but it has been fully discussed and its value has been presented to Congress and to the country. It will certainly become a law in the near future.

We have in this bill a provision presented by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] by which the National Government is to aid in the study of farm loans. We have also in this bill a provision with reference to a market division to be established in the Department of Agriculture.

I desire, Mr. President, to present a few facts with reference to the proposed market division.

Twelve months ago we passed the same measure through the Senate; it went to the House, and the House conferees, instead of passing it, gave us an appropriation to investigate the value of such work. When the report as a result of that appropriation was completed, a splendid showing was presented of what might be accomplished by the proposed division of markets.

The Senate then passed the original bill and sent it to the House independent of the appropriation bill; it went to the Committee on Agriculture and a unanimous report from the Committee on Agriculture was made in favor of it, and it is now pending in the House. So when we send this measure to the House on the Agricultural appropriation bill now, it is after a most thorough investigation both in the House and in the Senate.

Since the passage of this bill at the last session of Congress the necessity for furnishing information upon the subject of marketing crops both in the interest of farmers and consumers has been commended by numerous agricultural publications and by the press generally. It has also been made the subject of investigation and discussion by men who devote time to the study of economic problems, and I am yet to see an unfavorable expression with reference to it. I believed in it when we considered it before; I am impressed with its necessity now.

Farmers are scattered throughout the country, and to a great extent isolated. The facility for the acquirement of accurate information about how to market their products is limited. Among few of them is their cooperation in the all-important problem of obtaining money for what their labors produce.

The waste which takes place between the producer and the consumer is startling.

Mr. B. F. Yoakum has recently contributed a most interesting article upon the "High cost of selling," and in this connection has urged the tremendous saving that can be made by concerted action on the part of producer and consumer if the Government will gather the information needed and point out to the farmers and to the consumers of farm products how savings can be made.

He estimates that the sale of the crops of 1912 yielded to the farmers $6,000,000,000, and that these same crops when they reached the consumers cost the enormous sum of $13,000,000,000; or, in other words, that the consumers paid $7,000,000,000 more for the crops than the farmers received. He estimates that of this $7,000,000,000, less than $500,000,000 were received by the railroads for transportation, leaving $6,500,000 of loss between the producer and the consumer in excess of the cost of transportation. Allowing to the dealers and retailers $3,745,000,000, he still leaves

$2,760,000,000 paid by the consumers in excess of what the farmers and the railroads received and the retailers' profits. His conclusion is that an enormous waste takes place between the producer and the consumer, which, properly studied by a department of the Government equipped for the work, can be saved and which, divided between producer and consumer, would average $200 per annum per family.

The Saturday Evening Post gave, not long ago, some interesting figures, the result of a careful investigation as to what the farmers received and the consumers of the city of New York paid for the following articles of food:

	Paid to farmer.	Paid by consumer.
Eggs	$17,238,000	$28,730,000
Cabbage	1,825,000	9,125,000
Onions	821,000	8,212,000
Milk	22,912,000	48,880,000
Potatoes	8,437,000	60,000,000

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A report published by authority of the city of New York last year showed the annual total food supply at the city terminals of New York City cost $350,000,000. This included freight charges, yet the consumers in New York City paid $500,000,000 for the same food. It was estimated that the difference in this cost was largely in handling it, and only a small part went in profits to the dealers.

Dr. Holmes, of the Agricultural Department, after making a careful investigation of the difference between what the producer receives and the consumer pays, has reached the conclusion that the consumer pays for his vegetables, fruits, poultry, and dairy products on an average twice as much as the farmer receives.

Secretary Wilson has expressed the same opinion when he said:

> The consumer pays $1 for food; the farmer gets less than 50 cents for it. Who gets the balance?

We may not hope that this vast sum reaching into the billions can be saved either to the farmers or to the families in the cities, but we can not doubt that immense waste takes place which a better system of selling and a more intelligent system of buying will largely overcome. It is to the study of these problems that the market division in the Agricultural Department must be devoted.

For a number of years the Government has been seeking to test out truths which will enable the farmer to increase the productiveness of his soil while he lessens the cost of production. This work is of much importance, and I hope for far greater results from it in the future.

All knowledge which can facilitate the productiveness of our agricultural resources is essential to our national prosperity and to the prosperity and independence of the individual farmer, but the farmer is entitled to more than a mere increase of crop yield. To bring that prosperity on the farm, which those who till the soil are entitled to have, farmers must sell their products at prices which will give them profit in money. To accomplish this the Government must take up the subject of marketing farm products with the same energy that it devotes to the production of farm products.

While the farmer is shown how to vary his products and to increase them, he should be given the necessary information which will enable him to sell these products in the best markets at the best prices, and how to avoid the waste which frequently falls upon the farmer from not knowing how to find a profitable market.

The present appropriation proposes to begin the work of the market division in only a small way, but I have no doubt in a few years half a million dollars a year can be spent with immense advantage to our people as individuals and to the Nation as a whole in this work.

It is proposed, through the division of markets, to investigate systems of marketing farm products, cooperative and otherwise, in practice in the various sections of the United States and foreign countries and collect data with reference thereto. The information and data thus collected is to be distributed to farmers, farmers' organizations, and societies of consumers throughout the various sections of the country and be made available for the use of individuals and organizations, either by the circulation of printed bulletins and telegrams or by information given personally by special agents of the Agricultural Department.

It is to be made the duty of the head of this bureau to investigate the demand for farm products in various trade centers and give specific data as to supply, normal demand, and prices, with a view of furnishing information as to the best available markets. It is to be the work of this division of markets, by telegraph, telephone, mail, or otherwise, to report to farmers and farmers' organizations and societies of consumers such information and statistics as will enable them to adopt plans of marketing that may facilitate the handling of farm products at the least cost and greatest advantage.

The farmer has only done half of his work when he makes his crop; the other half is selling it. Properly managed, in a few years the market division in the Agricultural Department, for which this bill provides, will immensely aid the farmer in that part of his work which is to make his crop bring him a just price.

When we realize that the final consumer pays twice as much for what the farmer raises as the farmer himself receives, it is evident that by better modes of selling and better modes of buying the farmer can increase his prices. I see in this work a great service to all engaged in agricultural pursuits, while at the same time it can lessen the cost of living to the balance of our citizens.

I wish to add an extract from the report of Dr. Holmes on this subject which was contained in the report of the Agricultural Committee of the House. I ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The extract is as follows:

RECOMMENDATIONS BY DR. HOLMES—OUTLINE OF SERVICE OF MARKET DIVISION.

1. A survey of the systems of marketing farm products clearly discovers what the farmers can best do to their advantage. They must associate themselves together for the purpose of assembling their individual contributions of products, of shipping in carload lots, of obtaining market news at places to which it is practicable to send their products, to sell in a considerable number of markets if not in many markets, and to secure the various other economic gains of associative selling. But farmers need some help in establishing associations. They always need a leader for such purpose, and there may be no leader.

A division of markets could perform excellent service in helping farmers to help themselves to organize marketing associations. These associations could either handle their products until sold in various markets or could ship their products to a noncooperative marketing agency which would take charge of the entire business of distribution from a central receiving point. It seems not always to be feasible to market products cooperatively, or, at any rate, the producers are not always disposed to do so. However that may be, there are many noncooperative marketing agencies in this country that are performing excellent service for farmers, and some of them are doing a business of immense proportions. A division of markets, equipped with a corps of competent field agents, could get into touch with farmers for the purpose of promoting the organization of marketing associations wherever the farmers request assistance or information; the agent could meet the assembled farmers and practically organize them if they desired.

It can hardly be doubted that this service can be successfully performed and, eventually, with results greatly beneficial to farmers.

The traveling field agents also could perform good service in examining into the affairs of weak and unsuccessful marketing associations and advise changes for their improvement.

2. Farmers may organize well for selling their products, and they may receive daily from their markets all that could be desired in information relating to prices and to existing market conditions, but this is not all that they need for the businesslike marketing of their products. They should know what the production of the crop is to be, and this information is equally important to consumers.

For many years the Department of Agriculture has estimated the production of principal crops after harvest, and during the last year or so has been indicating the prospective production of some of the principal crops a short time before harvest. A knowledge of what the crop is to be is most essential in marketing. As soon as the farmer begins to harvest he should have in mind a fairly definite idea of the volume of the crop throughout the country in order that he may occupy a place in the market that is fair to himself, or, as the case may be, a place in the market that is fair to the consumer.

The crop-reporting service of the Department of Agriculture has never included in its quantitative estimates the vegetable, fruit, and berry crops. Trustworthy estimates of the production of these crops require a system different from that in use for estimating the production of the cereal crops, for instance, and estimates for these crops can not be made without the expenditure of much money.

If a division of markets is established, it should be equipped for ascertaining, in connection with the other crop-reporting service of the department, the prospective quantitative production of all vegetable, fruit, berry, and other crops that are of considerable commercial account, the production of which is not now estimated quantitatively by this department. For this purpose local correspondents could be employed, and in addition to these it would be necessary to employ, under salary, local agents and traveling field agents.

3. Marketing associations have at least fairly well worked out the problems of grading and packing products, but the independent producer is poorly equipped with knowledge concerning this subject, and even the associations do not agree in practice where it would be better for them and for the consumer if they did.

It is desirable, therefore, that a division of markets, if established, should be authorized to investigate the subjects of the grading and packing of products, and also the subject of the character of the package or container, the questions of weights and measures, and the peculiar problems of market preferences. Uniformity in practice in grading and packing may not be everywhere feasible throughout as large a country as the United States, but undoubtedly it should be greatly promoted. The same remark applies to weights and measures and the size and character of packages and containers.

4. General market news service is not recommended. If such service were derived from telegraphic reports, the expense would be enormous. If derived from reports of local agents sent by mail, the expense would be large and the service would not be prompt. Whatever this service might practically be, it would not be useful to marketing associations and agencies, for the reason that they would already know the facts from their own sources of information before the department's report could reach them.

There may be a telegraphic service, however, outside of news at markets, which would be new and serviceable, consisting of prompt reports of the time of the beginning of shipments from places of chief production, the time of the ending of shipments from such places, and, perhaps, reports of the quantities of shipments, actual and prospective, from the principal shipping places. The expense of such undertakings, however, would be large.

5. As previously indicated, if a division of markets is established it should be provided with a corps of traveling field agents and a large corps of local agents and correspondents. The various utilities of these agents and correspondents may be partly itemized as follows:

To help producers to organize for marketing cooperatively or through a noncooperative agency; the examination of local difficulties; to help producers to find markets; to report the current descriptive condition of crops in addition to the work already done by the department's crop-reporting service; to estimate the probable production of crops a short time before harvest; to report the beginning and ending of the shipping season; to report the crop movement from producing points through "gateways" to principal markets.

6. A division of markets must naturally be concerned with problems of transportation. It should be empowered to ascertain the facts with regard to the routes, methods, time, and costs of transportation by all kinds of carriers from chief producing to chief marketing points and for such minor points as will provide information that will be required by the public.

7. Storage has become an important feature in the distribution of farm products, and a division of markets should be able to investigate public storage rates and accommodations at all points, and also the subject of storage in transit, and to compile data comparing the gains or losses due to selling just after harvest with those due to selling after a period of storage. The storage may be either on the farm or elsewhere.

8. The business of a commission merchant is of such high importance in the distribution of farm products that his business should be a subject for investigation by a division of markets. If a list of trustworthy, honest, honorable commission merchants could be established and published, it would be of service to farmers. A list of commission merchants in a city for which the board of trade or chamber of commerce will stand as sponsor might be published by the department.

9. It is a matter of some importance that the costs of the distribution of all farm products from producer to consumer should be investigated. These costs should be itemized, and their total should be compared with prices at the farm and with consumers' prices.

10. A description of principal markets should be prepared and published. Among the items of the information to be covered in such description would be the hour of opening market places; the local fancies of consumers; how products are handled; the relative supply, by months, throughout the year; the course of prices; methods of sale, as through the commission merchant or wholesale dealer, at auction, etc.; imports from foreign markets.

11. A description of chief producing regions would have some utility. It might well be devoted to the characteristics of the products, the methods of marketing, the places where products are marketed, producers' prices, competition with other producing regions, etc.

12. Notwithstanding the decline of exports of some important farm products, the export trade is still of enormous amount, and probably will be so for an indefinite time. There are many agricultural producers to whom information with regard to foreign markets might be useful, who are not now exporting and are not likely to export unless provided with information. For some products, such as fresh apples, other fruits, some of the vegetables, and other products with minor exports, information might well be published concerning the method of reaching foreign markets, methods of selling in them, prices, gross and net, costs of exporting, the best time to export, and difficulties, if any, in connection with the tariff, etc.

13. To make, keep, and publish an elaborate record of prices of farm products would be a useful service that could be performed by a division of markets. Among the classes of prices that might well be compiled are producers' prices at the farm, wholesale prices, and retail prices.

14. It would be important that a division of markets should make, maintain, and publish a list of associations for marketing farm products and of agencies for marketing for associations of farmers and a list of buying associations and agencies of associations of consumers. In addition to these, annual statistics should be collected and published concerning the business done by marketing associations.

15. The experience of marketing associations in foreign countries for possible utilization by producers in this country should be ascertained and made known to them, and for this purpose a division of markets should investigate the systems of marketing farm products in other countries and publish the results, especial attention being given to those features which it may be presumed might be adopted beneficially in this country.

16. For much of the work of a division of markets dependence would need to be placed on publications, including periodicals, and it should be authorized to expend a large amount in the beginning and a liberal amount annually for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a library.

17. A division of markets must necessarily publish bulletins, circulars, and information in other forms. The results of its investigations of the facts pertaining to particular topics and problems must continually present themselves for publication, and provision should be made therefor.

18. A cheapening of farmer's costs of marketing will naturally result in gain to the producer rather than to the consumer. If the consumer is to gain by changes in the cost of distribution, it seems probable that he must do so through cheapening or eliminating costs at his end of the chain of distribution. Consumers can cheapen the costs of farm products by cooperative buying and by reducing the expenses of retail and other local distribution. The consumers' aspect of the problems of the distribution of farm products is a conspicuous one at the present time, and problems in distribution that are concerning the consumer rather than the producer may well be included within the service of a division of markets. The foregoing recommendations are repeated for service in behalf of consumers as far as applicable.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. DU PONT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Crawford	La Follette	Sheppard
Bankhead	Culberson	Lea	Simmons
Bourne	Cullom	Lippitt	Smith, Ga.
Bradley	Cummins	Lodge	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Curtis	McCumber	Smoot
Bristow	Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Stephenson
Brown	du Pont	Martine, N. J.	Sutherland
Bryan	Fall	Nelson	Thornton
Burnham	Fletcher	Newlands	Tillman

Catron	Gardner	Owen	Warren
Chilton	Gronna	Page	Webb
Clapp	Guggenheim	Perkins	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	Kavanaugh	Richardson	Williams
Crane	Kenyon	Root	Works

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the roll 60 Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Senate omnibus pension bills on the calendar.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WEBB. For just a moment. I wish to ask the present consideration of a bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand the Senator from Tennessee, who will only be with us a very few days, has a matter in charge which he desires to get before the Senate, and I feel that I ought to yield to him especially for that purpose.

PREVENTION OF DESECRATION OF FLAG.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8487) to prevent the desecration of the flag of the United States and to provide punishment therefor. It carries no appropriation. It passed the Senate in the Fifty-eighth and Sixtieth Congresses. I should like to have present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill, which will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that whoever shall place or cause to be placed any word, figure, mark, picture, or design upon any flag, standard, or ensign of the United States, or who shall expose or cause to be exposed to public view any such flag, standard, or ensign upon which shall have been placed any word figure, mark, picture, or design, or to which shall be attached, appended, affixed, or annexed any word, figure, mark, picture, or design or any advertisement of any nature, or who shall expose to public view, manufacture, sell or expose for sale, give away, or have in possession for sale or to give away, or for use for any purpose, any article of merchandise, or anything for carrying or transporting merchandise, upon which shall have been placed a representation of any such flag, standard, or ensign, to advertise, call attention to, decorate, mark, or distinguish, for the purpose of sale, barter, or trade, the article or thing upon which so placed, or who shall publicly or privately mutilate, deface, defile or defy, trample upon, or cast contempt, either by words or act, upon any such flag, standard, or ensign, shall be fined not more than $500 or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

Section 2 provides that the words "flag," "standard," or "ensign" as used in this act shall include any picture or representation thereof, made of or represented on any substance and of any size, evidently purporting to be of said flag, standard, or ensign, and any representation of any such flag, standard, or ensign, or any part thereof, upon which shall be shown the colors, the stars, or the stripes, or any combination thereof, of any such flag, standard, or ensign, which the person seeing the same, without deliberation, may believe to represent such flag, standard, or ensign, or part thereof.

Section 3 provides that this act shall not apply to any newspaper, periodical, book, pamphlet, circular, certificate, diploma, warrant, commission or appointment to office, ornamental picture, badges, or stationery, for use in correspondence, on any of which shall be printed, painted, or placed any such flag, ensign, or standard, disconnected from any advertisement for the purpose of sale, barter, or trade; nor shall it apply to any act permitted by the Army or Navy regulations of the United States; nor shall it apply to any flag, standard, or ensign belonging to a Grand Army post, a camp of the Legion of Spanish War Veterans, or which is the property or is used in the service of the United States or of any State or Territory, upon which shall be placed the names of battles or the name and number of any organization lawfully entitled to the use thereof; nor shall it apply to any patriotic organization or society; nor shall it apply to any patriotic demonstration or decorations.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Senate omnibus pension bills upon the Calendar.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCUMBER. I would rather not yield now.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McCUMBER. I would rather get up the bills first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from North Dakota has asked for unanimous consent, and I wish to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. WARREN. I wish to give my acquiescence conditionally. I wish to say that if these bills lead to any extended discussion I shall feel it necessary to object to their consideration.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to ask a question of the Chair. Can not the chairman of the Committee on Pensions indicate the bills by number that we are to take up?

Mr. McCUMBER. I can. They are Order of Business 1063; Order of Business 1064, which contains but 13 names; Order of Business 1109, which contains 15 names; Order of Business 1110; and Order of Business 1150, which contains but 7 names. The bills for which I ask consideration are Senate pension bills which I desire to have disposed of so as to get them over to the other House.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no desire to enter an objection, but I have two bills for the consideration of which I should like unanimous consent later; one is a local bill and the other a general bill touching the subject of executions, which I think is of very great importance to the public generally. I do not believe there will be any discussion about it.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I yielded to the Senator from Ohio to do so, there are other Senators here who would object to any unanimous-consent agreement. So I can not yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota for the consideration of the pension bills referred to by him? The Chair hears none, and the bills will be considered in their order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 8400) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors. It proposes to pension the following-named persons at the rates per month stated:

Martha E. S. Blodgett, widow of Martin Blodgett, late of Company C, Thirty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Benjamin F. Jay, late of Company A, Forty-fifth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary J. Thomas, widow of George S. Thomas, late of Company E, Fifty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Michael Kearns, late of Company I, Twenty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Benjamin Wentworth, late of the Fifth Battery, First Battalion Maine Volunteer Light Artillery, $12 per month.

George W. Doan, late of Company H, Twenty-fourth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Nathaniel J. Smith, late of Company L, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

George W. Vincent, late of Company H, Eighteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Martha Benner, widow of George Benner, late of Company E, One hundred and ninety-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Edward Hearin, late of Company G, Twentieth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Minnie A. Piety, widow of Austin H. Piety, late captain Company G, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Anna M. Thomas, widow of Edward S. Thomas, late of Company F, Fifth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Ellen Maher, widow of David Maher, late of Company F, Twenty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

James W. New, late of Company G, Sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

William H. Sumption, late first lieutenant Company E, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Ida E. Carter, widow of Thomas Carter, late of Company A, Seventeenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Lavina G. Clark, widow of Andrew E. Clark, late captain Company F, Twenty-sixth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Ellen Beam, widow of Martin Beam, late of Company G, Sixty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Judson P. Adams, late of Company F, One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month.

Emily C. Thompson, widow of William P. Thompson, late of Topeka Battery, Second Regiment Kansas Volunteer State Militia, $12 per month.

Emelia Branner, widow of John S. Branner, late of Topeka Battery, Second Regiment Kansas Volunteer State Militia, $12 per month.

Charles Shattuck, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary E. Spraberry, widow of Jerry D. Spraberry, late of Company B, Tenth Regiment, and Company G, Second Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, $12 per month.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I move to insert a new paragraph in the bill, as follows:

The name of Anne G. Hawkins, widow of Hamilton S. Hawkins, late brigadier general, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator to defer that amendment and to move it upon the next bill, because this bill refers only to the Regular Army.

Mr. DU PONT. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 8399) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors. It proposes to pension the following-named persons at the rates per month stated:

Charles M. Gregory, late of Company C, Thirty-fifth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Leonard C. Wiswell, late of Company E, Thirty-ninth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, $30 per month.

Frank Lytle, late of Troop E, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Margaret R. Birchfield, widow of James C. Birchfield, late of Company I, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, $12 per month and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of the said James C. Birchfield until they reach the age of 16 years.

Amanda Woodcock, widow of Robert Woodcock, late unassigned recruit, Fourth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, War with Mexico, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Luther Thompson, late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, War with Spain, $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Fred F. Harris, late of Battery A, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Heavy Artillery, War with Spain, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

August T. Lillich, late of Company G, Thirtieth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, $12 per month.

Charles F. Miller, late of Company G, Seventeenth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

George W. Hale, late of Company B, First Regiment United States Infantry, War with Mexico, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Frank A. Hill, late of Troop G, First Regiment United States Volunteer Cavalry, War with Spain, $17 per month.

George S. Pauer, late of Company D, Thirteenth Regiment United States Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Gilbert J. Jackson, late of Company H, Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, $8 per month.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 3, line 18, after the words "rate of," I move to strike out "$20" and in lieu thereof to insert "$12."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 18, after the words "rate of," it is proposed to strike out "$20" and to insert "$12," so as to read:

The name of George S. Pauer, late of Company D, Thirteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DU PONT. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted as a new paragraph at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 22, it is proposed to insert:

The name of Anne G. Hawkins, widow of Hamilton S. Hawkins, late brigadier general, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I move to add to the pending bill the following amendment:

The name of Mary MacArthur, widow of Arthur MacArthur, late lieutenant general, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $100 per month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will be concurred in. The Senator from Wisconsin proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, at what amount was the bill which the Senator from Wisconsin offers as an amendment reported by the Senate committee?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. At $75 per month.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin by striking out "the sum of $100" and inserting in lieu thereof "the sum of $75," that being the amount for which the bill was reported by the Senate committee. I think that will keep it very much more in harmony with the allowances which have been made in other like cases.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the House passed this bill at $100, and I find in the House report the following precedents for making an allowance of $100 per month in the case of the widow of a soldier of this rank:

The widow of Gen. Corse was pensioned at $100 per month; the widow of Gen. Custer, the widow of Gen. Kilpatrick, the widow of Gen. Gibbon, the widow of Gen. Gresham, the widow of Gen. Hartranft, the widow of Gen. Mower, the widow of Admiral Schley, the widow of Gen. Shields, the widow of Gen. Wallen, the widow of Gen. Warren, and the widow of Gen. Whitaker.

Mr. President, Gen. MacArthur had a most exceptional record. I do not want to take up a moment's time—and it is suggested to me that it is needless to offer any suggestions in support of my motion—but I do want to see it adopted, because I think it will be an act of gross injustice not to do so. It appears from this report—and I feel that I must put this portion of it into the RECORD—that the widow of Gen. MacArthur, Mary Pinkney MacArthur, is now in destitute circumstances and very poor health. When application for this pension was made a verified statement was filed by the widow showing her circumstances, which, considering the high rank of her late husband and the distinguished services rendered by him to the country, would justify a pension rate far in excess of the rate of the House bill or of the pending amendment. Mrs. MacArthur's statement was as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 9, 1913.

I do herein declare that I have no income of any sort from any source. My only property consists of my household effects and about $1,500, and that my support literally went with the death of my husband, Lieut. Gen. Arthur MacArthur.

I am entirely dependent for support on the charity of my young son, who is a captain in the Army. I was born in Virginia May 22, 1852, and am, therefore, 61 years of age, May, 1913.

MARY PINKNEY MACARTHUR.

On the 13th of January the major of the Medical Staff of the United States Army, John A. Murtagh, made this certificate as to her condition:

Mrs. MacArthur has been a chronic invalid since December, 1910. From that date until September, 1912, she was confined to her bed. Since September she has been able to be up part of each day under favorable conditions of weather and climate.

She has been suffering for years from a state of faulty metabolism, which has resulted in a gradual poisoning of her system, producing a condition of acute neurasthenia, accompanied by nervous disorders of the heart. At her present advanced age and in her completely broken-down condition, the chances of a recovery of health, I regret to say, are very slight.

JOHN A. MURTAGH,
Major, Medical Corps, United States Army.

Arthur MacArthur entered the service in 1862, when he was but two months past 17 years of age. He was commissioned a second lieutenant, and because of his valor, courage, accurate judgment, and mastery of his profession was steadily advanced in rank. At the close of the Civil War he was mustered out as colonel of his regiment, the Twenty-fourth Wisconsin.

He entered the Regular Army in 1866 as a second lieutenant. The same qualities which won for him place and distinction in the volunteer service brought him recognition and promotion in the Army. Every promotion, every commendation received by him came as the result of conspicuously able service. He rose through all the grades until, after more than 47 years of service, he was appointed lieutenant general, the twelfth and last officer in the history of the Army of the United States to attain that rank.

In the Civil War he participated in all the important battles in which his regiment took part. The record of Arthur MacArthur as lieutenant, captain, major, and colonel, as revealed in the reports of the commanding officers in the field, is one not only of glory, of pride to his family, but of honor to his State and to his country. One short paragraph in the committee report upon this bill, which is in no sense an adequate description of the services of Gen. MacArthur at that period, will convey to the Senate an idea of the high esteem in which his services were held by the commanding officers and by the Congress, for he was honored by the conferring of the congressional medal of honor because of heroism. The report says:

Because of his heroism he was awarded the congressional medal of honor, "for coolness and conspicuous bravery in action" in saving the colors of his regiment at a critical moment and planting them on the captured works on the crest of Missionary Ridge, November 25, 1863, while serving as first lieutenant and adjutant, Twenty-fourth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. He was awarded the brevet rank of lieutenant colonel March 13, 1865, "for gallant and meritorious services in the Battles of Perryville, Ky., Stone River, Missionary Ridge, and Danbridge, Tenn." He was awarded the brevet rank of colonel March 13, 1865, for "gallant and meritorious services in the Battle of Franklin, Tenn., and the Atlanta campaign." He received numerous honorable mentions in orders and reports.

A list of the battles in which he fought discloses that he was always in the fighting. He participated in the following battles:

October 8, 1862, Battle of Perryville.
December 30, 1862, Battle of Stone River.
November 25, 1863, Battle of Missionary Ridge.
May 9, 1864, Battle of Danbridge.
May 14, 1864, Battle of Resaca.
May 17, 1864, Battle of Calhoun.
May 18, 1864, Battle of Adairsville.

May 25, 1864, Battle of Dallas.
June 16, 1864, Battle of Lost Mountain.
June 27, 1864, Battle of Kenesaw Mountain.
July 4, 1864, Battle of Nicajack Creek.
July 6–10, 1864, battles incident to forcing the crossing of the Chattahoochee River.
July 20, 1864, Battle of Peach Tree Creek.
July 22, 1864, Battle of Atlanta.
September 1, 1864, Battle of Jonesboro.
September 2, 1864, Battle of Lovejoy.
November 20, 1864, Battle of Spring Hill.
November 30, 1864, Battle of Franklin.

In January, 1864, he was promoted to the rank of major and from that time until the close of the war commanded his regiment in all the engagements and battles in which it participated. He was wounded in battle five times. Shot in the right breast and right wrist at Kenesaw Mountain, he refused to leave the field but continued to lead until the close of the engagement. At the Battle of Franklin, after his regiment had been greatly reduced, he led it in a fierce hand-to-hand encounter with the enemy. In this battle he received three severe wounds.

For 20 years after he entered the Regular Army in 1866 he served in the Indian campaigns in the West and Southwest. In the War with Spain he was commissioned a brigadier general of Volunteers and assigned to duty in the Philippines. He participated in the capture of Manila. For services in that battle he was made a major general of Volunteers and for two years he was in command of and successfully and with great ability prosecuted the campaign to suppress the Philippine insurrection.

Every Senator, I assume, is familiar with these latter services of Gen. MacArthur. His whole life was given to hazardous, trying service to our country.

He was a soldier. He was a patriot. History will accord to him high station among those who served in the war to preserve the Union and in the campaigns on the border and in the War with Spain.

Gen. MacArthur was in no sense a hoarder of the things highly prized by those who serve self instead of country.

The inventory of his estate contains no items showing the acquisition of profitable stocks or bonds or property of any kind. All that he had he gave his country. All he received was the salary of his position. This he devoted to the care of his family. A man of great and varied attainments, had he devoted even a part of the years he served the Government to some other vocation his widow would not be compelled to file the statement as to her circumstances which she made to the committee of the House of Representatives.

The amount of pension provided in the report of the Senate committee is, in my opinion, not at all commensurate with the service of this heroic soldier. The House passed a bill granting her a pension of $100 a month. As has been set forth in the report accompanying the bill, there are a number of precedents for the rate asked in that amendment and provided in the House bill. If it was at another time and there was no danger of defeating the bill, I should make an effort to secure a pension for Mrs. MacArthur at a higher rating. As it is the closing hours of a short session, and I feel that she should not be deprived longer of this money, there remains nothing to do but to accept the rate fixed by the House. I trust the Senate will agree to the amendment providing her with the inadequate sum of $100 a month.

Mr. McCUMBER. Inasmuch as this is a House bill and the report from which the Senator from Wisconsin has read is a House report——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is.

Mr. McCUMBER. And inasmuch as the bill was introduced and reported as a separate proposition in the Senate, not having the facts before me at this time, I prefer to withdraw my amendment to the amendment and allow the matter to go to conference, where it can be considered more fully.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] will be agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 8540) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors. It proposes to pension the following-named persons at the rates per month stated:

Eleanor P. Bigler, widow of Henry W. Bigler, late of Company B, Mormon Battalion, Iowa Volunteers, War with Mexico, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Arthur F. Shepherd, late of Company H, First Regiment Nebraska Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, $12 per month.

Margaret B. Sherman, widow of Francis H. Sherman, late lieutenant commander, United States Navy, and commodore, United States Navy, retired, $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

La Salle Corbell Pickett, widow of George E. Pickett, late captain, Ninth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Mexico, $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Petrona B. Freeman, dependent mother of Richard K. Freeman, late of Company B, First Regiment North Carolina Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Emma Z. Gilman, widow of Samuel D. Gilman, late of Company A, First Regiment Idaho Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, $12 per month.

Mary Bottino, dependent mother of Celestin Bottino, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, $12 per month.

Ellen Barrett, widow of Henry H. Barrett, late of Capt. R. L. Williams's company, Ninth Regiment Oregon Militia Volunteers, Oregon Indian war, $12 per month.

James Tiernan, late of Battery G, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, and Forty-first Company, United States Coast Artillery, $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

John Partello, late of Company I, First Regiment United States Infantry, $12 per month.

James W. Ellis, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

John A. Lennon, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, $12 per month.

Estelle H. Wholley, widow of John H. Wholley, late major, Second Regiment United States Infantry, $35 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of the said John H. Wholley until he reaches the age of 16 years.

Frances P. O'Reilly, widow of Robert M. O'Reilly, late major general and surgeon general, United States Army, $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Lewis L. Daniel, late of Company K, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 2, line 9, I move to strike out the name "La Salle," and to insert in lieu thereof the name "Sallie." That is to correct the Pension Office record.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 2 I move to strike out lines 22 to 25, inclusive, as follows:

The name of Mary Bottino, dependent mother of Celestin Bottino, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to follow line 6, on page 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 6, on page 4, it is proposed to insert:

The name of Adolph Lochwitz, late general mounted service, United States Army, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I also move to add as a new paragraph the following:

The name of Anne A. Yule, mother of Sherman A. Yule, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to have two other bills passed, and I hope the Senator will allow me to get through with them. If it were merely a question of my own personal inclination I should be very glad to yield to the Senator, but there are other Senators who have appropriation bills in charge who desire me to hurry through.

The bill (S. 8541) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to ask that the Senate reconsider the votes by which the agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 28283) was passed for the purpose of considering an item which was omitted. I was absent from the Chamber at the time, and it is necessary, if it is to be reconsidered at all, that it shall be reconsidered now. I think the amendment will be agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the chairman of the committee wishes to recall the bill for correction in the public interest, I feel constrained to yield to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the votes whereby the bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and passed will be reconsidered. The bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I move that $20,000 be substituted in lieu of $10,000 for the Dry Farming Congress, on page 76, line 18.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 76, line 18, in the committee amendment agreed to at that point, it is proposed to strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$20,000."

Mr. BURNHAM. To that I make no objection.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator yield to me to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of two bills which I think will involve no debate at all? One of them is a local matter. They will take only a moment.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to accommodate the Senator, if it did not entail yielding to a great many others. If the Senator will kindly defer his request until we can get along with the sundry civil bill, I will try to help him, but I can not yield now. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 28775) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Under the Treasury Department," subhead "Public buildings," on page 26, after line 23, to insert:

Washington, D. C., building for Department of State: The land in the Government reservation between B Street N., Fourteenth Street NW., Fifteenth Street NW. extended, and the line established for the south front of the new National Museum Building, is selected and set apart as the site for a new building for the Department of State, whenever such building shall be authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 7, after the word "building," to strike out "$650,000" and insert "$700,000," so as to read:

Repairs and preservation of public buildings: For repairs and preservation of all completed and occupied public buildings and the grounds thereof under the control of the Treasury Department, and for wire screens therefor, Government wharves and piers under the control of the Treasury Department, together with the necessary dredging adjacent thereto, buildings and wharf at Sitka, Alaska, and the Secretary of the Treasury may, in renting said wharf, require that the lessee shall make all necessary repairs thereto; for repairs and preservation of buildings not reserved by vendors on sites under the control of the Treasury Department acquired for public buildings or the enlargement of public buildings, the expenditures on this account for the current fiscal year not to exceed 15 per cent of the annual rentals of such buildings: Provided, That of the sum herein appropriated not exceeding $100,000 may be used for marine hospitals and quarantine stations, including wire screens for same, and not exceeding $12,000 for the Treasury, Butler, and Winder Buildings at Washington, D. C.: Provided further, That this sum shall not be available for the payment of personal services except for work done by contract or for temporary job labor under exigency not exceeding at one time the sum of $100 at any one building, $700,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 6, after the words "officers' quarters," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$8,000," so as to read:

Marine hospital, Baltimore, Md.: Surgical dressing room, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 8, to insert:

Marine hospital, Detroit, Mich.: New coal shed, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I inquire on what page the Secretary is reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Page 38.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I offer an amendment, which I desire to come in on page 37.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that committee amendments are first being considered on the order of the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, Treasury Department," on page 42, line 16, after the word "mints," to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$144,000," so as to read:

Contingent expenses, Independent Treasury: For contingent expenses under the requirements of section 3653 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, for the collection, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the public money, for transportation of notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States, for salaries of special agents, and for actual expenses of examiners detailed to examine the books, accounts, and money on hand at the several subtreasuries and depositories, including national banks acting as depositories under the requirements of section 3649 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, also including examinations of cash accounts at mints, $144,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 25, after the word "employed," to strike out "$2,540,000" and insert "$2,600,000," so as to read:

For operating force for public buildings: For such personal services as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary in connection with the care, maintenance, and repair of all public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department (except as hereinafter provided), together with the grounds thereof and the equipment and furnishings therein, and of sites for public buildings, including assistant custodians, janitors, watchmen, laborers, and charwomen; engineers, firemen, elevator conductors, coal passers, electricians, dynamo tenders, lampists, and wiremen; and for the mechanical labor force in connection with said buildings, including carpenters, plumbers, steam fitters, machinists, and painters, but in no case shall the rates of compensation for such mechanical labor force be in excess of the rates current at the time and in the place where such services are employerd, $2,600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Health Service," on page 51, line 15, after "$126,000," to insert "Provided, That hereafter commissioned officers and pharmacists and those employees of the service devoting all their time to field work shall be entitled to hospital relief when taken sick or injured in line of duty," so as to read:

For medical examinations, care of seamen, care and treatment of all other persons entitled to relief, and miscellaneous expenses other than marine hospitals, which are not included under special heads, $126,000: Provided, That hereafter commissioned officers and pharmacists and those employees of the service devoting all their time to field work shall be entitled to hospital relief when taken sick or injured in line of duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for the maintenance of the quarantine service, on page 52, line 23, after the word "action," to strike out "$155,000" and insert "$164,500," so as to read:

Quarantine system of the Hawaiian Islands, including the leprosy hospital; and the quarantine system of Porto Rico, and including not exceeding $500 for printing on account of the quarantine service at times when the exigencies of that service require immediate action, $164,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 2, before the word "trachoma," to strike out "or" and insert "and," and in line 8, after "$200,000," to insert "Provided, That the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service may establish, when deemed necessary, temporary dispensaries for the investigation, prevention, and treatment of pellagra and trachoma, the expenditures for same to not exceed $10,000, which is hereby authorized from this appropriation," so as to read:

Prevention of epidemics: To enable the President of the United States, in case only of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, typhus fever, yellow fever, smallpox, bubonic plague, Chinese plague or black death, and trachoma, to aid State and local boards, or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same, and in such emergency in the execution of any quarantine laws which may be then in force, $200,000: Provided, That the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service may establish, when deemed necessary, temporary dispensaries for the investigation, prevention, and treatment of pellagra and trachoma, the expenditures for same to not exceed $10,000, which is hereby authorized from this appropriation: Provided, That a detailed report of the expenditures hereunder shall annually hereafter be submitted to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Do I understand that the bill is being read now for committee amendments?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendments are now in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. And other amendments are not in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are not.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to offer an amendment at that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inquire of the Senator whether his is an amendment to a committee amendment?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I desire to insert a separate provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will have an opportunity to offer it after the committee amendments have been disposed of.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Central heating and power plant," on page 56, line 15, after the word "employ," to insert "without reference to civil-service laws and regulations," so as to read:

The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized and empowered to employ, without reference to the civil-service laws and regulations, on a salary basis in the Office of the Supervising Architect such technical services as may be deemed necessary in connection with the plans, specifications, and construction of the power plant herein provided for and to pay for such services at such price or rates of compensation as he may consider just and reasonable from the appropriation hereinbefore made.

Mr. BRADLEY. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee on page 53.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, we have already passed that point, but I think the Senator's attention was diverted, and perhaps we should turn back to it. I am willing to do that if the Senator so wishes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote adopting the amendment will be reconsidered, and the Senator from Kentucky will submit his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY. I move to strike out "ten thousand," in line 10, and insert "twenty-five thousand."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, in the committee amendment, in line 10, it is proposed to strike out "ten thousand" and in lieu thereof insert "twenty-five thousand."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that the word "not" be transposed in line 10, so as to read "not to exceed."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, that change will be made.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to say that the Secretary of the Treasury recommends $25,000; so that the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is within the estimate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire, at the proper time—I do not know whether this is the proper time or not, under the rule under which we are proceeding—to offer an amendment in line 24, page 114.

Mr. WARREN. Is it to a committee amendment, in italics?

Mr. BORAH. No; it is not. That is, I take it the $150,000 there is not a committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. WARREN. I do not know what the Senator alludes to. If it is a Senate amendment, now is the time to fix it. If not, and the Senator wishes to amend the House provision, he should wait until we complete the Senate amendments.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that the figures there are the House provision—$150,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct about that.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

All expenditures of money appropriated herein for school purposes in Alaska for schools other than those for the education of white children under the jurisdiction of the governor thereof, shall be under the supervision and direction of the Commissioner of Education and in conformity with such conditions, rules, and regulations as to conduct and methods of instruction and expenditure of money as may from time to time be recommended by him and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 119, after line 3, to insert:

Medical relief in Alaska: To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion and under his direction, to provide for the medical and sanitary relief of the Eskimos, Aleuts, Indians, and other natives of Alaska; for erection, repair, rental, and equipment of hospital buildings; for books and surgical apparatus; for pay and necessary traveling expenses of physicians, nurses, and other employees, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses which are not included under the above special heads, to be immediately available, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 119, after line 23, to insert:

Hot Springs Reservation, Hot Springs, Ark.: For labor and material required in the installation of a drainage system in the city of Hot Springs, to care for storm waters from the mountains on the Hot Springs Reservation, $237,840, to be expended in accordance with the plans and specifications set forth in the communication of the Secretary of the Interior dated January 20, 1913.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 120, line 13, after the words "telephone lines," to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$150,000," so as to make the clause read:

Glacier National Park, Mont.: For administration and improvement, construction and repair of roads, bridges, and telephone lines, $150,000.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask to amend the item of $150,000 by making it read "$188,000," to correspond with the report from the department and the estimate made. I hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. One moment, Mr. President. If that is the estimate, of course the chairman will accept the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the estimate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 13, page 120, it is proposed to strike out "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$188,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 120, line 16, after the word "roads," to insert "Provided, however, That hereafter in the administration of the Yosemite National Park and in the expenditure of the appropriations herein and hereafter made for the administration and improvement thereof, the provisions of the act of June 4, 1906 (34 Stats., p. 207), relative to concessions in Yellowstone National Park, and the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stats., p. 1219), amendatory thereof, are hereby extended and made applicable to the Yosemite National Park, and any part of section 2 of the act of October 1, 1890, concerning the Yosemite National Park, in conflict herewith, is hereby repealed," and on page 121, line 4, after the word "repealed," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$150,000," so as to make the clause read:

Yosemite National Park, Cal.: For protection and improvement, construction and repair of bridges, fences, and trails, and improvement of roads other than toll roads: Provided, however, That hereafter in the administration of the Yosemite National Park and in the expenditure of the appropriations herein and hereafter made for the administration and improvement thereof, the provisions of the act of June 4, 1906 (34 Stats., p. 207), relative to concessions in Yellowstone National Park, and the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stats., p. 1219), amendatory thereof, are hereby extended and made applicable to the Yosemite National Park, and any part of section 2 of the act of October 1, 1890, concerning the Yosemite National Park, in conflict herewith, is hereby repealed, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 121, line 15, after the word "roads," to strike out "$13,400" and insert "$63,400," so as to make the clause read:

Mount Rainier National Park, Wash.: For protection and improvement, construction of bridges, fences, and trails, and improvement of roads, $63,400.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the estimate there is $150,000. If the chairman does not object, I should like to offer an amendment to make the item carry that amount instead of the one that appears in the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, in the case of those estimates on the parks we felt it necessary in committee to cut all of them. They are all below the estimates. It was a very serious matter a year ago to get what we did get, far below what we have put them at this year. It was the judgment of the committee that we had put in the bill about as much as the country could afford to spend this year, or as much as we could succeed in retaining. Of course I can not resist the offering of this amendment within the estimate. The Senate must say whether or not it wishes to increase the amount.

Mr. JONES. In view of the raising of the other amount to the estimate I offer that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, on page 121, line 15, to strike out "$63,400," and insert in lieu thereof "$150,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 121, after line 15, to insert:

For a survey for the extension of the present road from its present terminus eastward to the eastern boundary line of the forest reserve surrounding the Mount Rainier National Park, and for the survey of the necessary trails in said park, $10,000.

Mr. JONES. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment it is proposed to strike out the words "its present terminus" and insert "a point at or above Longmire Springs."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 121, line 26, after the word "park," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$16,000," so as to make the clause read:

Mesa Verde National Park, Colo.: For protection and improvement, including the lands within 5 miles of the boundaries of said reservation, which, under the act of June 29, 1906, are to be administered by the same service established for the custodianship of the park, $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 122, line 3, after the word "roads," to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$7,540," so as to make the clause read:

Crater Lake National Park, Oreg.: For protection and improvement, and repairing and extension of roads, $7,540.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 122, after line 3, to insert:

Wind Cave National Park, S. Dak.: For improvement and protection, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 122, after line 5, to strike out:

Platt National Park, Okla.: Pursuant to the authority conveyed in section 64 of the act approved July 1, 1902 (Stat. L., vol. 32, p. 656), all of the land comprising the Platt National Park in the State of Oklahoma is transferred and title thereto vested in the State of Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Government Hospital for the Insane," on page 123, after line 10, to insert:

For provision for criminal insane, $30,454.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 123, line 13, after the word "piggeries," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to make the clause read:

For barns and piggeries, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Howard University," on page 124, line 7, after the word "instruction," to strike out "$60,000" and insert "$65,000," so as to make the clause read:

For maintenance of the Howard University, to be used in payment of part of the salaries of the officers, professors, teachers, and other regular employees of the university, and for ice and stationery, the balance of which shall be paid from donations and other sources, of which sum not less than $1,500 shall be used for normal instruction, $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 124, line 24, after the words "In all," to strike out "$96,000" and insert "$101,000," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $101,000.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Under the Department of Justice," subhead "Public buildings," on page 127, line 5, after the word "site," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

National Training School for Boys: For acquisition by purchase or condemnation of additional land adjoining the present site, to be immediately available, $41,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 127, line 22, after the words "General Appraisers," to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to make the clause read:

For traveling expenses, fees, and mileage allowance of witnesses before the Board of United States General Appraisers, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 128, line 19, after the words "Attorney General," to strike out "$450,000" and insert "$500,000," so as to make the clause read:

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; the investigation of the official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks, and referees of the United States courts and the Territorial courts, and United States commissioners, for which purpose all the official papers, records, and dockets of said officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Attorney General at any time; for the protection of the person of the President of the United States; for such other investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice as may be directed by the Attorney General, including not to exceed $10,000 for necessary employees at the seat of government, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 129, line 16, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$15,000," so as to read:

Enforcement of antitrust laws: For the enforcement of antitrust laws, including not exceeding $15,000 for salaries of necessary employees at the seat of government, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judicial" subhead "United States Courts," on page 133, after line 11, to insert:

The salaries of the United States district attorney and the United States marshal for the western district of Arkansas shall hereafter be $4,000 per annum each.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to this item increasing the salaries of the district attorney and the United States marshal in Arkansas. I shall not make any criticism beyond this. I know nothing about the facts, but I think those matters should go to the Judiciary Committee. That is all I care to say.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator would not think that this should go there after a simple statement is made about it. The State of Arkansas is divided into two judicial districts known as the eastern and western districts. There is the Indian territory, part of the western district, together with 26 counties of the State, and the business in that district is quite heavy. It arises most particularly near the Indian territory, at the end of the district.

There are 46 counties in the eastern district. The salary of the district attorney and the marshal in the eastern district is $4,000. By reason of additional business at the Indian territory end of the western district the salary was fixed at $5,000 for each of those officers. The purpose of the amendment is to equalize the salaries as between the two districts of the State.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not criticize the merits of the proposition at all.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There is about to be another appointment to those offices and it was for the purpose of equalizing them, and this was the first opportunity that seemed to offer.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My point is that such matter relating to attorneys and marshals are usually referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I think there ought to be some uniformity about it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I rather think that consideration should be given to the merits rather than a mere matter of detail.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It usually keeps track of these salaries.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I think the same results would have followed if it had gone before the committee. I have every reason to believe so.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Connecticut, that the Committee on Appropriations is only too glad to have these matters go to other committees so far as that can be done. The only reason why the committee consented to this going in was that it was at so late an hour that it seemed impossible for it to pass the House and Senate if it went to any other committee.

It is a reduction of $2,000 a year. It occurs at a time when we assume there will soon be new appointments. For those reasons the committee allowed it to go in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Under the Department of Commerce and Labor," subhead "Lighthouse Service," in the item of appropriation for general expenses, Lighthouse Service, on page 144, line 1, after the word "depots," to insert: "Provided, That hereafter supplies and equipment for special works of the Lighthouse Service may be furnished from general stock and the appropriation "General expenses, Lighthouse Service," reimbursed therefor from the respective appropriations for special work," so as to read:

The rent of offices, depots, and wharves, traveling expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor not to exceed $4 per day, and mileage, library books for light stations and vessels, and technical books and periodicals not exceeding $1,000, and for all other contingent expenses of district offices and depots: Provided, That hereafter supplies and equipment for special works of the Lighthouse Service may be furnished from general stock and the appropriation "General expenses, Lighthouse Service," reimbursed therefor from the respective appropriations for special work, and for contingent expenses of the office of the Bureau of Lighthouses in Washington, $2,750,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 144, after line 7, to insert:

Hereafter when any condemned supplies, materials, equipment, or land can not be profitably used in the work of the Lighthouse Service, the same shall be appraised and sold, either by sealed proposals for the purchase of the same, or by public auction, after advertisement of the sale for such time as in the judgment of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the public interest may require, the proceeds of such sales, after the payment therefrom of the expenses of making the same, to be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, as now provided by law in like cases.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Fisheries," on page 150, line 21, after the word "Commissioner," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$6,000," so as to read:

Office of commissioner: Commissioner, $6,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask why that increase is recommended.

Mr. WARREN. There are four or five places in the bill where—on a point of order in the House—the salaries were greatly reduced. This simply restores the salaries that have been enjoyed for a number of years; one, for instance, Dr. Melvin, is the head of the Bureau of Animal Industry. When that bureau was established it was small and the salary was, I think, $3,000. It was later increased to $5,500 and ran that way for some years. On a point of order in the House, it was put back to $3,000. We reinstated that one. One is the Commissioner of Fisheries, and another is the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The items were in the House bill—put in there by the committee—and on the point of order of a single Member they went out. Of course, that point of order would not rest on this side, but in the House they have to turn back to the organic statute that established the salary.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is the present salary of the Fish Commissioner?

Mr. WARREN. Six thousand dollars.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is that the salary of similar heads of other bureaus?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; as to quite a number of them. Others are not so high and, perhaps, one or two are higher.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think there are none higher. My impression is that the salary of most of them is $5,000. I do not see any reason why this salary should be made $6,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead Bureau of Fisheries, in line 22, after "$3,500," to strike out "chief clerk, $2,400," and insert "assistant in charge of office, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, $2,500"; and on page 151, line 5, after the words "in all," to strike out "$43,980" and insert "$45,080," so as to make the clause read:

Deputy commissioner, $3,500; assistant in charge of office, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, $2,500; accountant, $2,100; librarian, $1,500; clerks—1 of class 4, 3 of class 3, 1 to commissioner $1,000, 1 of class 1, 1 $1,000, 10 at $900 each; engineer, $1,080; 3 firemen, at $720 each; 2 watchmen, at $720 each; 5 janitors and messengers, at $720 each; janitress, $480; messenger boy, $360; 4 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $45,080.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 156, line 16, after "$2,700" to insert "fish pathologist, $2,500, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor"; and in line 19, after the words "in all," to strike out "$14,000" and insert "$16,500," so as to make the clause read:

Division of inquiry respecting food fishes: Assistant in charge, $2,700; fish pathologist, $2,500, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor; assistants—1 $2,500, 1 $1,600; 2 at $1,200 each; 2 at $900 each; clerks—1 of class 1, 2 at $900 each; in all, $16,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 157, line 22, after "$900," to strike out "two agents and caretakers, at $2,000 each," and insert "agent, fur-seal fisheries, $3,650; assistant agent, fur-seal fisheries, $2,920; two assistant agents, fur-seal fisheries, at $2,190 each; naturalist, fur-seal fisheries, $3,000."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This seems to me an utterly inexcusable increase on an amendment to the bill as it passed the House. At the last session of Congress we enacted a law for the purpose of carrying into effect the treaties with several other countries relating to seal fisheries, and in that law it was provided that for the next five years no seals were to be killed except a few required for the maintenance of the natives. The House taking this into account dropped from the bill an appropriation for several assistant agents and saved something like $12,000.

The language of the former bill, however, has been restored by the committee, and unless there is some good reason offered I shall ask the Senate to strike out that part of it which provides for an agent at $3,650, an assistant agent at $2,920, and two assistant agents in the fur-seal fisheries at $2,190, as now there is no possible use for these agents and no justification for employing them if during the next five years this killing is to be abandoned.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the action of the committee has been to restore the current law in the bill. It was done on the representation of the officers of the Government and the commission having the matters in charge. It was also presented very strongly to the committee by Members of the Senate, who take an interest in that industry, notably the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]. I have a telegram here from——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to interrupt the Senator there. As far as the Senator from Indiana is concerned, his contention was for the retention of a naturalist. I would be willing to concede that there might be some excuse for retaining a naturalist on the island for the purpose of continuing the study of the habits of the seals. But that does not go, and Senator KERN does not desire it to go, to a desire to continue these agents and assistant agents, who are merely sinecures up there at the expense of the Government. I will say to the Senator that I have not any objection to the naturalist.

Mr. WARREN. I did not allude especially to the private views of Senators, and I presume the Senator does not, and that he is giving us his own ideas. I should like to have a telegram read from David Starr Jordan. That was one of the documents before the committee.

The Secretary read as follows:

PALO ALTO, CAL., February 22, 1913.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Senate, Washington, D. C.

Fifth recommendation of Rothermel committee report and attempt to cut from appropriation bills Government agents, seal islands, vicious efforts of pelagic sealers to produce anarchy on islands. Three hundred dependent natives, seal rookeries, fox and reindeer herds, eighty to two hundred thousand dollars' worth of food and skins, all demand attention of Government representatives.

DAVID STARR JORDAN.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to have a portion of the letter of the Fish Commissioner which refers to this particular subject read. I wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska that the evidence before the committee seemed to be sufficient to justify it in restoring the current law and letting it go to conference; and then if there is better information on the House side than we have here, it can be adjusted. I would ask to have the first part of the letter read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
BUREAU OF FISHERIES,
Washington, February 18, 1913.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: There are several matters relating to the Division of Alaska Fisheries in the sundry civil bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations of the House to which I desire to call the attention of your committee.

1. On page 152, line 16, provision is made for "two agents and caretakers, at $2,000 each," in lieu of the present force, which consists of "one agent, at $3,650; one assistant agent, at $2,920; and two assistant agents, at $2,190 each."

It is not possible to administer properly the many and important duties connected with the fur-seal service with fewer employees than now provided. During the 40 years when the sealing business was conducted on the islands by a lessee it was always regarded as necessary to have upon the islands four Government agents, whose chief duty was to see that the law and the regulations regarding the killing of seals were observed by the lessee, and to see that law and order were maintained on the islands. All matters pertaining to the actual conduct of the sealing business, the keeping of stores for the natives, furnishing food and clothing to the natives, the purchase and transportation of supplies to the islands, and the shipment of skins from the islands were attended to by agents of the lessee.

Since the leasing system has been abandoned all these duties, previously requiring the services of 11 men on an average, are now performed by 4 Government agents. That all these duties can be performed satisfactorily by 2 men is not possible.

2. When the Government took over all matters pertaining to the seal islands three years ago, Congress provided a naturalist for the fur-seal service at a salary of $3,000. The bill as reported out by the House Committee on Appropriations omits my estimate for that position.

In the opinion of all specialists who have made a study of the fur-seal and blue-fox problems, these are now chiefly biological problems, requiring a man trained in biological methods and animal breeding. It is earnestly hoped that your committee may see proper to restore this item. A special memorandum setting forth more fully the duties of the naturalist is also submitted.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the advice which comes from this gentleman comes from the same men who earnestly advise Congress to permit the killing of the seals to continue up there, as it has continued for a number of years to the destruction of the herd. These same gentlemen now desire that these agents who were formerly employed during the wholesale killing of seals upon those islands shall continue in the Government service, although the only killing to be done will be by a few resident natives on the island.

It may be conceded that a Government agent on each island is necessary to look after the Government's interests there; he is necessary to see that there is no incessant killing by the natives, but it is absurd to say that the agents formerly needed there when killing was active, when a large commercial business was carried on, are still necessary to supervise the natives.

The fact is that the House committee took testimony on that subject; the fact is that the Rothermel committee, which investigated carefully the seal-fisheries question during a period of many months, made a deliberate recommendation that these places be done away with; the fact is, that, so far as the protection of our interests up there is concerned, the Revenue-Cutter Service looks after that, and these agents and assistant agents are of no sort of use. We have abundant means of looking after the small interests which remain in the persons of the two agents provided for in the bill as it came from the other House. If it is desired to take the recommendation of these gentlemen in the Fish Commission and continue as sinecures up there the men who formerly had active work, well and good; but my judgment is that this advice is not in the interest of the public service, but is simply for the purpose of continuing a few men in the service who have grown accustomed to drawing their salaries.

Mr. President, I move to strike from the amendment, beginning in line 22 with the word "agent," at the end of the line, down to and including the word "each," in line 25.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out those words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 157 of the committee amendment, beginning in line 22, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Agent, fur-seal fisheries, $3,650; assistant agent, fur-seal fisheries, $2,920; 2 assistant agents, fur-seal fisheries, at $2,190 each.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that will save $8,760, and will still leave open the appointment of two agents and caretakers as well as the naturalists at $3,000. I think that is abundant for the good of the service.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to say that I entirely concur in the views expressed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. There is no occasion for employing those men; there is nothing for them to do. We have suspended all killing there for five years, and there is nobody to take care of except a few of the mixed-blood natives there—the Aleuts on the island. In fact, one or two caretakers would be a great abundance. There is no occasion for employing any of these scientists and naturalists or these other agents. The places are purely sinecures and they ought to be abolished.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, the legislation of last summer creating the five-year closed season against commercial killing of seals renders these provisions of the bill unnecessary. There can exist no occasion to retain in full the present force on the Pribilof Islands. There is to be no seal killing except in limited number required as food for the natives. The proposed amendment should be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves to disagree to a portion of the amendment which the Secretary has stated.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to have the amendment again stated, as there are certain factors then to be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 157, beginning in line 22, it is proposed to disagree to so much of the committee amendment as reads:

Agent, fur-seal fisheries, $3,650; assistant agent, fur-seal fisheries, $2,920; two assistant agents, fur-seal fisheries, at $2,190 each.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator intend in that way to leave in or strike out anything else but the caretakers, as the House had provided?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They should be left in. I suppose the Senator being in charge of the bill, will look after that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Unless the Senator from Nebraska proposes to move it, I think I shall move to disagree to the portion of the Senate committee amendment which cuts out the two men from the House bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that would be proper, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to which the Senator from Wyoming refers will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 157, line 22, after the sum "$900," the committee propose to strike out "two agents and caretakers, at $2,000 each."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WARREN. Now, Mr. President, at this point I ask unanimous consent that the totals may be corrected by the Secretary after the bill shall have been concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the amendment not acted upon is the insertion of a provision for a naturalist, at $3,000?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment referred to by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 157, line 5, it is proposed to insert:

Naturalist, fur-seal fisheries, $3,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 158, line 9, after the words "in all," to strike out "$33,380" and insert "$43,330," so as to read:

Division of Alaska Fisheries: Chief of division, $3,500; assistant, $1,800; clerks—1 of class 2; 1 of class 1; 1 $900; agent, fur-seal fisheries, $3,650; assistant agent, fur-seal fisheries, $2,920; 2 assistant agents, fur-seal fisheries, at $2,190 each; naturalist, fur-seal fisheries, $3,000; janitor service, fur-seal fisheries, $480; 2 physicians, Pribilof Islands, at $1,500 each; 2 school-teachers, Pribilof Islands, at $1,200 each; storekeeper, Pribilof Islands, $1,800; for the following to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor—agent, Alaska salmon fisheries, $2,500; inspector, Alaska salmon fisheries, $1,800; assistant agent, Alaska salmon fisheries, $2,000; assistant agent, Alaska salmon fisheries, $1,800; warden, Alaska service, $1,200; 4 deputy wardens, Alaska service, $900 each; in all, $43,330.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 160, line 20, after the word "therewith," to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$100,000," so as to read:

Alaska fur-seal fisheries protection and support: For protecting the seal fisheries of Alaska, including the furnishing of food, fuel, clothing, and other necessities of life to the natives of the Pribilof Islands of Alaska, transportation of supplies to and from the islands, traveling expenses and subsistence for caretakers while on said islands, and for all other expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the act approved August 24, 1912, entitled "An act to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the north Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911,", and for the protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska, including travel, hire of boats, employment of temporary labor, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 160, after line 23, to insert:

For overhauling and making necessary repairs to the steamer Albatross, including new work where necessary, and equipment, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 161, after line 9, to insert:

For the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Utah, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 161, after line 13, to insert:

For the establishment of a fish-cultural station, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point in the State of Rhode Island, to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, $25,000: Provided, That before any final steps shall have been taken for the construction of a fish-cultural station in accordance with this act, the State of Rhode Island, through appropriate legislative action, shall accord to the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents the right to conduct fish hatching and all operations connected therewith in any manner and at any time that may by them be considered necessary and proper, any fishery laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding: And provided further, That the operations of said hatchery may be suspended by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor whenever, in his judgment, the laws and regulations affecting the fishes cultivated are allowed to remain so inadequate as to impair the efficiency of said hatchery.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, Department of Commerce and Labor—Immigration stations," on page 163, after line 2, to insert:

Immigration station, Galveston, Tex.: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to use for replacing and repairing the electric light and telephone cables and the water main between the city of Galveston, Tex., and the immigration station on Pelican Spit, the unexpended balances of the appropriations for construction of water main to supply water to the immigration station at Galveston, Tex., and for locating and correcting leak in said water main; and said unexpended balances are hereby made available for said purposes, and shall remain available for said purposes, and shall remain available until otherwise provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Immigration Service," in the item of appropriation for miscellaneous expenses, Division of Naturalization, on page 165, line 20, after the word "page," to strike out "eight hundred and ninety-six" and insert "six hundred," so as to read:

For the purpose of carrying into effect section 13 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stats., 600), as amended by the act approved June 25, 1910, and that the expenditures from this appropriation shall be in the manner and under such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe, $225,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 166, after line 8, to insert:

UNDER THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

For expenses of the Fourth International Congress on School Hygiene to be held in Buffalo, N. Y., August 25 to 30, 1913, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 166, after line 13, to insert:

International Joint Commission, United States and Great Britain: For salaries and expenses, including salaries of commissioners, salaries of clerks, and other employees appointed by the commissioners on the part of the United States with the approval solely of the Secretary of State, including rental of offices at Washington, D. C., expense of printing, purchase of books, periodicals, and papers, and all necessary traveling and other expenses, and for the one-half of all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the International Joint Commission incurred under the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the use of boundary waters between the United States and Canada and other purposes, signed January 11, 1909, $100,000, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the committee, in charge of the bill, what is the purpose of this amendment? What is the necessity of it?

Mr. WARREN. It is to continue the existence and support of the commission that has been appointed under a treaty with Great Britain. Great Britain has the same number of members on the commission as has the United States. Questions are constantly arising in the waters along the boundary which require attention, and this commission is engaged in the work. We had some witnesses before the committee, from whom we learned of the work of preventing the pollution of the water and the control of the flow, whether the water should be taken out from one side by one Government without the consent of the other, and so forth. All those questions seem to be subjects of necessary consideration.

One matter that came before us, which seemed to show a great necessity for the commission, was the condition of the Lake of the Woods. I see the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is here, and perhaps he can tell us something about that.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will yield to me, I will say that I am somewhat familiar with the situation. In the country along the northern boundary of Minnesota there is a succession of watercourses from the east toward the west, terminating, first, in Rainy Lake and then through International Falls down the Rainy River into the Lake of the Woods, and the Lake of the Woods discharges through the Winnipeg River into Lake Winnipeg. There has been a great controversy over those waters by reason of a dam which the Canadians have had constructed at a place they used to call Rat Portage, but which is now called Kenora, where the Canadian Pacific Railroad crosses the outlet of the Lake of the Woods. There are three different outlets there, all merging into the Winnipeg River. The Canadians have put in two or three dams, which have been instrumental in flooding the lands of the settlers on the American side.

The Lake of the Woods is a large body of water, perhaps—outside of the five Great Lakes, the Superior system, and the adjoining lakes—the largest inland lake on the North American Continent. There is considerable navigation on the lake. We have one port on the lake at War Road, where there is considerable commerce and where the railroad crosses. There are two other minor ports on the Lake of the Woods, and the Rainy River from its mouth in the Lake of the Woods up to International Falls is navigable.

In the eastern reaches of the Rainy River system there is a controversy between the Canadians and the people on our side as to the withdrawal of water from the upper end of the Rainy River system, and at the Lake of the Woods there is a controversy in respect to lands that the Canadians have flooded by the dams at Kenora, or Rat Portage.

This commission was appointed pursuant to a treaty which we negotiated with Great Britain some years ago, and the preliminary work of settling and adjusting all these controversies is entailed on the commission. I have had in the course of the last two or three years a great many complaints from settlers. I have referred those complaints to the commission, and the commission have, as I understand, lately appointed experts to make a survey of this watercourse and see where our people are affected and what injury and damage has been done to the flowage.

It is an important matter, and until it is finally adjusted there will be friction and controversy between our people and the people along the Lake of the Woods. In international waters we are always likely to have trouble over such matters until the disputed questions are settled.

It is a curious thing that we have on the Lake of the Woods, growing out of the original treaty with Great Britain, what is called the Northwestern Angle. The phraseology of that treaty was of such a character that it left an agle there—I do not know how large; perhaps a quarter of a township of land—on the west side of the Lake of the Woods entirely isolated from the rest of our country, and yet a part of our country. A great many settlers have recently gone into that section, which our people there call "No Man's Land."

I could go more into detail, but I am not willing to take up the time of the Senate. I know that the work of this commission is necessary, and that our settlers are very anxious that the commission should be instrumental in adjusting these difficulties. As I have said, I have had numerous letters from settlers there, and all I could do about the matter was to refer them to the commission. Before the organization of the commission I received many letters. All I could then do was to refer them to the State Department, and the State Department was almost powerless until this treaty was negotiated, and the commission was appointed under it.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, let me add to what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has said, that the situation which he has recounted is an illustration of complications that are arising frequently all along the more than 3,000 miles of boundary between this country and Canada. Very much the same kind of questions are coming up along the boundary as come up among our own people inside of our country and as arise between Canadians inside of their country, but which, because of their being on boundary waters and the questions being between citizens of different countries, they can not be disposed of by ordinary courts. Reference of such matters to the State Department leads to long diplomatic correspondence between this Government and London. That is a very unsatisfactory way to dispose of such questions. The longer such questions remain unsettled the more difficult they become of settlement, people get excited about them, national spirit and prejudice are aroused, and they become really matters of serious controversy, when if they had been taken up at the beginning they could have been disposed of easily.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New York how long this commission has been in existence?

Mr. ROOT. I think it was organized about a year ago. There was a long delay in the exchange of ratifications of the treaty. The treaty was made late in 1908 or early in 1909—I have forgotten which—and was ratified by our Senate, with a proviso in the resolutions of ratification which the Canadians hesitated a long time to accept. It was a proviso relating to matters at the Soo.

Mr. BORAH. I recall that.

Mr. ROOT. So that the treaty was not finally ratified until a little over a year ago, when the commissioners were appointed.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator what has been done upon the part of the commission toward consummating these difficulties or arranging them? Has it made any report, has any adjustment been made, or have any steps been taken looking to the final settlement of any of these controversies?

Mr. ROOT. I can not tell you that. I have not been following it for some time past. I know they have been at work, because I know some very serious questions have been referred to them. The number of questions which have arisen, and which were continually arising, made it apparent that a practically permanent court would be necessary to dispose of the questions that are arising.

I know one of the things they are now at work upon is the enforcement of the provision of the treaty prohibiting the pollution of boundary waters on either side. The foreign offices of the two countries have referred to them the question as to whether that provision is being violated anywhere along this boundary, and they are at work investigating that. Upon the conclusion of that investigation they will make a report upon it. I think it is highly probable that a great and serious controversy will be prevented because it is taken in time.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me they must have been considering it for some time, for so far as I can learn the commission has made no report and consummated nothing in the way of final settlement.

Mr. ROOT. They have hardly had time.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. As chairman of the subcommittee, I had occasion to look into this question last week and examined a partial report. I find that a number of cases have been settled and a number of hearings have been had. Just last week the commission were in session up in Minnesota. I understand the Canadian Government have made full appropriation and have provided for their commission to carry on the work of settlement; but unless this appropriation is made there will be nothing for our commission to pay expenses with save and except their salaries. If you do not make this appropriation, about all they will get is their salaries, and nothing will be done. If you appropriate this money, then these various questions can be taken up, and I hope some of them will be settled.

I understand some of the controversies there are very serious. Here just a short time ago, because there was no way to settle the difficulties, the people on one side or the other threatened to use dynamite to get rid of a dam that was causing the overflow of the lands there, the question of damage to be settled by this commission.

Mr. BORAH. How many commissioners are there?

Mr. ROOT. Three on each side.

Mr. CURTIS. My recollection is that there are three on each side.

Mr. BORAH. What salary are they drawing?

Mr. CURTIS. Seven thousand five hundred dollars each.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Kansas think it is necessary to continue this commission interminably?

Mr. CURTIS. I think not; but undoubtedly it ought to be continued until they have time to pass upon these questions.

Mr. BORAH. Has the commission made any report, so that one can see what steps they have taken?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not remember seeing any report. I have had letters from the commission—or, rather, letters have been written to the State Department making a report as to progress and what they needed. That report, or partial report, was sent to the Senate Committee on Appropriations by the Secretary of State about a week ago.

Mr. ROOT. May I add something to the answer of the Senator from Kansas? I do not anticipate that the time will ever come when this commission will not be needed. I think that as the two countries along this tremendous boundary line become more and more thickly settled the need for it will increase. I do not think we shall ever see the time when this commission will not be needed to dispose of controversies along the boundary line in their inception, furnishing a machinery ready at hand for people to get relief and redress without going into the long processes of diplomatic correspondence. I think it will have to continue as long as the ordinary courts of the country continue. Of course it can be ended. The treaty under which it is created is a treaty which has some limit of life; I do not remember what it is.

Mr. BURTON. Five years from the time it was entered into, 1910.

Mr. ROOT. Five years, and until ended by notice, I think.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from New York what is the necessity of three members of a commission like this?

Mr. ROOT. Because they have numerous things to attend to, and they have to divide up their work of actual investigation. They are not merely a court which sits and listens to testimony that comes before it, but they have to go themselves and inquire into situations extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know what the members of this commission have accomplished. That is what I desired to find out. Not knowing what they have accomplished, I am not, of course, reflecting upon the members of the commission; but it does seem to me that there is no necessity for three members of this commission and that there ought to be some limit of time within which we can dispose of part of an expensive commission like this. Certainly there can be no more necessity for a large commission between this country and Canada to act upon matters arising between Canada and the United States than between Mexico and the United States.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, there has been a commission between the United States and Mexico, I was going to say, time out of mind—certainly for 20 years. That commission is still in existence, and it is still at work.

Mr. BORAH. That is proof positive of the fact that it is no benefit to mankind.

Mr. ROOT. It is a benefit to mankind, because it is disposing of questions which would otherwise become international causes of controversy immensely more expensive and immensely more injurious than when they are taken and disposed of in the beginning, while they are still individual controversies. In such cases this commission can afford such relief as results from having somebody to go to for redress.

Mr. BORAH. I am disposed to take the view of the Senator from New York upon these matters, because he knows far more about them than I can possibly know. But, on the other hand, I do know, as the Senator from New York himself knows, that there is a great tendency to create unnecessary commissions and keep them alive time without limit.

Mr. ROOT. That may be. I dare say there is too much of that. But in this case we had before us the experience of a most unfortunate controversy, arising from not having any machinery to deal with questions when they arose. It came to a situation regarding the Alaska boundary in which there might have been a bloody affray which would have set all of the West and all of the United States and all of Canada aflame, when the difficulty could have been settled without any trouble at all if there had been some way of taking it up when it was first bruited. We had to dispose of that by a great tribunal, created for the purpose, and sitting in London, with an army of counsel, causing expense that would have supported a commission for the past 20 years. We had to create a great joint high commission here in 1898, of which the former Vice President, Mr. Fairbanks, was president of the American section, and Lord Herschel came over from England as president of the English section. That commission sat in Washington and at Montreal. They had an army of secretaries and clerks and experts, and they took up a great lot of questions that never would have amounted to anything if they had been disposed of when they first arose. Finally they broke up without deciding anything.

Having that experience before us, we undertook to create the kind of machinery that will prevent controversy by disposing of controversy when it is in the beginning; and that is the machinery of these commissions. Canada, far less able to incur expense than we, was ready to appoint her three commissioners, and to pay them.

As to the number, all I can say is that it seemed from the experience we had had in the former Waterways Commission, and the amount of work they had been called upon to do, that three on each side would be necessary. I do not think a smaller number could have done the work.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if he has ever heard of the commission between this Government and the Government of Mexico ever settling anything or ever doing anything?

Mr. ROOT. Oh, yes, Mr. President. They have settled a great many—many controversies.

Mr. WORKS. I know some of them that they have not settled.

Mr. ROOT. I know there are some.

Mr. WORKS. They have been principally conspicuous for what they have not done.

Mr. ROOT. That is because the controversies that are not settled are the controversies that make a noise.

Mr. WORKS. They have been useful only in preventing controversies between the two countries by simply delaying action and doing nothing.

Mr. ROOT. They have been useful by settling scores and hundreds of controversies.

Mr. BORAH. What is the size of the Mexican commission? Does the Senator remember?

Mr. ROOT. I think there are three members. I am not certain. I would not like to say.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask one more question of the Senator from Kansas. Has the Senator from Kansas any knowledge upon which we can base an intelligent amendment to terminate the services of this commission?

Mr. CURTIS. I have not. I think the best plan is to make this appropriation, and see what they are doing with the court that has been organized, and then let the next Congress deal with it if they have not made a report sufficient to satisfy Congress.

Mr. BORAH. Apparently it ought to be created in perpetuity.

Mr. ROOT. I will suggest to the Senator from Idaho that no amendment to terminate the commission would be intelligent, because the commission is created under a treaty, and we are bound by the provisions of the treaty.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand then, from the Senator from New York, there is a treaty which obligates us to appoint a commission of three, and that treaty does not end for five years?

Mr. ROOT. Five years from——

Mr. BORAH. From the date of ratification?

Mr. ROOT. From the date of ratification. I do not remember what that is.

Mr. BORAH. Perhaps, then, there is some hope of terminating the matter at some time.

Mr. ROOT. There is some fear of it.

Mr. BORAH. So I observe.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to inquire how long it was after the commissioners were appointed by the United States before Canada appointed her members of the commission?

Mr. ROOT. I do not know.

Mr. BRISTOW. It was a number of years, was it not?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I believe it was about one year after the commissioners were appointed by the United States that Canada appointed her three members of the commission. I will say, also, that the members of the commission in Canada receive the same salaries as the members of the commission do here in the United States. The commission was created in May, 1910, as I remember. I should say the treaty was made at that time.

Mr. BRISTOW. In May, 1910?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I say, the treaty was made in May, 1910, and it had a life of five years. The commission was appointed in 1911.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have been advised that there is but one commissioner on the Mexican commission—that that work is done by one man. Whether that is true or not, of course I do not know. What I object to, however, is appropriating $100,000 here for something when we have no idea what it is for. My information has been that this commission, since it was created, has been used as a harbor of refuge for "lame ducks." I do not think we ought to be so generous in supplying them with this provender unless we know just the purposes for which it is to be expended.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, at the risk of taking up a little time, I will state that I have here a map of Minnesota. Right at the northern end here is the Lake of the Woods. A part of that lake, the southern part of it, washes the northern boundary of our State. Up here, at the north end, is the outlet of the lake in Canada, at Kenora, or what used to be called Rat Portage. Up there they built dams, raising the level of this water, flooding our lands, and injuring the two little ports that we have here on the south side of the Lake of the Woods.

If the Lake of the Woods were within our territory our settlers could go into court and bring suit against the parties erecting that dam and flooding their lands. But where the damage is caused by the Canadians over across the boundary line our people have no remedy except by the system provided through this treaty.

One of the main objects of negotiating this treaty was to settle all the troubles along our international waters. The treaty provided for this commission in order that they could inquire and ascertain the facts.

Some people think the commission has not done anything. To my knowledge the commission, the Canadian members and our members, met up here at Warroad, which is right here in the State of Minnesota, where the Canadian Northern Railroad crosses through our territory to go to Winnipeg. They met there last fall or summer and had extensive hearings, summoning people in from all around the borders of the lake. They finally came to the conclusion that in order to adjudicate the matter thoroughly they would have to appoint engineers and experts to take the levels of the lake, ascertain what the levels of the lake were before the dams were built ot Kenora and what they have been since, and what lands have been flooded—in other words, to get at the exact facts.

That is something of the work that I know about within my own knowledge. The commission notified me of their hearing and requested me to attend; but it happened that it was during the political campaign, so that I could not go.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, then, we have this much of a report—that during the summer, when it is a delightful time to meet up there, these commissioners met and determined that it was necessary to employ an expert?

Mr. NELSON. The Senator has no business to understand anything of that sort. I said the commission met there and held hearings and examined witnesses.

Mr. BORAH. And they finally determined that is was necessary to employ an expert. It requires three commissioners to do that; and we are paying them $100,000 for what one man could determine, and what the Senator from Minnesota could have suggested without any summer vacation at all.

Mr. NELSON. That would be very good if we could appoint the Senator from Idaho to go up there and settle disputes between us and Canada.

Mr. BORAH. I would be delighted to go visiting with the Senator from Minnesota, but there is no necessity to go to Minnesota in order to have the matter properly attended to. The Senator from Minnesota will do that. But there is nothing in his statement which discloses to anyone's mind the necessity of this commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from New York has convinced me of the necessity for the commission for a time at least. What I should like to know is, if anyone here has the information, what salaries are paid by Canada to her commissioners.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that the three commissioners in Canada get the same salary that the commissioners of the United States receive.

Mr. CUMMINS. What are the expenses of the Canadians aside from salaries?

Mr. SMOOT. Evidently the expenses are the same as the expenses of the United States commissioners.

Mr. CUMMINS. But does the Senator from Utah know that?

Mr. SMOOT. All I know is that the report came here from one of the commissioners.

Mr. CUMMINS. We have appropriated here $100,000. Twenty-two thousand five hundred dollars are necessary for salaries, leaving $77,500 for traveling expenses, clerks, and so forth. I should like to know whether it costs Canada $77,500 for the support of the commission aside from the salaries.

Mr. BRISTOW. I understand that the hundred thousand dollars is in addition to the salaries and go to the expenses of the commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. No.

Mr. SMOOT. This is also to take care of the expenses, and the salaries of the commissioners until June 30, 1914. This is the expense not only for the four months they are yet to go on with the calendar year, but it provides for the expenses up to June 30, 1914, to the extent of $100,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. Why do we make an appropriation for the remainder of this year? Were they not appropriated for last year?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; they were appropriated for. I can not say whether there is really enough to carry them until June 30 or not, but I say this provides for that and also for the salaries and expenses of the commission for the full year.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then the commission must have been put to greater expense than it was authorized to incur.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not say that the appropriation already made will not cover until June 30 of this year.

Mr. CUMMINS. What has impressed me is that possibly we were providing too many accessories for the commission, too many officers, too many clerks, and that sort of thing. We ought to make a reasonable limitation.

Mr. OVERMAN. They have $75,000 already on hand. They are given the unexpended balance, which means $79,000, and in addition to that they are given $100,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not see how the commissioners can spend such a sum of money.

Mr. BORAH. They employ experts.

Mr. CUMMINS. This does not cover experts.

Mr. BORAH. What does it cover?

Mr. CUMMINS. The experts will be aside from this.

Mr. OVERMAN. The salary paid is $4,500, and there are clerks.

Mr. SMOOT. This covers all the expenses of the commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator thinks it covers the expenses of the commission, but if the commission has occasion to employ an expert it would not cover the expert, and we would have to pay the expert in the future, I assume.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me call the Senator's attention to the wording. It says:

> Expense of printing, purchase of books, periodicals, and papers, and all necessary traveling and other expenses, and for the one-half of all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the International Joint Commission incurred under the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the use of boundary waters between the United States and Canada and other purposes.

Mr. OVERMAN. We struck out periodicals.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not believe it would cover the pay of many men as experts.

Mr. BORAH. I ask the Senator from Utah what kind of books and periodicals this is supposed to provide for?

Mr. CURTIS. If I may answer, we struck out books and periodicals. It would only include printing.

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly; we struck that out in committee.

Mr. CURTIS. It was stricken out in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. BORAH. It is not stricken out in this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator is perfectly right.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is the way it happened. The item was put on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. I made objection to it and it was stricken out. It now comes here in another appropriation bill. We considered it on the diplomatic appropriation bill and we struck out the words "printing and periodicals." Then finding that they had $79,000 on hand, I thought that was sufficient for them, and in addition to that we struck out the whole item. Now it comes here in this shape, because certain parties came before the committee and said it was absolutely necessary. But in addition to that we struck out the words "periodicals and papers," because we did not want to have the commission sending for Munsey's and the other magazines and getting all the newspapers.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe the committee did agree to strike out "periodicals and papers." It will all be in conference and no doubt that will go out, or we could amend it now by striking out periodicals and papers.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that anything would be gained by striking it out, because they will spend the $100,000, anyway.

Mr. SMOOT. Not necessarily.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to have the Senator from Utah watch and see how much they do not spend.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Did I understand the Senator from Utah to say that the treaty under which the commission exists would expire in two years?

Mr. SMOOT. As I remember the date, the life of the treaty ends May 10, 1915.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then the commission would expire?

Mr. ROOT. It remains in force for five years dating from the day of exchange of ratifications, which was May 10, 1910, and thereafter until terminated by 12 months' written notice, given by either party to the treaty.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that the Senator from Kansas has a letter giving a full explanation of the details, perhaps the expenditures and the working, and the letter may explain the matter better than we can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

FEBRUARY 24, 1913.

Hon. HENRY D. FLOOD,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FLOOD: In compliance with your request of this morning I herewith submit the following detailed estimate of the amount necessary to meet the expenditures on account of the United States section of the international joint commission under treaty of January 11, 1909, and the one-half of the joint expenses of the international joint commission in carrying on the work of the commission, including investigation of questions heretofore referred and of additional questions to be referred to the commission by the Governments of the United States and the Dominion of Canada under Article IX of said treaty during the fiscal year 1914.

These estimates are based upon actual expenditures made for the same purposes in the carrying on of this work during the latter half of the current fiscal year.

Investigation and report on the Lake of the Woods controversy, referred under article 9 of the treaty by the joint action of the United States and Canada.

Investigation of pollution of boundary waters	34,650
Regular and special meetings	2,000
Fixed charges	42,050
Total amount payable by the United States	98,100

I am advised, unofficially, that between now and the close of the next fiscal year there are other questions of difference between the Governments and their inhabitants that in all probability will be referred to the commission for investigation and report under Article IX. I am also advised that applications for the approval of the commission under Articles III and IV of the treaty of certain contemplated projects involving the use of these boundary waters for power and other purposes will be made within the next year, in which case the commission will have to afford the applicants and their opponents a prompt hearing under our rules, so that the appropriation of $100,000, with the unexpended balance, will not, in view of existing and prospective work, be in excess of what should be provided for fixed charges and our share of the joint expenses, which, under Article XII of the treaty, we have agreed to pay.

The sessions of the commission held during the past six months at different places along the boundary have afforded the inhabitants of both countries an opportunity to become acquainted with the purposes and functions and the jurisdiction of the commission, especially in respect to the consideration and final adjudication of their common interest and right in the use of these boundary waters. Since the use of these waters is becoming more and more valuable all the time in the industrial development on both sides of the line, and also for sanitary and domestic purposes, and the approval of this commission is, under the treaty, the first essential to their use, we may reasonably expect that applications for such approval will become more and more frequent.

With the work the commission now has before it, and with a knowledge gained from experience during the past six months concerning the expenses incident to the carrying on of that work, I consider the foregoing to be a conservative estimate of the amount that will be required to meet the fixed charges of the commission and the obligation of our Government to pay one-half of the joint expenses.

Yours, very truly,

——— ———, Chairman.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I ask leave to have the treaty published in the RECORD in connection with my remarks. I have a copy of it here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The treaty referred to is as follows:

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN—BOUNDARY WATERS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

(Signed at Washington, January 11, 1909. Ratification advised by the Senate, March 3, 1909. Ratified by the President, April 1, 1910. Ratified by Great Britain, March 31, 1910. Ratifications exchanged at Washington, May 5, 1910. Proclaimed, May 13, 1910.)

A proclamation by the President of the United States of America.

Whereas a treaty between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, to prevent disputes regarding the use of boundary waters and to settle all questions which are now pending between the United States and the Dominion of Canada involving the rights, obligations, or interests of either in relation to the other or to the inhabitants of the other, along their common frontier, and to make provision for the adjustment and settlement of all such questions as may hereafter arise, was concluded and signed by their respective plenipotentiaries at Washington on the 11th day of January, 1909, the original of which treaty is word for word as follows:

The United States of America and His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, being equally desirous to prevent disputes regarding the use of boundary waters and to settle all questions which are now pending between the United States and the Dominion of Canada involving the rights, obligations, or interests of either in relation to the other or to the inhabitants of the other, along their common frontier, and to make provision for the adjustment and settlement of all such questions as may hereafter arise, have resolved to conclude a treaty in furtherance of these ends, and for that purpose have appointed as their respective plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of State of the United States; and

His Britannic Majesty, the Right Hon. James Bryce, O. M., his ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary at Washington:

Who, after having communicated to one another their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

PRELIMINARY ARTICLE.

For the purposes of this treaty boundary waters are defined as the waters from main shore to main shore of the lakes and rivers and connecting waterways, or the portions thereof, along which the international boundary between the United States and the Dominion of Canada passes, including all bays, arms, and inlets thereof, but not including tributary waters which in their natural channels would flow into such lakes, rivers, and waterways, or waters flowing from such lakes, rivers, and waterways, or the waters of rivers flowing across the boundary.

ARTICLE I.

The high contracting parties agree that the navigation of all navigable boundary waters shall forever continue free and open for the purposes of commerce to the inhabitants and to the ships, vessels, and boats of both countries equally, subject, however, to any laws and regulations of either country, within its own territory, not inconsistent with such privilege of free navigation and applying equally and without discrimination to the inhabitants, ships, vessels, and boats of both countries.

It is further agreed that so long as this treaty shall remain in force this same right of navigation shall extend to the waters of Lake Michigan and to all canals connecting boundary waters, and now existing or which may hereafter be constructed on either side of the line. Either of the high contracting parties may adopt rules and regulations governing the use of such canals within its own territory and may charge tolls for the use thereof, but all such rules and regulations and all tolls charged shall apply alike to the subjects or citizens of the high contracting parties and the ships, vessels, and boats of both of the high contracting parties, and they shall be placed on terms of equality in the use thereof.

ARTICLE II.

Each of the high contracting parties reserves to itself or to the several State governments on the one side and the Dominion or provincial governments on the other, as the case may be, subject to any treaty provisions now existing with respect thereto, the exclusive jurisdiction and control over the use and diversion, whether temporary or permanent, of all waters on its own side of the line which in their natural channels would flow across the boundary or into boundary waters; but it is agreed that any interference with or diversion from their natural channel of such waters on either side of the boundary, resulting in any injury on the other side of the boundary, shall give rise to the same rights and entitle the injured parties to the same legal remedies as if such injury took place in the country where such diversion or interference occurs; but this provision shall not apply to cases already existing or to cases expressly covered by special agreement between the parties hereto.

It is understood, however, that neither of the high contracting parties intends by the foregoing provision to surrender any right which it may have to object to any interference with or diversions of waters on the other side of the boundary the effect of which would be productive of material injury to the navigation interests on its own side of the boundary.

ARTICLE III.

It is agreed that, in addition to the uses, obstructions, and diversions heretofore permitted or hereafter provided for by special agreement between the parties hereto, no further or other uses or obstructions or diversions, whether temporary or permanent, of boundary waters on either side of the line, affecting the natural level or flow of boundary waters on the other side of the line, shall be made except by authority of the United States or the Dominion of Canada within their respective jurisdictions and with the approval, as hereinafter provided, of a joint commission, to be known as the International Joint Commission.

The foregoing provisions are not intended to limit or interfere with the existing rights of the Government of the United States on the one side and the Government of the Dominion of Canada on the other, to undertake and carry on governmental works in boundary waters for the deepening of channels, the construction of breakwaters, the improvement of harbors, and other governmental works for the benefit of commerce and navigation, provided that such works are wholly on its own side of the line and do not materially affect the level or flow of the boundary waters on the other, nor are such provisions intended to interfere with the ordinary use of such waters for domestic and sanitary purposes.

ARTICLE IV.

The high contracting parties agree that, except in cases provided for by special agreement between them, they will not permit the construction or maintenance on their respective sides of the boundary of any remedial or protective works or any dams or other obstructions in waters flowing from boundary waters or in waters at a lower level than the boundary in rivers flowing across the boundary, the effect of which is to raise the natural level of waters on the other side of the boundary unless the construction or maintenance thereof is approved by the aforesaid International joint commission.

It is further agreed that the waters herein defined as boundary waters and waters flowing across the boundary shall not be polluted on either side to the injury of health or property on the other.

ARTICLE V.

The high contracting parties agree that it is expedient to limit the diversion of waters from the Niagara River so that the level of Lake Erie and the flow of the stream shall not be appreciably affected. It is the desire of both parties to accomplish this object with the least possible injury to investments which have already been made in the construction of power plants on the United States side of the river under grants of authority from the State of New York, and on the Canadian side of the river under licenses authorized by the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Ontario.

So long as this treaty shall remain in force no diversion of the waters of the Niagara River above the Falls from the natural course and stream thereof shall be permitted except for the purposes and to the extent hereinafter provided.

The United States may authorize and permit the diversion within the State of New York of the waters of said river above the Falls of Niagara for power purposes not exceeding in the aggregate a daily diversion at the rate of 20,000 cubic feet of water per second.

The United Kingdom, by the Dominion of Canada, or the Province of Ontario, may authorize and permit the diversion within the Province of Ontario of the waters of said river above the Falls of Niagara for power purposes not exceeding in the aggregate a daily diversion at the rate of 36,000 cubic feet of water per second.

The prohibitions of this article shall not apply to the diversion of water for sanitary or domestic purposes, or for the service of canals for the purposes of navigation.

ARTICLE VI.

The high contracting parties agree that the St. Mary and Milk Rivers and their tributaries (in the State of Montana and the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan) are to be treated as one stream for the purposes of irrigation and power, and the waters thereof shall be apportioned equally between the two countries, but in making such equal apportionment more than half may be taken from one river and less than half from the other by either country so as to afford a more beneficial use to each. It is further agreed that in the division of such waters during the irrigation season, between the 1st of April and 31st of October, inclusive, annually, the United States is entitled to a prior appropriation of 500 cubic feet per second of the waters of the Milk River, or so much of such amount as constitutes three-fourths of its natural flow, and that Canada is entitled to a prior appropriation of 500 cubic feet per second of the flow of St. Mary River, or so much of such amount as constitutes three-fourths of its natural flow.

The channel of the Milk River in Canada may be used at the convenience of the United States for the conveyance, while passing through Canadian territory, of waters diverted from the St. Mary River. The provisions of Article II of this treaty shall apply to any injury resulting to property in Canada from the conveyance of such waters through the Milk River.

The measurement and apportionment of the water to be used by each country shall from time to time be made jointly by the properly constituted reclamation officers of the United States and the properly constituted irrigation officers of His Majesty under the direction of the International Joint Commission.

ARTICLE VII.

The high contracting parties agree to establish and maintain an International Joint Commission of the United States and Canada composed of six commissioners, three on the part of the United States appointed by the President thereof, and three on the part of the United Kingdom appointed by His Majesty on the recommendation of the Governor in Council of the Dominion of Canada.

ARTICLE VIII.

The International Joint Commission shall have jurisdiction over and shall pass upon all cases involving the use or obstruction or diversion of the waters with respect to which under Articles III and IV of this treaty the approval of this commission is required, and in passing upon such cases the commission shall be governed by the following rules or principles which are adopted by the high contracting parties for this purpose.

The high contracting parties shall have, each on its own side of the boundary, equal and similar rights in the use of the waters hereinbefore defined as boundary waters.

The following order of precedence shall be observed among the various uses enumerated hereinafter for these waters, and no use shall be permitted which tends materially to conflict with or restrain any other use which is given preference over it in this order of precedence:

(1) Uses for domestic and sanitary purposes;

(2) Uses for navigation, including the service of canals for the purposes of navigation;

(3) Uses for power and for irrigation purposes.

The foregoing provisions shall not apply to or disturb any existing uses of boundary waters on either side of the boundary.

The requirement for an equal division may, in the discretion of the commission, be suspended in cases of temporary diversions along boundary waters at points where such equal division can not be made advantageously on account of local conditions, and where such diversion does not diminish elsewhere the amount available for use on the other side.

The commission, in its discretion, may make its approval in any case conditional upon the construction of remedial or protective works to compensate so far as possible for the particular use or diversion proposed, and in such cases may require that suitable and adequate provision, approved by the commission, be made for the protection and indemnity against injury of any interests on either side of the boundary.

In cases involving the elevation of the natural level of waters on either side of the line as a result of the construction or maintenance on the other side of remedial or protective works or dams or other obstructions in boundary waters or in waters flowing therefrom or in waters below the boundary in rivers flowing across the boundary, the Commission shall require, as a condition of its approval thereof, that suitable and adequate provision, approved by it, be made for the protection and indemnity of all interests on the other side of the line which may be injured thereby.

The majority of the commissioners shall have power to render a decision. In case the commission is evenly divided upon any question or matter presented to it for decision, separate reports shall be made by the commissioners on each side to their own Government. The high contracting parties shall thereupon endeavor to agree upon an adjustment of the question or matter of difference, and if an agreement is reached between them, it shall be reduced to writing in the form of a protocol, and shall be communicated to the commissioners, who shall take such further proceedings as may be necessary to carry out such agreement.

ARTICLE IX.

The high contracting parties further agree that any other questions or matters of difference arising between them involving the rights, obligations, or interests of either in relation to the other or to the inhabitants of the other, along the common frontier between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, shall be referred from time to time to the International Joint Commission for examination and report, whenever either the Government of the United States or the Government of the Dominion of Canada shall request that such questions or matters of difference be so referred.

The International Joint Commission is authorized in each case so referred to examine into and report upon the facts and circumstances of the particular questions and matters referred, together with such conclusions and recommendations as may be appropriate, subject, however, to any restrictions or exceptions which may be imposed with respect thereto by the terms of the reference.

Such reports of the commission shall not be regarded as decisions of the questions or matters so submitted either on the facts or the law, and shall in no way have the character of an arbitral award.

The commission shall make a joint report to both Governments in all cases in which all or a majority of the commissioners agree, and in case of disagreement the minority may make a joint report to both Governments, or separate reports to their respective Governments.

In case the commission is evenly divided upon any question or matter referred to it for report, separate reports shall be made by the commissioners on each side to their own Government.

ARTICLE X.

Any questions or matters of difference arising between the high contracting parties involving the rights, obligations, or interests of the United States or of the Dominion of Canada either in relation to each other or to their respective inhabitants, may be referred for decision to the International Joint Commission by the consent of the two parties, it being understood that on the part of the United States any such action will be by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and on the part of His Majesty's Government with the consent of the Governor General in Council. In each case so referred, the said Commission is authorized to examine into and report upon the facts and circumstances of the particular questions and matters referred, together with such conclusions and recommendations as may be appropriate, subject, however, to any restrictions or exceptions which may be imposed with respect thereto by the terms of the reference.

A majority of the said commission shall have power to render a decision or finding upon any of the questions or matters so referred.

If the said commission is equally divided or otherwise unable to render a decision or finding as to any questions or matters so referred, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to make a joint report to both Governments, or separate reports to their respective Governments, showing the different conclusions arrived at with regard to the matters or questions so referred, which questions or matters shall thereupon be referred for decision by the high contracting parties to an umpire chosen in accordance with the procedure prescribed in the fourth, fifth, and sixth paragraphs of Article XLV of The Hague convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes, dated October 18, 1907. Such umpire shall have power to render a final decision with respect to those matters and questions so referred on which the commission failed to agree.

ARTICLE XI.

A duplicate original of all decisions rendered and joint reports made by the commission shall be transmitted to and filed with the Secretary of State of the United States and the Governor General of the Dominion of Canada, and to them shall be addressed all communications of the commission.

ARTICLE XII.

The International Joint Commission shall meet and organize at Washington promptly after the members thereof are appointed, and when organized the commission may fix such times and places for its meetings as may be necessary, subject at all times to special call or direction by the two Governments. Each commissioner, upon the first joint meeting of the commission after his appointment, shall, before proceeding with the work of the commission, make and subscribe a solemn declaration in writing that he will faithfully and impartially perform the duties imposed upon him under this treaty, and such declaration shall be entered on the records of the proceedings of the commission.

The United States and Canadian sections of the commission may each appoint a secretary, and these shall act as joint secretaries of the commission at its joint sessions, and the commission may employ engineers and clerical assistants from time to time as it may deem advisable. The salaries and personal expenses of the commission and of the secretaries shall be paid by their respective Governments, and all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the commission, incurred by it, shall be paid in equal moieties by the high contracting parties.

The commission shall have power to administer oaths to witnesses, and to take evidence on oath whenever deemed necessary in any proceeding or inquiry or matter within its jurisdiction under this treaty, and all parties interested therein shall be given convenient opportunity to be heard, and the high contracting parties agree to adopt such legislation as may be appropriate and necessary to give the commission the powers above mentioned on each side of the boundary, and to provide for the issue of subpœnas and for compelling the attendance of witnesses in proceedings before the commission. The commission may adopt such rules of procedure as shall be in accordance with justice and equity, and may make such examination in person and through agents or employees as may be deemed advisable.

ARTICLE XIII.

In all cases where special agreements between the high contracting parties hereto are referred to in the foregoing articles, such agreements are understood and intended to include not only direct agreements between the high contracting parties, but also any mutual arrangement between the United States and the Dominion of Canada expressed by concurrent or reciprocal legislation on the part of Congress and the Parliament of the Dominion.

ARTICLE XIV.

The present treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by His Britannic Majesty. The ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible and the treaty shall take effect on the date of the exchange of its ratifications. It shall remain in force for five years, dating from the day of exchange of ratifications, and thereafter until terminated by 12 months' written notice given by either high contracting party to the other.

In faith whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed this treaty in duplicate and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done at Washington the 11th day of January, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and nine.

(Signed) ELIHU ROOT. [SEAL.]
(Signed) JAMES BRYCE. [SEAL.]

And whereas the Senate of the United States by their resolution of March 3, 1909 (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), did advise and consent to the ratification of the said treaty with the following understanding, to wit:

"Resolved further, as a part of this ratification, That the United States approves this treaty with the understanding that nothing in this treaty shall be construed as affecting or changing any existing territorial or riparian rights in the water, or rights of the owners of lands under water, on either side of the international boundary at the rapids of the St. Marys River at Sault Ste. Marie, in the use of the waters flowing over such lands, subject to the requirements of navigation in boundary waters and of navigation canals, and without prejudice to the existing right of the United States and Canada, each to use the waters of the St. Marys River, within its own territory, and, further, that nothing in this treaty shall be construed to interfere with the drainage of wet swamp and overflowed lands into streams flowing into boundary waters, and that this interpretation will be mentioned in the ratification of this treaty as conveying the true meaning of the treaty, and will, in effect, form part of the treaty";

And whereas the said understanding has been accepted by the Government of Great Britain and the ratifications of the two Governments of the said treaty were exchanged in the City of Washington on the 5th day of May, 1910;

Now, therefore, be it known that I, William Howard Taft, President of the United States of America, have caused the said treaty and the said understanding, as forming a part thereof, to be made public, to the end that the same and every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 13th day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and ten, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-fourth.

[SEAL.] WM. H. TAFT.

By the President:
P. C. KNOX,
Secretary of State.

PROTOCOL OF EXCHANGE.

On proceeding to the exchange of the ratifications of the treaty signed at Washington on January 11, 1909, between the United States and Great Britain, relating to boundary waters and questions arising along the boundary between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, the undersigned plenipotentiaries, duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, hereby declare that nothing in this treaty shall be construed as affecting, or changing, any existing territorial, or riparian rights in the water, or rights of the owners of lands under water, on either side of the international boundary at the rapids of the St. Marys River at Sault Ste. Marie, in the use of the waters flowing over such lands, subject to the requirements of navigation in boundary waters and of navigation canals, and without prejudice to the existing right of the United States and Canada, each to use the waters of the St. Marys River within its own territory, and, further, that nothing in this treaty shall be construed to interfere with the drainage of wet, swamp, and overflowed lands into streams flowing into boundary waters, and also that this declaration shall be deemed to have equal force and effect as the treaty itself and to form an integral part thereto.

The exchange of ratifications then took place in the usual form.

In witness whereof they have signed the present protocol of exchange and have affixed their seals thereto.

Done at Washington this 5th day of May, 1910.

PHILANDER C. KNOX. [SEAL.]
JAMES BRYCE. [SEAL.]

The next amendment was, on page 167, after line 23, to insert:

The appropriation in the sundry civil act approved March 4, 1911, for removing fence and wall around the Botanic Garden, and for such grading, soiling, seeding, and sodding as may be incident thereto, is hereby made available for said purposes for the fiscal year 1914.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 168, after line 4, to insert:

Senate: For indexing, when necessary, reports and hearings of Senate committees and joint committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, under the direction of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 168, after line 9, to insert:

Senate Office Building: For maintenance, miscellaneous items and supplies, and for all necessary personal and other services for the care and operation of the Senate Office Building, under the direction and supervision of the Senate Committee on Rules, $46,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Government Printing Office," subhead public printing and binding, on page 169, line 16, after the words "Public Printer," to strike out "$4,500," and insert "$5,500;"

Office of the Public Printer: Public Printer, $5,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 169, in line 22, after the word "clerks," to strike out "two at $2,000 each," and insert "one at $2,000."

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. I think the chairman of the committee will not insist upon it.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the amendment be not agreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 169, in line 23, before the words "of class four," to strike out "nine" and insert "ten."

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. The two stand together.

Mr. WARREN. The two amendments stand disagreed to, and it leaves it as the House had it?

Mr. CUMMINS. As the House provided.

The next amendment was, on page 170, line 7, after the words "in all," to strike out "$131,060" and insert "$131,860."

Mr. SMOOT. That should stand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair assumes that the change in the total ought to be disagreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I have already asked unanimous consent to have the clerks take care of the totals.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be done.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing and binding, etc., on page 172, line 6, after the word "work," to strike out "4,463,820" and insert "$4,464,020," so as to read:

Necessary equipment, maintenance, and supplies for the emergency room for the use of all employees in the Government Printing Office who may be taken suddenly ill or receive injury while on duty; other necessary contingent and miscellaneous items authorized by the Public Printer; and for all the necessary materials and equipment needed in the prosecution and delivery and mailing of the work, $4,464,020.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 174, line 18, after "$200," to insert "Provided, That any unexpended balance of the allotment for 1913 of $2,000 for 1,500 copies of volume 3 of the Annals of the Astrophysical Observatory is hereby made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914," so as to read:

For the Smithsonian Institution, for printing and binding the Annual Reports of the Board of Regents, with general appendixes, $10,000; under the Smithsonian Institution, for the Annual Reports of the National Museum, with general appendixes, and for printing labels and blanks, and for the Bulletins and Proceedings of the National Museum, the editions of which shall not exceed 4,000 copies, and binding, in half morocco or material not more expensive, scientific books and pamphlets presented to or acquired by the National Museum Library, $37,500; for the Annual Reports and Bulletins of the Bureau of American Ethnology, and for miscellaneous printing and binding for the bureau, $21,000; for miscellaneous printing and binding for the International Exchanges, $200; the International Catalogue of Scientific Literature, $100; the National Zoological Park, $200; for miscellaneous printing and binding for the Astrophysical Observatory, $200: Provided, That any unexpended balance of the allotment for 1913 of $2,000 for 1,500 copies of volume 3 of the Annals of the Astrophysical Observatory is hereby made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for the Annual Report of the American Historical Association, $7,000; in all, $76,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Superintendent of Documents," on page 177, line 7, after the word "clerks," to strike out "one" and insert "two"; in the same line, before the words "of class 3," to strike out "four" and insert "three"; and in line 18, after the words "in all," to strike out "$98,364" and insert "$98,564," so as to make the clause read:

Superintendent, $3,500; assistant superintendent, $2,500; clerks—2 of class 4, 3 of class 3, 4 of class 2, 8 of class 1, 8 at $1,000 each, 6 at $900 each, 10 at $720 each; cataloguer in charge, $1,800; cataloguers—2 at $1,500 each, 3 at $1,200 each, 1 at $1,100, 7 at $1,000 each, 3 at $900 each; cashier, $1,600; librarian, $1,500; shipper in charge, $1,200; stock keepers—1 at $1,100, 3 at $1,000 each, 5 at $900 each, 2 at $720 each; 2 assistant messengers, at $720 each; 3 mailers, at $840 each; janitress, $626; 2 folders, at $626 each; 11 laborers, at $626 each; 5 messenger boys, at $420 each; in all, $98,564.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "The Panama Canal," on page 180, line 24, after the words "Panama Canal," to insert "including the purchase, or construction in Government yards, in accordance with plans and specifications to be prepared by the Navy Department, and to have a cargo capacity of $12,000 tons of coal and a speed of at least 14 knots per hour, two colliers to cost not exceeding $1,000,000 each," so as to read:

Fifth. For the purchase and delivery of material, supplies, and equipment, including cost of inspecting material and of paying traveling expenses incident thereto, whether on the Isthmus or elsewhere, and such other expenses not in the United States as the commission deems necessary to best promote the construction of the Panama Canal, including the purchase, or construction in Government yards, in accordance with plans and specifications to be prepared by the Navy Department, and to have a cargo capacity of 12,000 tons of coal and a speed of at least 14 knots per hour, two colliers to cost not exceeding $1,000,000 each, and including the payment of damages caused to the owners of private lands, or private property of any kind, by reason of the grants contained in the treaty between the United States and the Republic of Panama proclaimed February 26, 1904.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee whether, at the bottom of page 180, where it says including the purchase of these vessels, the law provided that they may be purchased anywhere—abroad or in this country?

Mr. WARREN. As I recall it, we took the House provision which they had incorporated in the bill and which went out on a point of order. We did not go into the examination beyond what we found in the House bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to suggest to the chairman if it would not be proper to provide that they should be purchased in the United States if, in the discretion of the President, they could be had at a proper price.

Mr WARREN. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator, who is chairman of the great committee which handles Panama Canal matters, if he desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not care to offer an amendment, but my impression was that the policy of the Government in the construction of the Panama Canal was to buy all they could in this country if they could get it at a price which was proper. I thought that in the interest of protection to American shipbuilders it would be proper.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is entirely right, but I had supposed that under no circumstances would they be bought anywhere else, except in great stress, in case of war or something of that kind.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If there is no objection, I would suggest that after the word "purchase" there be inserted the words "in the United States if, in the discretion of the President, they can be had at a reasonable price."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 180, line 25, in the amendment of the committee, after the word "purchase," it is proposed to insert "in the United States if, in the discretion of the President, they can be purchased at a reasonable price."

Mr. LODGE. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that what we desire to do is to buy vessels built in this country. The amendment suggested would authorize the purchase of a foreign vessel which had been brought in here.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A foreign vessel could not be brought in here without paying the duty before it got here, and then it could not have American registry, could it?

Mr. LODGE. It could not have American registry. If you will say "including the purchase of vessels of American registry," it would be all right.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. All I desire is to call it to the attention of the conference committee.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senate committee amendment really intended to have the vessels built in Government yards. It reads "including the purchase or construction in Government yards."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not care even to press the amendment. What has appeared in the RECORD will call the matter to the attention of the conferees, and that is what I was trying to do.

Mr. WARREN. It can be inserted in conference, if necessary.

Mr. LODGE. I move to strike out the words——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut withdraw his amendment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I withdraw the amendment, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] can offer it to suit himself.

Mr. LODGE. I move to strike out the words "purchase, or."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to suggest in regard to that—and it is only a suggestion—that if the colliers were needed immediately by the Government it would take some time to build them in Government yards, and that would, perhaps, prevent the acquisition of the colliers. However, it will not make any difference what amendment is adopted here; the whole matter will go to conference, I assume.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment, on page 182, line 25, by striking out the words "purchase, or."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Fortifications, Panama Canal," on page 187, after line 15, to insert:

Four drainage ditches, each 2,000 yards long, at $1 per yard, $8,000.
Toro Point—
For four drainage ditches, each 1,000 yards long, at $1 per yard, $4,000.
For 5,000 yards small cemented ditches with necessary clearing, at $2 per yard, $10,000.
Miraflores Locks (surroundings)—
For cemented drainage ditches, straightening spillway, and for making the present dump suitable for concentration camp, $10,000.
Gatun Locks (surroundings)—
For cemented drainage ditches between dam and Agua Clara Reservoir, and on dam and vicinity, $8,000.
For clearing and improving edge of lake in vicinity of Gatun and dam, $4,000.
Permanent post site—
For drainage ditches, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 189, line 5, after the words "Panama Canal," to strike out "$4,870,000" and insert "$4,926,000," so as to read:

In all, specifically for fortifications and armament thereof for the Panama Canal, $4,926,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 190, after line 11, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That during the fiscal year 1914 all moneys received by the Isthmian Canal Commission, or the governor of the Panama Canal, from any services rendered or materials and supplies furnished employees, the Panama Railroad Co., the Canal Zone government, the Panama Government, and other departments of the United States Government, from hotel and hospital supplies and services; from rentals, wharfage, etc.; from labor, materials, and supplies and other services furnished vessels and to those unable to obtain similar labor, materials, supplies, and services elsewhere, shall be credited to the appropriation from which payments for the materials, supplies, labor, or other services were originally made; except that moneys received from the sale of material and equipment purchased and used for construction purposes, and as a reimbursement for the expenditures incurred in constructing waterworks, sewers, and pavements in the cities of Panama and Colon, including interest on such expenditures, excluding payments on account of the expenses for maintenance of such waterworks, sewers, and pavements incurred under agreement with the Panama Government, and otherwise herein disposed of, shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts; and except that after the canal is opened for use and operation the net profits accruing from the operations herein authorized shall annually be covered into the Treasury of the United States, as provided for the profits accruing from the business authorized in section 6 of the Panama Canal Act.

That until the close of the fiscal year 1914, when any material, supplies, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased or acquired for the construction of the Panama Canal is no longer needed, or is no longer serviceable, it may be sold in such manner as the President may direct, and without advertising in such classes of cases as may be authorized by him.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like some explanation of that paragraph from the chairman of the committee. I believe it is subject to the point of order that it is general legislation. I do not make the point at present, but I should like some explanation.

Mr. WARREN. This section was inserted in the original House bill, but was stricken out on the floor on a point of order. The Secretary of War has very strongly urged us to reinstate the provision in the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has the Canal Commission been heard before the committee on the matter?

Mr. WARREN. I was informed by the chairman of the commission that this provision followed almost exactly the wishes of Col. Goethals, who was before the committee, and that he and his assistants there were in perfect harmony.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is the Senator able to state in what respect this requirement differs from the present method of keeping the accounts?

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator refer to the manner in which the canal accounts and the railroad accounts are to be kept as near as may be in one set of books? To what paragraph does the Senator call especial attention?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I refer to the whole section. Were there any hearings in regard to it? The Senator has referred to one thing I wanted to know, namely, why the Panama Railroad accounts should be kept with the commission's accounts and the supply accounts?

Mr. WARREN. I happen to know from personal talks with Col. Goethals. I know that he was exceedingly anxious that it should be so provided, in the interest of economy and good organization in the work. I have here, if the Senator would like to have it read, the observations of the Secretary of War, who gives the reasons as they appear to the department.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to hear them read.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that in some instances material has been sold without the money going into the Treasury. So far as possible they are endeavoring to have the money taken in go into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, but in other cases, like that of the hotel, they wish to carry out the same system as that at present in vogue.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If legislation was needed, I wondered why it had not been introduced in the form of a bill and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals instead of putting it on an appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. I think the reason of that was because of later conferences. I will say to the Senator that in the last visit of Col. Goethals, and in his examination before the committee, the amounts to be appropriated were greatly reduced, because he reported that they had available funds to a larger extent than had been anticipated. They had more recent advices than were possessed by the regular committee which handles such matters in the other House.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to hear the communication from the Secretary read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 24, 1913.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: Your attention is invited to the following provisions in the sundry civil bill, relating to the Panama Canal, which were stricken out on points of order when the bill was under consideration in the House of Representatives on Friday, the 21st instant:

1. The following language in the fifth item, commencing on line 24, page 172, and ending with the last word on line 4, page 173, was stricken out:

"Including the purchase or construction in Government yards, in accordance with plans and specifications to be prepared by the Navy Department, and to have a cargo capacity of 12,000 tons of coal and a speed of at least 14 knots per hour, 2 colliers to cost not exceeding $1,000,000 each."

The advisability of providing for the two colliers above referred to is very clearly set forth in Col. Goethals's testimony on pages 78 to 87, and pages 282 and 283, of the inclosed report of hearings held by the House Committee on Appropriations on the Isthmus in November last, and it is hoped that your committee will see fit to reinsert the item in the bill. The words "and colliers," line 24, page 176, stricken out of the bill on the floor of the House should also be reinserted. The line and page references are in each instance to the bill as reported in the House, it being impracticable to give you references to the bill as passed in the House as the bill in that form has apparently not yet been printed.

2. All of section 3 of the bill as reported in the House was stricken out on the point of order that it contained new legislation. This section reads as follows:

"SEC. 3. That during the fiscal year 1914 all moneys received by the Isthmian Canal Commission or the governor of the Panama Canal from any services rendered or materials and supplies furnished employees, the Panama Railroad Co., the Canal Zone government, the Panama Government, and other departments of the United States Government from hotel and hospital supplies and services, from rentals, wharfage, etc., from labor, materials, and supplies and other services furnished vessels and to those unable to obtain similar labor, materials, supplies, and services elsewhere shall be credited to the appropriation from which payments for the materials, supplies, labor, or other services were originally made, except that moneys received from the sale of material and equipment purchased and used for construction purposes, and as a reimbursement for the expenditures incurred in constructing water works, sewers, and pavements in the cities of Panama and Colon, including interest on such expenditures, excluding payments on account of the expenses for maintenance of such water works, sewers, and pavements incurred under agreement with the Panama Government and otherwise herein disposed of, shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts; and except that after the canal is opened for use and operation the net profits accruing from the operations herein authorized shall annually be covered into the Treasury of the United States as provided for the profits accruing from the business authorized in section 6 of the Panama Canal act.

"That until the close of the fiscal year 1914 when any material, supplies, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased or acquired for the construction of the Panama Canal is no longer needed, or is no longer serviceable, it may be sold in such manner as the President may direct, and without advertising in such classes of cases as may be authorized by him."

The reasons for the insertion of the first paragraph of the above-quoted section 3 are fully set forth in a note appended to the estimates as submitted to Congress. (See p. 496 of the Book of Estimates, 1914.) This note is also printed on pages 86–87 of the committee print of the estimates for the Panama Canal, 1914, a copy of which is inclosed herewith for your convenience.

The last paragraph of the above-quoted section 3 merely repeats language which has appeared in substantially the same form in the sundry civil appropriation acts since the act approved March 4, 1911.

In view of the foregoing it is hoped that your committee will reinsert this section in the bill.

3. Section 4 of the bill as reported in the House was also stricken out on the point of order that it is a new legislation. This section reads as follows:

"SEC. 4. That the consolidation of the functions of receiving, disbursing, and accounting for the funds of the Canal Zone government and the Panama Railroad operations on the Isthmus with the funds appropriated for the Panama Canal is authorized, in so far as may be practicable, provided that separate accounts shall be kept of the transactions under each fund."

The reason for inserting this section is set forth in a note submitted with the estimates for the Panama Canal, which will be found at page 496 of the Book of Estimates, 1914. This note is also printed on page 88 of the inclosed committee print of the estimates. For further information relative to this section your attention is invited to Col. Goethals's testimony, as set forth on pages 73 and 201 of the inclosed report of hearings before the House Committee on Appropriations hereinbefore mentioned. It is hoped that your committee will also see its way to reinsert this section of the bill.

Very respectfully,

HENRY L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, all that communication states is to repeat the language contained in the bill, and then it says that the reasons for asking the provision to be reinstated will be found in some testimony in the House hearings.

Mr. WARREN. The reasons are in the House hearings.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no doubt of that; but I have not read the House hearings, and I thought the Senator could give the information to the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. I shall undertake to give the Senator any information he desires.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to know something about the testimony.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps the Senator sees the matter in a different light than I do. The profit, for instance, accruing from the operations, and so forth, instead of being turned back into the canal fund, goes, as do the receipts of other property that is sold, into the United States Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt. The railroad and the canal are supposed to be one corporation, and while hereafter there might be separate accounts kept of railroad and canal funds there is no reason why there should be a separate set of employees.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; but if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him and to be more specific, section 3, from line 12 down, provides that these different funds, the moneys received by the commission, the governor of the Panama Canal from any services rendered, and so forth—shall be credited to the appropriation from which payments for the materials, supplies, labor, or other services were originally made.

How have those moneys been credited in the past?

Mr. WARREN. They have been credited as set forth here, and the reason the language is repeated is to differentiate between them and the funds that are to go into the Treasury. It is entirely clear to me, and I am sorry the Senator does not see it in that way.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It did not seem to me, if that be the method employed now, that additional legislation is necessary.

Mr. WARREN. It occurs in this way: We appropriate large sums of money in what might be called "a lump sum." The members of the commission are appreciating the fact now, as they are getting toward the end of the canal building, and, in fact, Congress has been insisting that they should get their accounts into line with those of other Government accounts; that is, that money shall go into the Treasury and be regularly appropriated out. The first part of the provision may be a little ambiguous. It is absolutely what is done now, but it points out to what things it may apply and what must be turned into the Treasury.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, this is most important legislation, affecting the entire relation of the Panama Railroad to the Government. It is, in fact, a supplemental act to the act that was passed last year establishing the Government of the Panama Canal. I make the point of order that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not propose to contest against points of order. I have no interest in it. The Panama Canal can go without legislation. I am willing that it should.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think it is very much better——

Mr. WARREN. But this was the judgment of the House, after most extensive hearings, in which Col. Goethals and all others interested in the canal were examined. I can not see a harmful thing in the legislation, and it seems to me it is a proper thing to let it go. Of course if it is stricken out here, though, it is not a subject of conference.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not want it to be a subject of conference, because it is very important legislation and ought to go before the proper committee of the Senate for consideration.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator know when it will be considered?

Mr. BRISTOW. The Committee on Interoceanic Canals always considers the legislation that comes before it, and it is ready to consider any bills that are introduced.

Mr. WARREN. We have been a long time providing for the future control of the canal in some respects.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think the Committee on Interoceanic Canals has made very desirable provisions for the future control of the canal, and it is not necessary for the Committee on Appropriations to take that legislation out of its hands.

Mr. WARREN. So far as I am concerned, as I say, there is no disposition to do so; but this was a case where this legislation was perfected on the other side, and I considered it the duty of the committee on this side to bring it before the Senate. I do not propose to spend five seconds longer in defending it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, of course I am not contesting the point of order, but perhaps I do not see the gravity of this as I ought to. As I understand, if this amendment is disposed of by the point of order the money received from the sale of material and equipment and money received as reimbursement for expenditures incurred in constructing waterworks, sewers, and pavements will go back to the credit of the appropriation instead of being covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. That is all that will happen.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator does not refer to the appropriations for the Panama Railroad. The Panama Railroad has been run as an independent corporation in a way, but with a certain relationship to the canal.

Mr. LODGE. Is that specifically designated in this amendment?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; I think not.

Mr. LODGE (reading)—

> And except that after the canal is opened for use and operation the net profits accruing from the operations herein authorized shall annually be covered into the Treasury of the United States, as provided for the profits accruing from the business authorized in section 6 of the Panama Canal act.

No; they are specifically excepted. I have been studying that over. The only thing this language does is to take two classes of receipts out of the existing law, and instead of crediting them to an appropriation it sends them back to the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The reason for making that distinction is obvious. They are lump sums received for money already spent. They come back from the sale of material and money reimbursed from the cities for expenditures made. They do not come in what we may call the current work. They are moneys already spent and returned; and for some reason, which seems wise to Col. Goethals and the commissioners, it is thought better to cover them into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts than to go on crediting them to the appropriation. Of course, if the point of order is made, it goes out; but it seems to me that it does not make any other change than that. They will simply go on being credited to the appropriations, and for that reason the people down there will have more money to spend. They will be able to spend the money over again; that is all.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe the Senator from Kansas is in full sympathy with the policy of the Government in the past—that all moneys received from any source should go into the Treasury of the United States. That is all that this language provides. In the past there have been appropriations made for the purchase of materials for construction. That will cease from now on, and it will be reversed. There will be sales of material and sales of machinery that have been purchased for construction. In the past that has gone upon that particular account. Now, we say that if those sales are made, the money that is received from the sales should go into the Treasury of the United States, and not to the credit of that particular account. That is all there is in this provision. I believe that if the Senator feels that is a correct statement of the case, he will not object to it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Kansas had some idea that in some way, under this language, the distinct operation of the Panama Railroad would be impaired. I call the Senator's attention to section 4. It simply provides—

> That the consolidation of the functions of receiving, disbursing, and accounting for the funds of the Canal Zone government and the Panama Railroad operations on the Isthmus with the funds appropriated for the Panama Canal is authorized in so far as may be practicable, provided that separate accounts shall be kept of the transactions under each fund.

I do not see that that has anything to do with the separate operation of the Panama Railroad as a separate company under its charter. I think I understand the matter sufficiently to say that it simply provides for a matter of accounting. As far as I am concerned, I have refrained from making the point of order, and I hope the Senator will not insist upon the point of order, but will at least let the matter go to conference.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I have very, very strong convictions in regard to the merging of these accounts, in regard to requiring the surplus moneys of the railroad to be deposited in the Treasury, it having been heretofore run as a separate corporation, managed by a board of directors appointed by the Secretary of War, who holds the stock in trust for the United States. I am not willing to have any legislation that changes that relationship go into any bill, if I can prevent it, without its being given the most careful consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator tell me how the fund or net profits accruing from the railroad and from the canal are now disposed of according to the law?

Mr. BRISTOW. They are used now just the same as they always have been. It is a separate corporation, just as it was before the United States got control of the stock. The Secretary of War appoints a board of directors and the board of directors control it. They determine what shall be done with the funds of the railroad. It has been a most important factor in the construction of the canal, and in the operation of the road as a commercial line pending the construction of the canal.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator refers to the merging of these accounts. If he will look at section 4, he will find that it specifically provides that separate accounts shall be kept of the transactions under each fund.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am perfectly familiar with it. I am glad to advise the Senator that I understand the provision clearly. It is legislation. I think it is unwise legislation, and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will admit that it is legislation. There is not any question about that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, it occurs to me that there ought to be no good reason for offering the material used in the construction of the Panama Canal at public sale to the highest bidder, and that the best disposition to make of it is to bring it here and use it in doing work on the rivers and harbors, pursuant to acts of Congress. In that case we would not need to bother about the disposition of the proceeds arising from the sale of such machinery.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will say to the Senator from Florida that the Senator from Kansas has reserved his point of order simply to allow me to put a short excerpt in the RECORD. If the point of order is sustained, of course the whole paragraph will go out, and there will be no chance to offer any amendments to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not know but that if that amendment was suggested, the Senator from Kansas would withdraw his point of order, and allow the matter to go through.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well, the Senator can try him after I have finished putting in this excerpt.

Inasmuch as in this paragraph, section 6 of the Panama Canal act is alluded to—it refers to the act approved August 24, 1912—I desire to put into the RECORD what is referred to. The act provides:

> The President is also authorized to establish, maintain, and operate, through the Panama Railroad Co. or otherwise, dry docks, repair shops, yards, docks, wharves, warehouses, storehouses, and other necessary facilities and appurtenances for the purpose of providing coal and other materials, labor, repairs, and supplies for vessels of the Government of the United States and, incidentally, for supplying such at reasonable prices to passing vessels, in accordance with appropriations hereby authorized to be made from time to time by Congress as a part of the maintenance and operation of the said canal. Moneys received from the conduct of said business may be expended and reinvested for such purposes without being covered into the Treasury of the United States; and such moneys are hereby appropriated for such purposes, but all deposits of such funds shall be subject to the provisions of existing law relating to the deposit of other public funds of the United States, and any net profits accruing from such business shall annually be covered into the Treasury of the United States. Monthly reports of such receipts and expenditures shall be made to the President by the persons in charge, and annual reports shall be made to the Congress.

I do not think the amendment that we have been discussing, against which the point of order has been suggested, will make any material change, or any change whatever, in the independent operation of the Panama Railroad, or do anything else than provide a legalized and systematic method of keeping the accounts there. I still have hope, despite the dire prediction that I made a few minutes ago, that the Senator from Kansas will relent and allow the whole matter to go to conference.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, it is hard for me to resist anything that the Senator from Connecticut might ask——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It does not appear to be.

Mr. BRISTOW. But to me it is a most important legislative matter. I have been familiar with the Panama Railroad, and its relation to the construction of the canal, ever since we acquired that property, and I should regret very deeply to see legislation of this kind incorporated into the statutes without its having most careful consideration by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator insist upon his point of order?

Mr. BRISTOW. I must; yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels constrained to rule that the point of order is well taken, on the ground that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 191, after line 21, to insert as a new section the following:

> SEC. 4. That the consolidation of the functions of receiving, disbursing, and accounting for the funds of the Canal Zone government and the Panama Railroad operations on the Isthmus with the funds appropriated for the Panama Canal is authorized in so far as may be practicable, provided that separate accounts shall be kept of the transactions under each fund.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the point of order lies against that, also.

Mr. LODGE. It is all out.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 193, after line 14, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 9. That section 8 of the District of Columbia appropriation act, approved June 26, 1912, shall not take effect or be operative during the fiscal year 1914 except to the extent that it prohibits the payment of membership fees or dues in societies or associations: Provided, That during the fiscal year 1914 expenses of attendance of officers or employees of the Government at any meeting or convention of members of any society or association shall be incurred only on the written authority and direction of the heads of executive departments or other Government establishments or the government of the District of Columbia; and a detailed statement of all such expenses incurred from June 30 until December 1, 1913, shall be submitted to Congress on or before January 1, 1914.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 194, after line 5, to insert:

TO PROVIDE FOR THE PARTICIPATION OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

That there shall be exhibited at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, to be held at San Francisco in 1915, such articles and materials as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government of the United States tending to demonstrate the nature and growth of our institutions, their adaptation to the wants of the people, and the progress of the Nation in the arts of peace and war; and the President is hereby authorized to provide for the collection and exhibition of such articles and materials, under the direction of a board, which is hereby created, to be known as the Government exhibit board, to be composed of one person to be named by the head of each executive department and one each by the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, the Isthmian Canal Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Civil Service Commission, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the American National Red Cross, the Commission of Fine Arts, the Librarian of Congress, the Public Printer, the governor of Porto Rico, the governor of Alaska, and the United States Geographic Board, which Government exhibit board shall be charged with the selection, purchase, preparation, safe keeping, exhibition, and return of such articles and materials as the authorities appointing said board may, respectively, decide shall be exhibited. The President may also designate additional articles for exhibition, whether originating in the United States or her insular possessions. The Pan American Union is hereby invited to make an exhibit illustrating the resources and international relations of American Republics; and in case this invitation be accepted the governing board of the Pan American Union is authorized to appoint a person who shall also be a member of said Government exhibit board, and said board is hereby directed to provide space for said Pan American exhibit. The President shall designate one member of said board as chairman, and the board itself shall appoint its secretary, disbursing officer, and such other officers as it may deem necessary. The membership of said Government exhibit board, with the exception of the representative of the Pan American Union, shall be selected from persons in the employ of the United States, and, with other officers and employees of the Government who may be detailed to assist them, including officers of the Army and Navy, shall receive no compensation in addition to their regular salaries, but all members of said board and assistants so detailed shall be allowed their actual and necessary traveling expenses, together with a per diem in lieu of subsistence, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, while necessarily absent from their homes engaged upon the business of the board. Officers of the Army and Navy shall receive this allowance in lieu of the transportation and mileage now allowed by law. Any provision of law which may prohibit the detail of persons in the employ of the United States to other service than that which they customarily perform shall not apply to persons detailed for duty in connection with said Panama-Pacific International Exposition. Employees of the board not otherwise employed by the Government shall be entitled to such compensation as the board may determine. The disbursing officer shall give bond in the sum of $30,000 for the faithful performance of his duties, said bond to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall advance to said officer from time to time, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, a sum of money from the appropriation hereinafter to be made for the governmental participation in the exposition, not exceeding at any one time the penalty of his bond, to enable him to pay the expenses of exhibition as authorized by the exhibit board.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause a suitable building or buildings to be erected within the Presidio Military Reservation on the site set apart for that purpose, and is hereby authorized and directed to contract therefor in the same manner and under the same regulations as for other public buildings in the United States, the said building or buildings to be constructed from plans to be approved by the Secretary of War and said Government exhibit board.

There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500,000, for the purpose of inaugurating, installing, and maintaining said Government exhibition and for said Government building or buildings; said sum to be paid out by the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The President of the United States is hereby authorized to detail an officer of the Department of State, an officer of the Army, and an officer of the Navy as members of a commission which is hereby constituted, to be known as the National Exposition Commission. The President shall designate one of said commissioners as chairman of the commission. Vacancies in said commission shall be filled in the same manner as original appointments. Each of said commissioners shall receive such pay in addition to his present salary and allowances as will make his total compensation $7,500 per annum; said commissioners shall appoint a secretary at $4,000 per annum, and there is hereby allowed the sum of $10,000 per annum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of defraying the clerical, office, and other necessary and actual expenses of said commission, including necessary traveling expenses. Said commission shall be authorized and empowered to act as a board of arbitration to settle and determine any and all disputes arising between the commissioners of foreign Governments and the directors of said Panama-Pacific International Exposition, whenever a formal request for such action is made by any foreign commissioner; and said National Exposition Commission shall represent the Government of the United States at said exposition in the reception and entertainment of persons officially representing foreign Governments.

Said National Exposition Commissioners shall be detailed not earlier than July 1, 1913, and their term of service as said commissioners shall not extend beyond July 1, 1916; and the President may terminate said commission at any time after January 1, 1916.

Mr. LEA. I move as an amendment to the amendment the amendment favorably reported this afternoon from the Committee on Industrial Expositions.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator offer it as an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. LEA. Yes; I offer it as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Is that the way you are offering it?

Mr. FLETCHER. Amended by adding.

Mr. LEA. By adding.

Mr. WARREN. Adding to the bill?

Mr. LEA. Adding to the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I intended to have that come up separately.

Mr. LEA. Very well.

Mr. JONES. I offer an amendment to the amendment to come in on page 197.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 197, in line 12, strike out "$1,500,000" and insert in lieu "$1,550,000," and after the word "buildings," in line 15, insert:

Of which sum $50,000 shall be used by said Government exhibit board in preparing and installing an Alaska exhibit of such character as said board may determine.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator from Washington will not insist upon that amendment. I think we ought to leave it to those in charge of the exhibit, because if we separate it for one purpose we might as well separate it for all.

Mr. JONES. No; I think not. There is no way in Alaska by which they can get a fund to prepare an exhibit, and, I take it, unless the board of directors prepare an Alaska exhibit they will simply prepare what may be termed a Government exhibit. I hope this small amount may be allowed for this distant territory. There is no other section of the country similarly situated. I hope the chairman will not antagonize the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendments was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to inquire how long it has been since the commission at the St. Louis Exposition went out of existence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator does not direct that inquiry to the Chair, the Chair hopes.

Mr. GORE. I make it universal. I thought probably some member of the Committee on Industrial Expositions might be able to answer the question. I do not remember who is the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I heard only the first question asked by the Senator from Oklahoma about the St. Louis Exposition. How long has it been since the commission went out of existence? The St. Louis Exposition was held, I think, 10 years ago.

Mr. GORE. The exposition was held in 1904, and I think some one told me that the commission is still in existence, doing business at the old stand, or the new stand, or somewhere else.

Mr. ROOT. I dare say that may be, but I call the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma to the fact that this amendment provides that there shall be no commission except officers of the Government discharging their proper functions. There are two commissions provided for—one the ordinary Government exhibit commission, such as we have for all sorts of expositions, large and small. For many years there has been in each Government department a clerk, ordinarily one of the upper clerks, whose business it has been to look after the Government exhibit from that department. The chief clerk of the War Department has always been designated to look after the Government exhibit. He did at Chicago, he did at Jamestown, he did at St. Louis, he did at Seattle, he did at Portland. He is thoroughly familiar with the subject. It does not cost anything. It is a part of his regular business. It is so in each of the other departments.

This amendment provides that the Government shall make an exhibit at San Francisco, and that exhibit is to be prepared and cared for by this collection of representatives of each department.

Mr. GORE. I should like to ask the Senator what is the usual appropriation made by Congress for this Government exhibit. Is it the uniform custom to have a Government exhibit of this sort?

Mr. ROOT. It is. Let me say, further, that we passed a resolution requesting the President to invite all the nations of the earth to attend this exposition. When we did that and the President sent our invitation to them to come here and erect buildings on our soil and make exhibits in order to celebrate our achievement in building the Panama Canal, we incurred an honorable obligation ourselves to erect buildings and make an exhibit, to do what we asked them to do, and we can not forego it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if the representatives of San Francisco, when the contest was on between that city and New Orleans, did not give reiterated assurances that if San Francisco were given the exposition they would not ask the Government to appropriate a cent.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I do not know, and for my part I do not care.

Mr. WORKS. If the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. WORKS. The people of San Francisco or the people of California are not asking the Government to contribute anything toward this exposition. They propose to furnish all the money that is necessary for that purpose. This is simply a question of the Government making its own exhibit. The building that is to be constructed is to be constructed upon Government land, upon its own property, and it is expected that it will be useful for the permanent purposes of the Government.

We are not asking anything from the National Government to carry on this exhibit. That has been done in almost every other case, if not in every case, where an exposition has been held. The Government has not only made its exhibit, but it has furnished money to the corporation of the city or whatever might be the case for carrying on the exhibition itself.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. GORE. There is one other question I should like to ask.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to say just one word; that is all.

Mr. GORE. Very well.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I happened to be a member of the Committee on Industrial Expositions at the time the representatives of these cities came before it and made their representations. I recall distinctly that the representatives of San Francisco made the statement the Senator from California has now made, but stated also that, of course, the matter whether or not the Government would have an exhibit of its own was a question with which they had nothing to do and would be a matter for the Government to determine on its own part.

So I do not think they are in the position of having erected some promise here that we would have a right to refer to in excusing ourselves from having an exhibition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROOT. I thought I had the floor, to answer the Senator from Oklahoma, and I had not completed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Senator from New York to yield, then.

Mr. ROOT. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a few words of pleasant historical reminiscence will not, perhaps, be out of place.

I remember distinctly when all these happenings happened. I was at that time serving my interregnum, a two-year term between my service in the House and in the Senate. The people of New Orleans asked me amongst others to come up and help them get the exposition. I came. The New Orleans people had in their bill a provision almost identical with the one now asked for by the people of San Francisco, providing for a Government building and for a Government exhibit and for no other sort of help at all.

We got to the point where we had about 30 majority in the House of Representatives in favor of New Orleans. San Francisco then came in with a proposition to ask nothing at all of the Government of the United States, and the bill fixing the exposition at San Francisco contained no provision for a Federal building nor for a Federal exhibit, and the assurance was made that San Francisco would never call for it. Whereupon the economy brigade in the House of Representatives, some from several of the Southern and Western States, who had been committed to New Orleans, voted for San Francisco upon the theory that they were saving money to the Federal Treasury.

Some of us said to them, "You are not saving anything, because when a nation commits itself internationally to an exposition it must some day make itself a party to it; you are merely postponing the appropriation. San Francisco may tell you that she does not want a dollar from the Federal Treasury, but she will come in later and ask for an appropriation."

But that reasoning did not prevail, and as a consequence New Orleans lost out on the logical point, as they said at that time, and San Francisco won, and upon the ground that New Orleans was wanting a building erected and an exhibit made by the Federal Government and that San Francisco asked nothing of the sort and never would—at least it was supposed that she never would.

As I said then I believe now, that after a Government commits itself internationally to an exposition the Government becomes necessarily a part and parcel of the exposition to some extent; how far is a matter of wisdom for the legislative body, but, at any rate, some day the thing must happen, and now it has happened.

I had hoped that a point of order would lie, but it will not lie. As far as I am concerned, I have never voted for one of these appropriations by the Federal Government to carry on an exposition. I have my doubt not of its constitutionality but of its wisdom, at any rate, and all that. But I am not at all surprised that San Francisco has found it necessary now to come and make a demand which at that time the Representatives from California, at least in the House, said that she would not find it necessary to make.

Mr. ROOT. I had just said I did not know anything about any representations or promises made by the representatives of San Francisco, and that I did not care.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROOT. Let me proceed for a moment. I do not look upon this as a question as to what San Francisco wants; I look at it as a question as to what comports with the self-respect of the United States in dealing with a great international exposition in her own territory, to which she has invited all the other countries of the world to come and make exhibits. I do not think that one should invite a gentleman to dinner and not attend the dinner. I do think that we incur an obligation when we issue an invitation. What I would be concerned with is that we shall meet that obligation in a decent way. For that reason I was ready to report this amendment.

Now, as to the other phase of this amendment. It is a commission to do certain things at the exposition aside from the Government exhibit. There has been much pulling and hauling at both ends of the Capitol regarding the appointment of commissioners to this exposition. At one time in another place the legislation got into such a form that they had provision for seven commissioners, so as to give $7,500 apiece and expenses, which would have taken about $300,000 out of the funds of this exposition company.

We have brushed all that aside and provide that certain things which ought to be done under the direction of the United States, because we are the host, shall be done by a commission composed of persons already in the employment of the United States, one designated by the President from the Department of State, one from the officers of the Army, and one from the officers of the Navy, to receive no salary except enough to make up the difference between their present pay and $7,500. Those commissioners are charged with two duties. Those duties are provided for in this provision, and they are also provided for by formal resolutions adopted by the exposition corporation. Those are, first, to act as arbitrators in any controversy which may arise between foreign exhibitors and commissioners and the exposition company. Such questions are continually arising regarding space and location. If foreign exhibitors consider themselves aggrieved, as we have invited them here, we are bound to see to it that they have fair treatment, and this provides for it. The other is that these commissioners are authorized to supervise and require the proper reception and entertainment and care for the representatives of foreign countries who come here under our invitation.

There have been many most unfortunate and humiliating incidents at our former expositions, occasions upon which the distinguished representatives of foreign countries coming here under the formal invitation of the Government of the United States have been left to care for themselves and wander around the streets of strange cities, not knowing where to go nor what to do, because nobody was looking after them. The amendment provides authority for this commission of Government officers to see to it that such things do not happen again.

Mr. President, whatever may have happened regarding the St. Louis Exposition Commission—and I know nothing of it—can have but little bearing, and, indeed, no bearing, upon the provisions of this bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have entirely too much faith in and respect for the hospitality of San Francisco to believe that she would permit the stranger within her gates to go uncared for and unattended. I have too much respect for the good faith of San Francisco to believe that she would not feel offended if Congress should vote this gratuity for the exposition, in view of the reiterated assurances that the General Government would not be expected to contribute.

It is just a little singular that if this appropriation was not amongst those contemplated in those assurances that this bill should be sponsored by the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS].

I am willing to go almost any length in the service of that Senator, but I fear me that he might provoke the hostility of the people of the city of San Francisco if we were to suffer this appropriation to be voted.

There is one further objection. This provision retains an Army officer and a naval officer as two of the three members of the exposition commission, the Government being required only to pay the difference between their regular salary and $7,500 per year—I should say a thousand dollars, or such a matter.

Mr. President, I am not willing to save the Government that thousand dollars. Think of the magnificent and the munificent generosity and extravagance exhibited by the Senate last night, and then for the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] to come in here and set up a plea that this Government should save the miserable sum of a thousand dollars. It does not comport with the dignity of the Senate nor with the record and history of the Senate.

I move to strike out the words "Army officer and naval officer." Let us give somebody else a chance. We can expend $7,500 more than has been contemplated, and create the additional necessity for a high tax and a high tariff.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma moves an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, before the amendment is voted on, I desire to reiterate that which I have said before and which was stated by the representatives of the exposition before the Senate committee. California and San Francisco do not want one dollar, either by loan, gift, or otherwise. I was a member of the Committee on Appropriations when our friends from Jamestown came here asking for assistance for the exposition there. We gave them $1,500,000 for their exposition, and loaned them $1,000,000 more, which has not yet all been repaid, while St. Louis had $6,000,000 donated for her exposition buildings and a loan of $4,000,000. I ask the Secretary to read the statement which I send to the desk, which I have prepared in relation to the present status of the various expositions at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

"The pending amendment provides for a Government building and exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition and appropriates $1,500,000 therefor. The amendment follows the language of the act providing for a Government exhibit at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition (sundry civil act of June 28, 1902), and creates a Government Exhibit Board composed exclusively of Government employees to serve without extra pay, and whose duty it is to collect and install the exhibit. The amendment also provides for a National Exposition Commission of three officers to be detailed, respectively, from the Department of State, the Army, and the Navy. This commission is charged with the duty of arbitrating differences arising between the exposition authorities and the foreign commissions. The commission is also required to act as the representative of the United States Government in receiving and entertaining persons officially representing foreign Governments.

"The Panama-Pacific International Exposition is financed entirely by the people of California. The exposition authorities are pledged not to ask Congress for any appropriation whatever, as a gift or loan to the exposition. The appropriation provided for in this amendment relates wholly to the proposed Government exhibit. The committee feels that the appropriation asked for is very moderate, and that all of it is required if the United States is to make an exhibit comparable to the exhibits already provided for by foreign Governments. The amounts heretofore appropriated by Congress for the principal international expositions are as follows (S. Doc. 65, 58th Cong., 3d sess.):

Buffalo Exposition	$1,015,000.00
World's Fair, Chicago	5,840,329.64
New Orleans	1,656,000.00
Paris, 1900	1,472,500.00
Centennial Exposition, Philadelphia	2,533,184.59
Louisiana Purchase Exposition	11,179,000.00

"The appropriation for a Government building and exhibit at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition was $1,579,000.

"In response to the President's invitation 25 nations have already officially notified the Department of State of their intention to participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. These countries are Argentina, Bolivia, Canada, China, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, France, Great Britain (provisionally), Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Japan, Mexico, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Portugal, Salvador, Spain, Sweden, and Uruguay.

"In September last, after the expiration of the period of mourning for the late Emperor of Japan, the commissioners from Japan appointed for that purpose selected the site of the Japanese buildings and gardens at San Francisco, within the grounds of the Presidio Military Reservation set apart for foreign exhibitions. The commissioners announced that the Japanese Government would expend more than $1,000,000, and that at the close of the exposition the buildings and gardens would be presented to the Government and people of the United States as a testimonial of good will.

"The Governments of China, Canada, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Brazil, and Sweden have sent commissioners to San Francisco to select sites for their buildings. Some of these sites have been chosen and the work of preparing for construction and installation is in active progress. The French commissioners have asked for a reservation of 8 acres, and will arrive soon to confirm the selection. The Department of State is in receipt of communications from our representatives abroad, indicating that many other countries are preparing to accept the invitation to participate and to erect buildings. Meanwhile great interest is manifested in the exposition by the States of this Union. Up to this date sites have been dedicated by the following States: New York, Pennsylvania, Nebraska, Arizona, Utah, Washington, Oregon, New Jersey, Colorado, South Dakota, Nevada, Missouri, Idaho, Kentucky, Montana, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, West Virginia, Massachusetts, Minnesota, and by the Philippine Islands and Hawaii. Bills are pending in the various legislatures for appropriations for State exhibits ranging from $50,000 to $500,000. The largest appropriation made by any State is that of New York, $700,000.

"It may be proper for me to add that the building erected by our Government is to be located in the Presidio Military Reservation, which contains about 1,500 acres, covered with extensive improvements. The proposed building is to be retained by the Government for offices and other military purposes, for which the Government is now paying in rent in San Francisco over $53,000 a year. Therefore, as a business proposition, I am sure it will appeal to every Senator as very desirable the Government should make this appropriation."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Oklahoma state the amendment which he proposes to the committee amendment?

Mr. GORE. I suggested as an amendment that the provision requiring that two of the three commissioners should be an Army and a Navy officer be stricken out.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the provision is, as I understand, that the commission shall consist of an officer from the State Department, an officer of the Army, and an officer of the Navy. That seems to me the only good feature of the provision. These commissions or expositions have been convenient, but not profitable to the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 197, lines 19 and 20, it is proposed to strike out of the committee amendment the words:

An officer of the Army, and an officer of the Navy.

Mr. LODGE. I was trying to address the Senate on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment had not been stated from the desk.

Mr. LODGE. I thought it had.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is in order, and is recognized.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I repeat that I think this amendment will remove from this provision its best feature, if not its only good one. I do not propose to drag out any opposition to this provision, or to make a point of order upon it. I have had too much experience with industrial expositions in Congress to suppose that anything of this sort can be stopped. I have seen a great many of them in the years I have served here. I once or twice pointed out that there was an industry of getting up expositions. Huge sums of money are secured from the United States. Very rarely, if ever, are expositions of any benefit to the places that get them. First a demand comes from various States. The statement is made that an exposition will cost the Government nothing; then come the invitations to foreign nations; then we must do our duty as gentlemen, and properly receive the representatives of foreign nations; then comes the appropriation for the Government exhibit; then comes a loan, which is to be paid back out of the gate money; then comes the removal of the restriction; then comes the relieving of the company from the loan, and sometimes there comes another appropriation on top of that. The first step is here, and I have no doubt we shall take it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEA. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have it read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, what action was taken on the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]? Is that the amendment we just voted on?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No. The amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma to the amendment of the committee was not agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What was the last vote on?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The last vote was on the amendment of the committee itself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I should like to have the yeas and nays on the amendment itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. LEA. I now ask that the amendment offered by me may be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That the Government of the United States participate in the National Conservation Exposition, to be held at Knoxville, Tenn., during the fall of 1913. That there shall be exhibited at said exposition from the executive departments of the United States such articles and materials as will illustrate the administrative functions of the Government and their educational value in connection with the development and wise use of the natural resources of the United States, especially the advancement of scientific agriculture and the increase of productivity of the soil through improved cultivation and crop selection and the prevention of avoidable wastes; the reclamation of wet and dry lands by drainage and irrigation, respectively; the more economical development and utilization of mineral wealth; the judicious use of and prevention of needless destruction in woodlands for maintaining timber supply and protecting headwaters of streams; the development and utilization of water power; the use and improvement of inland waterways; the preservation of fish and game; the preservation and protection of life in connection with industrial operations; and the economic investigations and operations of the Government with reference to mines and mining, geology, topographic and other surveys, public roads, experiment stations, rural-life improvements, education, child welfare, and public health and sanitation. To secure a complete and harmonious arrangement of such Government exhibit a United States Government board of managers is hereby authorized to be appointed to be charged with the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of such articles and materials as the heads of the several departments, respectively, decide shall be embraced in the Government exhibit herein authorized. The President of the United States may also designate additional articles of peculiar interest for exhibition in connection with the said Government exhibit. Said Government board of managers shall be composed of three persons now in the employ of the Government and shall be appointed by the President, one of whom shall be designated by the President as chairman of the said board and one as secretary and disbursing officer. The members of said Government board, with other officers and employees of the Government who may be detailed to assist them, including officers of the Army and Navy, shall receive no compensation in addition to their regular salaries, but they shall be allowed their actual and necessary traveling expenses, together with a per diem in lieu of subsistence, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, whilst necessarily absent from their homes engaged upon the business of the board. Officers of the Army and Navy shall receive said allowance in lieu of the subsistence and mileage now allowed by law; and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may, in their discretion, detail retired Army or Navy officers for such duty. Any provision of law which may prohibit the detail of persons in the employ of the United States to other service than that which they customarily perform shall not apply to persons detailed for duty in connection with said National Conservation Exposition. Employees of the board not otherwise employed by the Government shall be entitled to such compensation as the board may determine, and such employees may be selected and appointed by said board. The disbursing officer shall give bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine for the faithful performance of his duties, said bond to be approved by said Secretary. The Secretary of the Treasury shall advance to said officer from time to time, under such regulations as he may prescribe, a sum of money from the appropriation for the Government exhibit herein authorized, not exceeding at any one time the penalty of his bond, to enable him to pay the expenses of said exhibit as authorized by the United States Government board herein created: Provided, That the cost of said exhibit herein authorized, including the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of the articles and materials so exhibited, and the expenses and per diems of the officials and employees of the Government connected with the exhibit, shall not exceed the sum of $100,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause a suitable building to be erected on the site of said National Conservation Exposition for said Government exhibit. Said building shall be erected from plans prepared by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to contract for said building in the same manner and under the same regulations as for other buildings of the United States, but the contract for said building, including the preparation of ground therefor and the approaches thereto, and the interior and exterior decorative wiring and lighting, etc., therefor, shall not exceed the sum of $150,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That a suitable building site and grounds satisfactory to the Government board of managers herein established shall be deeded to the Government of the United States in fee simple for the purpose.

SEC. —. That all articles that shall be imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at the National Conservation Exposition to be held at Knoxville, Tenn., in the year 1913, upon which there shall be a tariff or customs duty shall be admitted free of the payment of the duty, customs fees, or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during the exposition to sell for delivery at the close thereof any goods or property imported for and actually on exhibition in the exposition buildings or on the grounds, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That all such articles when sold or withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of withdrawal; and on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling and necessary exposure the duty, if paid, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal for consumption or use, and the penalties prescribed by law shall be enforced against any person guilty of any illegal sale, use, or withdrawal.

SEC. —. That the United States shall not be liable on account of said exposition for any expenses incident to or growing out of the same, except for the purpose of paying the expense incident to the selection, preparation, purchase, installation, transportation, care, custody, and safe return of the exhibits made by the Government, for the erection of the building herein provided, and for the employment of proper persons as officers and assistants by the Government board created by this act, and for other expenses, to be approved by the chairman of the Government board or, in the event of his absence or disability, by such officer as the board may designate, and the Secretary of the Treasury, upon itemized accounts and vouchers.

SEC. —. That the United States shall not in any manner or under any circumstances be liable for any of the acts, doings, or representations of said National Conservation Exposition Co. (a corporation), its officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or for service, salaries, labor, or wages of said officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or for any subscriptions to the capital stock, or for any stock certificates, bonds, mortgages, or obligations of any kind issued by said corporation, or for any debts, liabilities, or expenses of any kind or nature whatever attending such exposition corporation or accruing by reason of the same.

SEC. —. That nothing in this act shall be construed so as to create any liability upon the part of the United States, directly or indirectly, for any debt or obligation incurred or for any claim for aid or pecuniary assistance from Congress or the Treasury of the United States in support or liquidation of any debts or obligations created by said United States Government board in excess of appropriations herein made.

SEC. —. That the United States shall not in any manner or under any circumstances make any loan, directly or indirectly, to the National Conservation Exposition Co., or for the benefit of said exposition, or for any of the purposes thereof, and shall not appropriate for any purpose whatsoever in connection with said exposition any sum of money other than that provided in this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. LEA. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask Senators to vote and will put the question once more. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. LEA. I ask for a division.

The question being put; there were, on a division—ayes 19, noes 19.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Nineteen have voted in the affirmative and nineteen have voted in the negative—not a quorum.

Mr. LEA. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum having been disclosed, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Curtis	La Follette	Shively
Borah	Dillingham	Lea	Smith, Ariz.
Bourne	du Pont	Lodge	Smith, Ga.
Bradley	Fall	McCumber	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, S. C.
Briggs	Gallinger	Oliver	Smoot
Bristow	Gamble	Owen	Stephenson
Bryan	Gardner	Page	Sutherland
Burton	Gore	Penrose	Thomas
Catron	Gronna	Percy	Townsend
Chamberlain	Jackson	Pittman	Warren
Chilton	Johnson, Me.	Poindexter	Webb
Clark, Wyo.	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene	Wetmore
Clarke, Ark.	Jones	Richardson	Williams
Crane	Kenyon	Root	Works
Crawford	Kern	Sheppard

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the roll 63 Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

The question is upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], upon which a division has been demanded.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 30, noes 20.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there are several more committee amendments, and I am advised that there are certain amendments to be offered by Senators. We have a special order, and I want to ask unanimous consent now that at the conclusion of the eulogies we may take a recess until 8 o'clock. I think we can finish this bill very shortly after 8 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I understood that part of this day had been set aside for eulogies.

Mr. WARREN. That is what I am attending to. My request covers that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do the eulogies begin at 8 o'clock?

Mr. WARREN. They will be held immediately.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. What is to happen after the eulogies?

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the Senate then take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. So as to finish this bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Is that all?

Mr. SMOOT. I will also ask unanimous consent that if the bill is concluded this evening we may take up the calendar under Rule VIII after the passage of the bill, and under that rule consider bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And no bills that are objected to?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; no bill to which there is an objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator from Wyoming include that in his request?

Mr. WARREN. I hope that consent will be given. I will include it in my request.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I suggest that we take up only bills that have passed the House. There is very little use in going on with these Senate bills.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we will take up all of the bills upon the calendar to which there is no objection—House bills and Senate bills and all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to have the Senator modify his request so as to include those bills which have passed the House.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it does include those bills.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Whether they are objected to or not.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, that would be impracticable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I have been trying to make myself heard for some time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I could not hear the Senator's request. I will ask whether the eulogies are to occur immediately or later.

Mr. SMOOT. The request is that the bill be laid aside immediately and eulogies begin; that at the close of the eulogies a recess be taken until 8 o'clock; that at 8 o'clock we resume the consideration of the bill until it is passed; that when it is passed, the calendar under Rule VIII be taken up and bills to which there is no objection considered.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. And no others?

Mr. SMOOT. And no others.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. When will further amendments to the pending bill come in?

Mr. SMOOT. Right after 8 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And no other business except that.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I want to offer an amendment now, and have that amendment pending.

Mr. WARREN. I hope we shall not suffer by having too many cooks spoil the broth. The intention is to lay the bill aside now and have the eulogies to which we have agreed take place, and that we shall then go into recess until 8 o'clock; that at 8 o'clock we shall take up this bill exactly where we leave it now and complete it; and that following that we shall take up the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I wish to prefer a request. I simply want an opportunity to state it, not to delay the Senate. There is a bill here as to officering and manning vessels in which there is widespread interest. It passed the House some time ago. It was unanimously reported favorably. I do not think there would be any objection whatever to it. If there should be, I certainly should not press it; but I should like to have unanimous consent to get that bill out of the way. It is not the seamen's bill, but the officering bill. It relates to mates of vessels.

Mr. PENROSE. That bill can be brought up to-night.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is pretty well down on the list.

Mr. PENROSE. There are a number of Senators who will not ask to have their bills taken up.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well; then I will not press it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CITIZENSHIP FOR PORTO RICANS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I give notice that on Monday, March 3, following the routine morning business, I shall call up Order of Business 1158, House bill 20048, a bill declaring that all citizens of Porto Rico and certain natives permanently residing in said island shall be citizens of the United States, and ask its consideration at that time.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28180) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana, and Mr. LAWRENCE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 267) providing for assisting indigent persons, other than natives, in the District of Alaska.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 8275) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28607) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26874) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, Mr. CARTER, and Mr. BURKE of South Dakota managers at the conference on the part of the House.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28180) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. NELSON, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, and Mr. SIMMONS conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26874) making appropriations for the currrent and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GAMBLE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. CLAPP, and Mr. STONE conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDIGENT PERSONS IN ALASKA.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 267) providing for assisting indigent persons other than natives in the District of Alaska, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, as follows:

"That section 1 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes,' approved January 27, 1905, as amended by an act approved May 14, 1906, and as further amended by an act approved February 6, 1909, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"'SECTION 1. That all moneys derived from and collected for liquor licenses, occupation or trade licenses, outside of the incorporated towns in the Territory of Alaska, shall be deposited in the Treasury Department of the United States, there to remain as a separate and distinct fund, to be known as the 'Alaska fund,' and to be wholly devoted to the purposes hereinafter stated in the Territory of Alaska. Twenty-five per cent of said fund, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be devoted to the establishment and maintenance of public schools in said Territory; 10 per cent of said fund shall be, and is hereby, appropriated and authorized to be expended for the relief of persons in Alaska who are indigent and incapacitated through nonage, old age, sickness, or accident; and all the residue of said fund shall be devoted to the construction and maintenance of wagon roads, bridges, and trails in said Territory: Provided, That the clerk of the court of each judicial division of said Territory is authorized, and he is hereby directed, whenever considered necessary, to call upon the United States marshal of said judicial division to aid in the collection of said license moneys by designating regular or special deputies of his office to act as temporary license inspectors, and it shall be the duty of said United States marshal to render such aid; and the said regular or special deputies while actually engaged in the performance of this duty shall receive the same fees and allowances and be paid in the same manner as when performing their regular duties.

"'That at the end of each fiscal quarter the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States shall divide the amount of said 10 per cent of said fund so received during the quarter just ended into four equal parts, and transmit to each of the four United States district judges in Alaska one of said equal amounts.

"'That each of said judges is hereby authorized to expend so much of the money received by him under this act as may, in his discretion, be required for the relief of those persons in his division who are incapacitated through nonage, old age, sickness, or accident, and who are indigent and unable to assist and protect themselves: Provided, That each judge shall quarterly submit to the Secretary of the Treasury an itemized statement, with proper vouchers, of all expenditures made by him under this act, and he shall at the time transmit a copy of said statement to the governor of the Territory: Provided further, That any unexpended balance remaining in the hands of any judge at the end of any quarter shall be returned to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and by him deposited in the said "Alaska fund," and the said sum shall be subsequently devoted, first, to meeting any actual requirements for the care and relief of such persons as are provided for in this act in any other division in said Territory wherein the amount allotted for that purpose has proved insufficient; and, second, if there shall be any remainder thereof, said remainder shall be devoted to the construction and maintenance of wagon roads, bridges, and trails in said Territory.'"

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide assistance to persons in Alaska who are indigent and incapacitated through nonage, old age, sickness, or accident, and for other purposes."

And the House agree to the same.

KNUTE NELSON,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
B. G. HUMPHREYS,
RUFUS HARDY,
J. N. LANGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels constrained to announce that the hour for the special order has arrived.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE BINGHAM.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, pursuant to the notice already given by my colleague [Mr. OLIVER], I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives on the death of the late Representative HENRY H. BINGHAM.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PAGE in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions of the House, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
May 19, 1912.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. HENRY H. BINGHAM, late a Member of the House from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career the House at the conclusion of these exercises shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask for their adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 482) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sorrow of the death of the Hon. HENRY HARRISON BINGHAM, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be suspended in order that proper tribute may be paid to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, we pause, as is customary, in the midst of the pressing business of the session in order to pay our last tribute of respect to the memory of one who was perhaps better and more intimately known personally to the Members of the House and Senate than almost any other Member of Congress. As for myself, I entertain a keen feeling of personal loss in his death. We were intimate personal and political friends for over 30 years. We were neighbors in Philadelphia, and during this long period we had never parted in our political associations, but had always been found upon the same side in many hard-fought political campaigns in Philadelphia and Pennsylvania. Gen. HENRY HARRISON BINGHAM spent his lifetime in the public service. He graduated from Jefferson College, in Washington County, Pa., in 1862, and following his graduation he enlisted in a company of Volunteers raised in the college town of Cannonsburg and was elected first lieutenant. His military career was distinguished and remarkable. He was wounded at Gettysburg in 1863, at Spottsylvania in 1864, and in Farmville, Va., in 1865. He was captured in the battle of Boydon Plank Road in 1864. He fought with distinction in many battles, and received a gold medal from Congress for special and exceptional gallantry in the Wilderness fight. He was mustered out of the service in June, 1866, having been brevetted for distinguished gallantry as major, lieutenant colonel, colonel, and brigadier general. At the time of his death he was the only Member of the House of Representatives to wear a medal for distinguished bravery during the war. He was the last veteran of the Union Army remaining in the Pennsylvania delegation in Congress.

Following the war Gen. BINGHAM became a law student in the office of Benjamin Harris Brewster, who later became Attorney General of the United States, but in a very short time thereafter, in 1867, he was appointed postmaster of Philadelphia by President Andrew Johnson upon the recommendation of Gens. Meade and Hancock, as a partial reward for his services during the war. In 1872 he resigned the postmastership, having been elected clerk of the quarter sessions court of Philadelphia County. In 1878 he entered the National

House of Representatives with the Forty-sixth Congress, and served continuously ever since.

Gen. BINGHAM was an active figure in Congress for more than 30 years. He served on important committees and was twice a candidate for the speakership. He was instrumental in securing the reduction of letter postage from 3 to 2 cents and the rate on second-class mail matter from 2 to 1 cent a pound.

He was a delegate over the long period of his public service to many State conventions in Pennsylvania and to national Republican conventions. In the national conventions, with a few exceptions, he served as a member and frequently as chairman of the committee on rules.

Gen. BINGHAM married Miss Mary H. Alexander, a daughter of Judge Alexander, of Baltimore, in 1874. His wife died in the summer of 1884.

Few men have held a seat in Congress for a continuous period longer than did Gen. BINGHAM. Samuel J. Randall, William D. Kelley, Charles O'Neil, and Alfred C. Harmer were upon his first election the other Members from the Philadelphia districts. Each of them lived to be what is commonly known as "father of the House"—that is, the oldest Member in continuous service. Upon the death of Congressman Harmer Gen. BINGHAM succeeded to that title. Upon the death of Gen. BINGHAM the Hon. JOHN DALZELL, of Pittsburgh, acquired the title. It is true that Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, and Mr. PAYNE, of New York, have served more terms in the House of Representatives than any of the Pennsylvanians referred to, but their service had been interrupted and did not cover a continuous period. The record of Pennsylvania in this connection is indeed remarkable.

Gen. BINGHAM was frequently mentioned for important offices in Philadelphia and in Pennsylvania. He seemed, however, to prefer his congressional career and could never be induced to depart therefrom. His career covered more than a generation of political leadership in Pennsylvania. He entered Congress during the administration of President Hayes and when Simon Cameron was nearing the close of his career of leadership of the Republican Party in Pennsylvania.

As an orator Gen. BINGHAM was always in demand in political campaigns. In his prime he had a vigorous and eloquent style of oratory and delivered many orations upon occasions celebrated by the soldiers of the Grand Army of the Republic. In his character he was straightforward, honest, stalwart, and in many respects without guile. He was earnest and steadfast in his friendships and affections. Probably no man in any walk of life in Philadelphia was better known than Gen. BINGHAM. Indeed, his reputation extended over the State of Pennsylvania.

He came of good Pennsylvania stock. His father, James Bingham, was a prominent business man in Philadelphia and the shipping firm of Bingham Bros. was widely known.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, in commemoration of the life of HENRY H. BINGHAM we call to mind a man who was at the same time a faithful friend, a public-spirited citizen of his city and State, and an able, experienced legislator. In addition to all this, he had a distinction of which he might well have been proud during his life and of which his friends may be proud now that he is gone. That was his record as a soldier in the Civil War.

He was one of the last of our public men who served in that great struggle. They have been falling off like leaves in the autumn. Few, if any, are left now who have not attained the age of threescore and ten. I remember one morning taking lunch with him, when he mentioned his change from a college career to that of a soldier. He had been prominent in the football team—indeed, was its captain—and almost immediately after graduation he enlisted in the Army.

I have asked that there be furnished an official copy of his military record. This is not that fulsome, exaggerated language which is sometimes used of men who have been engaged in war. It is the actual record of service rendered, a part of the country's archives:

First lieutenant, One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Infantry, August 22, 1862.

Captain, September 9, 1862.

Brevet major of Volunteers, August 1, 1864, for good conduct and conspicuous gallantry at the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, and Gettysburg.

Major and advocate judge of Volunteers, September 20, 1864.

Lieutenant colonel of Volunteers April 9, 1865, for highly meritorious service during the recent campaign, terminating with the surrender of the insurgent army under Gen. Robert E. Lee.

Colonel and brigadier general of Volunteers April 9, 1865, for conspicuous gallantry and meritorious service during the war.

Awarded medal of honor August 26, 1883, for the Battle of the Wilderness, May 6, 1864, where he rallied and led into action a part of the troops that had given way under the fierce assaults of the enemy.

Honorably mustered out July 2, 1866.

Wounded at Gettysburg, at Spottsylvania, and at Farmville, Va.

Among all the many most notable records of the Civil War there are few which would surpass this.

As has already been stated, after a brief interval at the close of his military service, he became postmaster of Philadelphia, and afterwards held a position in that city, and then he came here to Congress in 1879. Those who knew him as an associate in the House of Representatives remember him for his grasp of detail, for his readiness as a speaker, and, I may say in general, for his faithfulness in the public service.

He was at one time chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and at a later time a prominent member of the Committee on Appropriations. Each year it was his task to bring in the bill known as the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, and I am certainly safe in saying that no one in either House ever presented an appropriation or other bill to Congress who more thoroughly understood the subject.

He was extremely affable and courteous to his fellow Members and yet firm, indeed, somewhat rigid, in his adherence to certain rules and in his refusal to go outside of legal provisions in the making of appropriations.

He was always a ready speaker, and no one who knew him could fail to receive from him a permanent impression—an impression which lasted not merely during his life but after his death—of his geniality and friendliness.

There was in him no disagreeable trait, no rough edges, no manifestations of egotism or of desire to exploit his personal prerogative. He was always a genial friend, a real friend.

I had occasion numerous times to note his interest in the city and State in which he lived. I think it may readily be said that of all the Members of the House of Representatives he was the one to whom any matter of interest in his city was most frequently intrusted. I remember several hearings when large delegations came here from Philadelphia, enough in numbers to fill a room and to extend well outside, but they all waived their claims to speak and put forward Mr. BINGHAM as their spokesman, having reliance on him as one who would present the case much better than all the rest together could do.

Reference has been made to his long service of 33 years. It had been so faithful, it had been of such value to Philadelphia and Pennsylvania, it had appealed so much to the whole country, that it would have been little less than a disgrace if he had not been allowed to finish his life in the service of his country, which he had served so well in many branches. So he died as a Member of the House of Representatives.

If he had lived from threescore and ten to fourscore, no doubt his constituency would have so valued his services, so loved his personality, that he would have remained to the very latest hour.

Mr. President, it is hard to tell whether the influence of any public man shall be permanent or ephemeral. In the busy life we live, in the whirl of events in which oftentimes the best of deeds are forgotten and the most notable services bring no reward, I can not avoid the conclusion that there is a lasting effect of such a life. He left his impress upon the legislation of his time. He was an example of a man of high character, friendliness, and of loyalty to his country. And now in the future before us the name of HENRY H. BINGHAM will be remembered not alone in the city of Philadelphia, but over a much wider area, as a man of splendid impulses, who rendered the most valuable service to his country.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am glad to be accorded the sad privilege of adding a brief testimonial of my high regard and esteem for the late HENRY H. BINGHAM. During the eight years that I served in the National House of Representatives I came to know him personally and well. He was a modest man, although his record as a soldier and statesman was such that other men of different mental caliber, had they possessed it, would have capitalized it for great personal notoriety.

He was a gentleman of the "old school," and courtesy was as native to his breast as the great heart therein confined.

I doubt if any man who served with Gen. BINGHAM at any time in his 33 years and more as Congressman ever entertained, even temporarily, an unkind thought of this well-loved Representative. He had no enemies among his colleagues.

At the time of his death he had served longer continuously than any other Member of the Sixty-second Congress. I have not examined the records, yet I quite confidently assert that but few men in our history have been elected to more Congresses without a break than had Gen. BINGHAM been elected. He was lovingly known as the "Father of the House," and his long, gentle, considerate service entitled him to this distinction. In the last years of his life he did not possess that vigorous energy which through vocal power and parliamentary manipulation sometimes commands attention, but whenever he had charge of an appropriation bill he was given a respectful hearing, and his information of the various items included in the measure was recognized as complete and authoritative.

The records would indicate that his people loved and trusted him. Most of his many elections were practically unanimous. His usefulness as a legislator was not lessened by a requirement that he spend a large portion of his energy in securing a reelection. He could and did devote his time to service. Few districts in the United States were better cared for or received more substantial recognition at the hands of Congress than did the first district of Pennsylvania while he represented it.

Gen. BINGHAM'S military record is one of the most attractive made by those loyal men who served their country during the fateful years of the Civil War. It is well that this record of a modest, yet great, soldier be told in order that it may be given the widest circulation possible, not only among statesmen, present and prospective, but also among the people generally, and especially among the youth of the land. It is the story of heroic, patriotic service. It tells of promotions from lieutenant to brigadier general. It discloses medals for gallant service in battle. It reveals pain and suffering in Army hospitals caused by wounds inflicted on the battlefields of Gettysburg, Spottsylvania, and Farmville. It is in fact the story of a real soldier, of a college graduate in 1862 who enlisted in his country's service at a time when it was known that the most terrible conflict of history was on, and that enlistment meant probable danger and death; but it also meant preservation of the Union, the perpetuity of a free Republic. I repeat that this is an attractive phase of the late Congressman's life; but I know the story will be told by his colleagues from Pennsylvania better and more completely than I can tell it, so I simply mention it and pause long enough to say that for such hero soldiers as he was I have the most profound respect, aye, I shall honor them in every possible way while they live, and upon their biers I shall place the sweetest and most enduring flowers of grateful remembrance. For what they suffered and endured, for what they accomplished and established, I owe them much; and my debt to them is the common debt of every American who at this time is enjoying the blessings of liberty and union under a stainless flag.

Congressional life when measured by the hopes and dreams of the tyro in legislation is more or less of a disappointment, but it has its compensations; and chief among them is the real, genuine friendship which comes from association with real, genuine men. I am glad of the experience of eight years of service in the National House of Representatives with HENRY H. BINGHAM, the gentle, courteous, able soldier statesman. He had his frailties, and who has not faults? But his weaknesses did not include dishonesty, disloyalty to country, lack of charity for his fellow men, or faithlessness to high duty.

I do not know what religious views he held, but my acquaintance with him compels me to believe that, having lived more than the allotted span of a remarkably useful life, having met death without terror on many occasions, he did not fear his end. Full of ripened years and conscious, as he must have been, that he had served to the best of his ability his country and his fellow men, he could say with great confidence, as he reached the bounds of life and waited only to embark without human pilot on the uncharted sea:

> And so, beside the silent sea,
> I wait the muffled oar.
> No harm from Him can come to me
> On ocean or on shore.
> I know not where His islands lift
> Their fronded palms in air.
> I only know I can not drift
> Beyond His love and care.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, no more striking example of the uncertainty of human life can be had than the fact that within the short life of the present Congress the delegation from Pennsylvania has lost 3 out of its 32 Members. Of these 3 the chief, by reason of long service and unusual prominence, was Gen. HENRY HARRISON BINGHAM, who, for a space beyond the average life of man, represented the first district, comprised of a part of the city of Philadelphia. He entered Congress a young, vigorous, active man, who had not yet reached middle age. He died an old man, past the age fixed by the psalmist as the limit of enjoyable human life, and full of infirmities largely resulting from his four years' hard service in defense of his country's existence. He served in Congress side by side with Frye and Reed and McKinley and Carlisle and Randall, and many others whose work did much to shape the destinies of our country in the past generation, in which work he himself took no mean part.

HENRY HARRISON BINGHAM was born in the city of Philadelphia on the 4th day of December, 1841. He was educated at Jefferson College, in western Pennsylvania, where he was graduated in the class of 1862. From the very outset of the Civil War he was anxious to enlist, and he could scarcely wait until his graduating exercises were over to throw aside his cap and gown and don the uniform of a Union soldier, and from the day he enlisted to the day of his death, 50 years afterwards, his whole life, with the exception of two intervals of a few months each, was spent in the service of his country or his State. His career as a soldier was exceptionally brilliant. At the outset he was made the first lieutenant of his company, which was largely composed of his college associates, and from that rank he rose through all the grades until, on the 9th of April, 1865, two days after he was wounded at Farmville, he received the brevet rank of brigadier general. He was awarded the medal of honor for distinguished bravery on the field of battle; and he carried to his grave the scars of three wounds received upon three notable battlefields—at Gettysburg in 1863; at Spottsylvania in 1864; and at Farmville in 1865.

Gen. BINGHAM was elected to Congress from the first district of Pennsylvania in 1878, and was reelected 16 times. When he died in 1912 he had for many years held the title of "Father of the House" by reason of the longest continuous service in that body. It is worthy of remark, and shows how Pennsylvanians appreciate honest and able representatives, that this title has for two generations been held almost exclusively by men from that State. Judge Kelley, from the fourth district, held it for many years, and handed it down to Charles O'Neill, of the second, and upon his death it fell to Gen. BINGHAM. It is now held by JOHN DALZELL, who retires in a few days after 26 years of honorable service.

I first met Gen. BINGHAM at the Republican national convention which met in Philadelphia in 1872 and nominated Gen. Grant for reelection. He was a delegate to that and to every succeeding national convention during his lifetime, with two exceptions. He was always a delegate to State conventions, and it was usually his task to draw up and read the platform of principles adopted at those gatherings. He was a ready writer and an accomplished and convincing public speaker. His voice was like a clarion, and without perceptible effort he could make himself heard at the farthest limit of any assembly.

As a soldier, Gen. BINGHAM'S record, while paralleled by many, is excelled by none made by the young men of the North who in the days of the sixties responded to their country's call and counted their lives as nothing that "government of the people, by the people, and for the people might not perish from the earth." As a servant of the people he was wise, diligent, and unselfishly faithful, and until age and infirmity overtook him his voice was potential in the councils of his party and of the Nation; but to those who knew him well he will be remembered not alone for his merits as a statesman, or even for his matchless record as a soldier of the Union, but rather more for the gentler attributes which dominated his character and marked his intercourse with all men. He was a splendid example of that almost extinct class, the "gentleman of the old school." Fastidious in his apparel, clean himself in body and mind, he abhorred all that was either physically or morally unclean. Somewhat formal in demeanor, but never discourteous to any man, be his station high or low, he was at all times and under all conditions a typical American and a Christian gentleman.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE KIPP.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives on the death of the late Representative GEORGE W. KIPP.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PAGE in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions of the House, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 25, 1913.

Resolved, That in pursuance of the special order heretofore adopted the House proceed to pay tribute to the memory of Hon. GEORGE WASHINGTON KIPP, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a faithful and distinguished public servant the House at the conclusion of the memorial proceedings of this day shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.
Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask for their adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 481) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sorrow of the death of the Hon. GEORGE WASHINGTON KIPP, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Pennsylvania.
Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be suspended in order that proper tribute may be paid to his high character and distinguished public services.
Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, Hon. GEORGE WASHINGTON KIPP was elected as the Democratic candidate in a district in Pennsylvania which was nominally Republican. The district is a famous one, containing as an important part of it the county of Bradford which David Wilmot represented in Congress and wherein Galusha A. Grow was born and later on represented it in Congress. Mr. KIPP won his election against an adverse majority by his sterling qualities of manhood, his closeness to the common people, and his ability as a self-made man to impress them.

He belonged to a class of men once foremost in the industries of Pennsylvania, but now passing away with the extinction of the industry. Pennsylvania was once one of the foremost lumber States in the country, and many large and thriving towns grew up in the lumber development which still retain their prosperity, but the activities of which have been drawn to manufacturing and other industries. Mr. KIPP started as a lumberman and mastered every detail of the business. He grew rich and branched out into other business activities. He was a man of rugged honesty and readily made friends. He was generally beloved by the people of his district. His death was a distinct loss to his party and to the country, and the State of Pennsylvania was deprived of a useful and industrious Representative.

I had on numerous occasions frequent opportunity to become intimately associated with Mr. KIPP. I came to admire and respect his sturdy character and his vigorous and manly qualities. Although we belonged to opposite parties, we were able to confer freely and cordially on matters of public interest and concern. All who knew him well have felt a personal loss in his death.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, "In the midst of life we are in death." Three Pennsylvanians—Members of the other House—have died since I was a Member of it—HARRY BINGHAM, the father of the House; MCHENRY, and KIPP—all of whom I knew and loved with cause. I shall have opportunity to-day to pay a tribute only to the last named of the three.

GEORGE WASHINGTON KIPP was born on March 28, 1847. He was, therefore, seven years and more my senior, but we became warm, congenial friends, and I think that no stranger would have noted the difference in our ages when we were met together. He carried with him a warm heart and a glad hand, and won me, as he did nearly everybody who came to be thrown with him.

His earliest training was on the farm, where so many men of sound common sense, like Cincinnatus and Cromwell and Washington and other, though lesser, men got their earliest training. He later had the advantages of a common-school education in the very good common schools of his day and section. Still later he became a lumberman, and at the time of his death was the president of a bank in Towanda, Pa., where he spent the last 30 years of his life. His main education, therefore, was in the school of life among men, where hard struggle makes moral, mental, and physical muscle, and where fair struggle brings love, respect, honor, and a troop of friends. In all of his transactions he was single minded—an integer—not duplex. He spoke with a straight and not a forked tongue. He was one of the few self-made men that I have personally known who was not too proud of his self-making job, and who never forgot where and how he started, nor those amongst whom he had won his way. Indeed, the leading social principle that actuated him was that labor has its rights; that those rights must always be accorded, and that where a doubt arises it ought to be solved in favor of the wage earner.

King Solomon said. "He that hath friends must show himself friendly." Mr. KIPP always showed himself friendly, good-natured, amiable, helpful, not only in deeds but in words, and the latter frequently counts more than the former.

He was twice elected to Congress as a Democrat from a district proud of its Republican history—the district which once sent David Wilmot to Congress and at another time Galusha A. Grow. One of his colleagues asked him once how he had managed to succeed in that district. He replied that the chief factor in his success, he thought, was that he had lived there a long time and in many ways had employed many men, and that those whom he had first and last employed had almost always, without exception, not only voted for him, but worked for him. Thus it came to pass that he both grew rich and kept his friends—a thing that does not happen often with many men. He was a Democrat, not only in his political and social philosophy but in his everyday life. He was "as plain as an old shoe" and was accessible to everybody. He was a hard fighter. He believed in his party and its principles and its programs, and as a consequence patriotism was commingled with party service in his mind and heart.

At the close of his first term, after he had been defeated for his second and was here serving out the short session, I asked him what he was going to do. Quick as a flash the reply came, "Come back"; and it was accompanied with grim determination in his jaw and eye. And at the next Congress he did come back.

He was elected first in 1906, defeated in 1908, reelected in 1910, and died during his second term on Vancouver Island, British Columbia, on July 24, 1911.

What he did he did with all his heart, whether it was work or play. No man knew better than he how to enjoy himself with choice spirits around him. By instinct more than by training he loved the old Jeffersonian democratic theory; the corner stone in the structure of which is that organized society or government was made for man, and not man for it; that the only rightful reason for the existence of government is that it may lead to individual training in individual self-government; and that it shall act as a shield and a protector of the natural rights of man, giving to all equal opportunities and to none any law-conferred special advantages, in order that thus men and women may be free, well informed, and happy. He was a loyal, faithful, unswerving friend to his friends; the first to speak excuses for them and the last to voice criticism.

During two years of mutual service in the House of Representatives, where I was parliamentary leader on the Democratic side, I had cause and necessity to note the conduct of Representatives, and, amongst others, his. He was constant in his attendance, "diligent in business," as St. Paul says; brought a splendid and sturdy common sense to bear upon every question confronting us; did not have to be hunted up by the whips when a vote was coming, as is the case with so many Representatives; believed in team work, and did his share of team work cheerfully and constantly. There was that modesty about him which prevented him from lightly coming to the conclusion, when he differed prima facie with a majority of his party, that he must be right and they must be wrong. With his exit from the stage of life there went a modest, sturdy, kind-hearted, genial man, of splendid common sense, unwaveringly honest purposes and fair dealing, who had made the world better by being in it. He was so true that one had to love him.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, GEORGE W. KIPP, a Representative in Congress from the State of Pennsylvania, died at Vancouver, British Columbia, on the 24th day of July, 1911. He served in the Sixtieth Congress, was defeated by a small majority for the Sixty-first, but was again elected to the present Congress.

It was not my fortune to be intimately acquainted with Mr. KIPP, as our contemporaneous service was confined to the earlier months of this Congress; but as one familiar with the public men of my State I did know something of his career. He was not a brilliant man, as that phrase goes, but he was in every way a typical, average American, and his life furnishes an example by no means rare of American possibilities. He was twice elected as a Democrat from a district whose Republicanism was steadfast and unswerving and which in the early days of the party had sent to Congress such Representatives as David Wilmot and Galusha A. Grow. Mr. KIPP carried this district in 1906 and 1910, and in 1908—a presidential year—he was defeated by only 2,000 majority, while at the same election the district gave President Taft a majority of over 8,000 votes. To accomplish such a result a man must be one of two things—either he is a demagogue or he has a strong hold on the respect and affections of the people amongst whom he lives—and Mr. KIPP was no demagogue.

With few or no educational advantages he was early thrown on his own resources, and by diligent application and a capacity which he soon developed for the handling of large affairs he was able to accumulate what in his time and in his section was considered great wealth. He was modest in demeanor, firm in his attachments, and had to a high degree the faculty of pleasing. His service in Congress, disconnected as it was, was too short to enable him to write his name in large type on the pages of history, and as a matter of fact his modest ambition never aimed at such distinction; but he was a faithful representative of his people, looking out for their interests with great care, and was constant in his attention to the work of the committee to which he was assigned. In his death his district and the country lost a faithful Representative, his neighbors a valued friend, and his State an upright citizen.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE M'HENRY.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives on the death of the late Representative JOHN GEISER MCHENRY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PAGE in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions of the House, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 16, 1913.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. JOHN GEISER MCHENRY, late a Member of this House from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career the House at the conclusion of the memorial exercises of the day shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk and ask for their adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 483) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sorrow of the death of the Hon. JOHN G. MCHENRY, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That, as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the business of the Senate be suspended in order that proper tribute may be paid to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, Hon. JOHN G. MCHENRY represented the sixteenth district in the House of Representatives. He was one of the leading farmers and business men of Northumberland County, in Pennsylvania. He was born on April 26, 1868. After a course at the Orangeville Academy he started on his career. He became a farmer, manufacturer, and banker. He was elected to the Sixtieth Congress and for two succeeding terms by increasing majorities. He was an influential member of the Committee on Appropriations. His farms were under the direct personal supervision of an expert in agricultural science from the State College of Pennsylvania. On these farms he conducted much experimental and demonstrative work. He himself had devoted much study to agricultural questions in their scientific aspects.

Mr. MCHENRY was popular with his constituents, and his political successes in the district were largely owing to his own strength of character and standing in the community. The district had, previous to his election, been sometimes represented by a Republican Congressman. It was his strength with his constituency that turned the district Democratic. He was a good representative of the Scotch-Irish element in Pennsylvania, an element which has contributed so much to the intellectual, industrial, and commercial development of the State. His untimely death was universally lamented in his district.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, on the 27th of December last, after a long illness, JOHN G. MCHENRY, Representative in Congress from the sixteenth district of Pennsylvania, died at his home at Benton, in that State. Mr. MCHENRY was born in the same township in which he died and in which he lived all his life. He had scarcely reached middle age when death overtook him in the midst of a career full of promise of usefulness both as a citizen and a public official. He had received an academic education, and his early inclination was toward the law; but he inherited the care of a large business from his father and was compelled to forego his natural desire for a professional life, in which, from his capacity and his ability, he undoubtedly would have achieved success.

Mr. MCHENRY early developed an interest in politics, and at the time of his death he was a leading figure in the councils of the Democratic Party in Pennsylvania. In 1906 he was elected to the Sixtieth Congress, and was reelected to the Sixty-first and Sixty-second Congresses, each time by an increased majority. His service in Congress was in the highest degree creditable. He was a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and took an active part in the arduous labors of that important committee. He was an active, earnest, energetic Congressman, full of zeal for the interests of his district and his State, and always ready to serve any of his constituents without regard to party. He had the good will of all with whom he came in contact, and no better instance can be had of the esteem in which he was held by the people amongst whom he lived than the following tribute published in one of his home papers on the day of his death, from the pen of one of his employees:

Those who worked for JOHN G. MCHENRY knew him best. Everyday association with him only served to bring out the high lights of his personality, and in stress and storm his hand was the first to reach out in kindliness and material aid.

Friendliness and loyalty to his employees was to him a chief issue, and his jurisdiction was always tempered and guided by the thoughts of their easiest roads and the short and surest way to their happiness and comfort. Mr. MCHENRY never spared expense in the adoption of devices which would ease labor, he conducted his office as regard hours and regulations on a broad and humane basis, and the lowliest among all of his employees could seek him in trouble and be assured of instant and certain assistance. The last clouded months of his life with their ever-increasing burden of troubles, witnessed, by virtue of his illness, a severance of actual affiliation. But the remembrance of his generosity and humanity lived and is now become a legacy which will endure after much else is forgotten.

Mr. President, as a further mark of respect, I move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m. on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 22593) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, by providing for physical valuation of the property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks and bonds and boards of directors.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 22913) to create a Department of Labor.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 27148) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MOON of Tennessee, Mr. FINLEY, and Mr. WEEKS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28766) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BURNETT, Mr. CLARK of Florida, and Mr. ANDRUS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 28858) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913 and for prior years, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 6176. An act for the relief of Gibbes Lykes;

S. 7385. An act to relinquish the claim of the United States against the grantees, their legal representatives and assigns, for timber cut on Petaca land grant; and

H. R. 28607. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 27148) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BRISTOW. The chairman of the committee being absent, I move, in his behalf, that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. BOURNE, Mr. PENROSE, and Mr. BANKHEAD conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 28775) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. The committee has a few amendments to offer. On page 50, line 7, I move to strike out "$547,640" and to insert in lieu thereof "$562,640."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On page 51, line 20, I move to strike out "$1,819,746" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,834,746."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On page 73, at the end of line 14, I move to insert:

For the construction and maintenance of a lodge at the entrance of the national park, for the keeper of said park, at Lookout Mountain, Tenn., $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On page 156, line 17, after the word "assistants," I move to insert "one, at $2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I also move to make the total, in line 19, read "$18,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On page 160, in line 20, after "$100,000," I move to insert "one-half to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On page 12, after line 18, I move to insert:

Honolulu, Hawaii, post office, courthouse, and customhouse: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the amounts awarded in condemnation for the acquisition of additional land for the enlargement of the present site, $125,000, in addition to amounts heretofore authorized to be expended from appropriations for site and building, and the total limit of cost for said site and building is hereby extended accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. On page 176, line 7, after "$100,000," I move to insert, "of which sum $6,000 shall be available to print and furnish to the States report form blanks and to print the proceedings of the National Association of Railway Commissioners in annual convention."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 67, line 21, after the word "the," I move to strike out the words "above payment" and insert the word "statement," so as to read:

That the statement shall be audited and approved.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 169, after line 13, I move to insert:

Congressional Directory: For expenses of compiling, preparing, and indexing an edition of the Congressional Directory for the first session of the Sixty-third Congress, to be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, $800.

I offer this amendment because of the extra session of Congress, which will compel the issuance of a directory before the regular session.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. On page 173, after line 12, I move to insert:

Portland, Oreg.: For moving, in the discretion and under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, weather ball from customhouse to a point where it can be readily seen by the shipping, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CATRON. After line 9, on page 113, I move to insert:

That the sum of $32,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in the survey and establishing the boundaries of small holding claims in the State of New Mexico now listed in the surveyor general's office of the State of New Mexico, under the provisions of the act of Congress of March 3, 1891, creating the Court of Private Land Claims in certain States and Territories, and the several acts of Congress amendatory thereto.

Mr. WARREN. I will ask the Senator if he has the estimate.

Mr. CATRON. I have the estimate. It was introduced this morning.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 13, page 177, I move to strike out "$1,200" and insert "$1,400."

The object is to raise the salary $200. It is estimated for; in fact, it has been estimated for four or five years.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. On page 114, line 24, I move to strike out the figures "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$300,000."

I wish to say that I understand this has been estimated for by the department. The object is to furnish means for the Geological Survey to classify the lands under what is known as the enlarged homestead.

Mr. WARREN. Is the Senator sure that he has offered it at the right place?

Mr. BORAH. I have the place, page 114, line 24.

Mr. WARREN. The subject of that is the gauging of streams.

Mr. BORAH. The gauging of streams and determining the water supply and for the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells. All of that comes under the proposition of classifying these dry lands.

Mr. WARREN. That amount is estimated for, I will be frank enough to say. I had hoped that we would not touch the outside estimates on all these sums, but I shall not raise the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 114, line 24, strike out "$150,000" and insert "$300,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. On page 175, after line 19, I move to insert:

To collect, collate, and publish statistics relating to the turpentine and rosin industry, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator desire to offer that at that particular place? As I have it here, it comes under the heading "Interstate Commerce Commission."

Mr. FLETCHER. It is under the Census Office.

Mr. WARREN. Printing and binding.

Mr. FLETCHER. It comes under the Department of Commerce and Labor and has reference to the work of the Census Bureau. There are collections being made of statistics as to tobacco and cotton and other industries. Here is a great industry of turpentine which in 1910 produced the value of $36,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. What I wish first to find out is the number of the page. Perhaps the Senator has a different print of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Page 175, after line 19. That has the heading "Department of Commerce and Labor" just preceding it. The work is in the Census Bureau.

Mr. WARREN. This comes under the Coast and Geodetic Survey. Perhaps the Senator will offer his amendment to go in at the proper place.

Mr. FLETCHER. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest that it go in on page 166, after line 8, with the heading "Census Office."

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well.

The SECRETARY. On page 166, after line 8, insert:

CENSUS OFFICE.

To collect, collate, and publish statistics relating to the turpentine and rosin industry, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. On page 54, after line 2, I move to insert:

For all necessary expenses in connection with the securing of current information regarding the occurrence of epidemics and the prevalence of diseases dangerous to the public health throughout the United States and its possessions, $16,000.

Mr. WARREN. That is regularly estimated for in a later estimate, and we have a very urgent letter requesting it from the department. I accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. On page 167, after line 4, I move to insert:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $71,000, to be paid to the following-named persons in the amount specified to each, for injuries sustained by shots fired across the American boundary line by soldiers and revolutionists on the Mexican side of the line in the year 1911, to wit: Adolfo Varela, of El Paso, Tex., $3,000; Virginia Moorhead, of El Paso, Tex., $3,000; Abundio Soto, of El Paso, Tex., $4,000; Edwin G. Heaton, of El Paso, Tex., $2,000; Celia Griffiths, of El Paso, Tex., $15,000; A. R. Chandler, of El Paso, Tex., $12,000; Emma Larson, of Douglas, Ariz., $1,000; Elmer E. Crowe, of Douglas,

Ariz., $5,000; Francis F. Williams, of Douglas, Ariz., $5,000; John W. Keate, of Douglas, Ariz., $5,000; Joseph W. Harrington, of Douglas, Ariz., $15,000; William R. White, of Douglas, Ariz., $2,000.

Mr. WARREN. Of course if that is to go in it will not need the appropriating clause. I think I shall have to make a point of order on it, but I should like to hear from the Senator what he knows regarding the circumstances.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I hope the Senator will not make the point of order. It is not subject to it, to start with. The Senate has already passed it as a separate bill. The House of Representatives has already favorably reported the bill. In order to get the bill through at this session it is necessary that it shall go on this particular appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. It is clearly a claim, but if the Senator will ask unanimous consent I shall be glad to accept it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent to submit the amendment which has been read. Is there objection?

Mr. FALL. Allow me to offer a little additional information to the chairman of the committee in addition to what the Senator from Arizona has said. All these claims were investigated under a resolution of this body by officers designated in the resolution. They have all been reported, and reported favorably. This is the report of the committee embodied in a bill which has passed the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the amendment was adopted by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was agreed to without objection.

Mr. GAMBLE. On page 100, after line 11, I move to insert "For combined chapel and amusement hall, $37,500."

Mr. WARREN. I shall have to ask whether we have an estimate for that. I beg pardon; there is an estimate for it—I remember now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON. On page 123, after line 24, I move to insert:

For the removal of the college women's dormitory and the construction, equipment, and furnishing of a new dormitory to replace it, including necessary repairs or replacement of walks and grading of grounds adjacent to said dormitory: Provided, That not more than $3,000 of the above amount may be used for erecting or renting temporary quarters for the use of those usually housed in said dormitory: And provided further, That this sum be made immediately available, $85,000.

Mr. WARREN. That matter had serious consideration. It is really estimated for. Of course there is a crying need for it. I dislike very much to enlarge the amounts in this bill, but I shall not object to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 103, after line 4, I move to insert:

Bridge at Fort Riley, Kans.: For the construction of a steel bridge across the Kansas River at Fort Riley, Kans., to render accessible the drill ground for the Cavalry at Smoky Hill Flats, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRADLEY. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert:

To carry into effect the provisions of Senate bill passed April 2, 1912, providing for the celebration of the semicentennial anniversary of the act of emancipation, and for other purposes, $250,000.

Mr. WARREN. I am somewhat afraid we are going to overload this ship of ours, but since we have enlisted for that kind of work I shall not object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is there an estimate for this?

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, there is no estimate necessary for it. This is an appropriation which is largely in the hands of the officers of the Government, to be paid by them, and the amount is fixed in the amendment. No estimate can be made. It is impossible to make an estimate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the bill passed?

Mr. BRADLEY. Yes; it passed the Senate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I am seriously thinking of offering an amendment providing an appropriation to carry on county fairs at every county seat in every county in the United States. I must say that this business of appropriating a quarter of a million dollars for the Knoxville Exposition and for this and for that is coming pretty swift.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CRAWFORD. This is a sort of outburst of the flood that is coming in here of exposition money. I think it is about time to stop it, for one session at least.

Mr. BRADLEY. Yes; but I think the outburst is on the part of my good friend. I have been trying to get this appropriation approved for some time. The Knoxville Exposition bill has never passed the Senate at all. The proposition came here and went on the bill by unanimous consent, while my amendment has passed the Senate in the shape of a bill, and my distinguished friend voted for the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. I want to call the attention of my Kentucky friend to the fact that the Knoxville proposition did not pass by unanimous consent, for I distinctly twice voted against it.

Mr. BRADLEY. I beg the Senator's pardon if I have misrepresented him. I do not believe he ever consents to anything. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I move to amend by striking out the paragraph commencing in line 22, page 123.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the paragraph commencing on page 123, line 22, as follows:

For repairs and improvements to the Patent Office Building, as set forth in Senate Document No. 543 of the Sixty-first Congress, all of the work to be done under the supervision and direction of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, and to be immediately available, $220,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hardly know what the Senator's object is; perhaps he will tell us.

Mr. WORKS. If the Senator will bear with me a moment, I will explain to him what my purpose is. It will be seen that this paragraph provides for repairs and improvements in the Patent Office as set forth in Senate Document 543, Sixty-first Congress. I move to strike out this portion of the bill not because I do not appreciate the fact that additional room is necessary for the work of the Patent Office—I think it is necessary—but I seriously object to furnishing that room in the way provided in this paragraph. If Senators will refer to the document indicated, it provides how these improvements shall be made. I read from Senate Document 543, Sixty-first Congress:

Tentative plans have been prepared looking to the erection of an addition to the building, it being proposed to locate such addition in the court of the Patent Office Building. The plan contemplates moving the mass of earth in the court which is held there by retaining walls some 12 feet high. The moisture from this earth has for years percolated through the retaining walls into the rooms abutting on the court, which resulted in damaging everything put in them, including a large number of books, which were found to be rotted and soaked with water. There were removed to the Government Printing Office something like 200 tons, I understand, from these rooms about two years ago, since which time nothing of any great value has been stored there.

The doing away with this great mass of earth and the retaining walls will bring the large space in the court of the buildings on a level with Ninth Street, and by erecting a one-story building covering the entire court, constructed of metal and glass, there will be afforded housing for the 1,000,000 bundles of patents now stored all over the building from cellar to attic, and furnish storage for the natural increase of patents, which requires 100 linear feet a week at a height of 7 feet to store. The present available space for storing weekly issues of patents at this rate will be exhausted before the expiration of the next fiscal year.

To this point probably this construction would be unobjectionable, but a further plan is provided:

In addition to this proposed one-story structure, it is contemplated to erect in the center of the court a building 80 feet wide, 4 stories in height, with a central hall 10 feet wide, giving 32 rooms 17 by 35 feet, which would accommodate comfortably 17 divisions and very nearly 300 employees.

The proposition is, Mr. President, to practically close up that inner court. It is well known that the building is so constructed that there is a corridor running entirely around the building, with rooms on each side of it, some of them being inside rooms and facing on the court. The result of it is practically to close up those rooms and deprive them of necessary ventilation, air, and light, and to make them rooms which no one ought to be expected to inhabit and work in. I think it would be a great mistake to carry out this plan. I understand, Mr. President, that it is likely this building, the dimensions of which are given, will not fill up the court entirely, but the building has little enough ventilation as it is now, and there is complaint about it at the present time. As it was originally constructed, I understand there were openings left at each corner of the building so that the air could circulate through the building through this inner corridor, but even those spaces have been filled up by rooms, shutting off that means of ventilation, and now it is proposed to build in the court. I think Congress ought not to do anything of that kind. We know here something about what it is to work inside of a box. Employees of the Government ought not to be expected to work in a place of that kind. Personally, of course, I have no interest in the matter; but I sympathize with anyone who is expected to perform labor under such circumstances.

I do not know how far the committee has investigated the plans that are provided, but certainly some investigation ought to be made of the matter. I am morally certain, Mr. President, that additional room is necessary, and I believe thoroughly in the construction of buildings here in Washington that will accommodate the employees in doing the necessary work. I think it is a great mistake that the Government should be paying rent for buildings, when buildings can be constructed by it; but I do not believe that the money of the Government ought to be expended in any such construction as this. It is for that reason that I am calling attention to it by a motion to strike out that particular appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator has not given the matter of which he speaks more attention, and that he has not seen the plans. It is a matter that has been thoroughly considered by the committee at this end of the Capitol, and also by the committee at the other end, for the last two or three years. I have personally looked over the plans and been over the ground. I have conversed with the chiefs of various offices, as well as with the heads of bureaus.

The manner in which this building is to be constructed will give great relief and do away with the condition which has been described as existing there—that of moisture continually collecting in the earth there and oozing through the walls of the building. All this earth should be taken out. That building was put on a different grade from that now established on the surrounding streets. The consequence is that in that great interior court, which is larger in itself than most buildings, the rain and snow collect, are not promptly removed, and then ooze through the soil into the walls of the building. It is proposed to take that earth out and strengthen the walls where they should be strengthened on a part of that building, and to give light and air to basement or first-story rooms that now have one dark side.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, the building that is to be constructed there will be so small, with reference to the whole building or inside court, that there will be a good open space or court all around it. It will not take the air or the sun from any of the rooms.

Last year I took up the matter and we put the provision into the bill on this side of Congress. When we met in conference the chairman of the Appropriations Committee on the other side and his associates said, "If you will let this provision go out this year, we will give it our personal attention, and, if it is thought to be the best thing to do, we will put it in the bill next year." They have given it study; they have been there personally; they have looked over the situation; and they have recommended this provision, of which I fully approve.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if it is also contemplated to remove the earth that is heaped around the building outside, between the building and the street, on the F Street side and on the Seventh Street side?

Mr. WARREN. That is not contemplated in this particular amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, it ought to be.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is perfectly right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because if that is taken away it will give large windows down there, and give them outside ventilation. The earth that is heaped around outside will have the same effect as the earth that is heaped inside the court. I would suggest to the Senator that it would be well to amend the provision sufficiently to include the removal of the earth outside, so as to reduce the lot itself fronting on the streets to the grade of the streets.

Mr. WARREN. The trouble is that we have no estimate yet and do not know the amount that would be required.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, but if you include that in the present appropriation, you can probably do it all about as cheaply as part of it, if you do it all at once, or very nearly as cheaply at any rate, and you can have a basis for the future for a deficiency appropriation, if necessary. You can not altogether relieve the moisture there by removing the earth on the inside of the court; you will have to remove it on both sides.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me a little further, I want to bring up another condition here. We had before us a year ago the scientists and physicians who had been examining into the insanitary conditions in our public buildings, and I may say that the situation in that building is simply frightful. In the Patent Office, the large room that had been built formerly for the exhibition of models, is filled from the ceiling to the floor and from side to side with wooden partitions, ladders, and scaffolding, and copies of patent documents are piled up there by the ton. The boys who work there on small wages in that dirt and dust and confined air look as if they had just been taken out of a dungeon where they had spent months. In fact, while on duty they have to have handkerchiefs over their mouths or in their mouths to keep the dust out of their throats, and they are obliged to breathe through the cloth. This provision will give substantial relief. It will greatly benefit this building; and should the bill which we passed last night become a law, an entire new Patent Office will be built later on and the old Patent Office Building will be used for the Interior Department; but this item in the bill will bring early relief and, I think, very efficient relief.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, as I said in the beginning, I see no objection to the removal of the dirt or probably the construction of a one story building, because that would probably not interfere with the ventilation or the light. I do not disagree with the Senator from Wyoming with respect to the objectionable condition of things that exist there at the present time. They should be remedied; but I should not want to see conditions made worse than they are now. Of course additional space could be provided by this means, but at the expense, as I think the conditions will show, of the ventilation and light of all the rooms that are there now, and the additional rooms would be equally objectionable. No argument can remove the fact that we are proposing, in part at least, to obstruct and fill up this open court that furnishes the light and air for the people who are working in the building; and I think it is extremely objectionable.

I had very little expectation of being able to remove this appropriation from the bill, but it is the condition of things that I desire to call to the attention of Senators. We had a report from the Secretary of the Treasury a few days ago showing that this Government paid last year $19,800,000 in the effort to preserve the health of the public, and I think we ought to be exceedingly careful not to construct any building that is going to make for more insanitary conditions or help to create disease and discomfort that we are trying to remove.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 160, after line 26, it is proposed to insert:

For the construction of a steam vessel for use in connection with the fur seal, salmon, and other fisheries of the Pacific coast, and the equipment of same, $225,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not press that amendment. It is entirely useless, as I happen to know. We have all we can carry in the bill for the Albatross and other matters.

Mr. JONES. Well, Mr. President, I simply press that upon the Senate because from the facts which I have I think the Government ought to get this vessel. The Bureau of Fisheries has charge of the Pribilof Islands and the fur seals in addition to the fisheries of Alaska and the fisheries of the Pacific coast. They must look out for the care of the natives on the Pribilof Islands. In order to do that they have to get an ocean-going vessel and make at least two trips each year to take supplies to those islands and to bring back the furs. In order to do that they must charter a vessel. The Government has no vessel with which to do this work. Last year it cost the Government over $20,000, and it will cost the Government at least $20,000 every year to do this service. That is 5 per cent on a vessel worth $400,000, and it is 10 per cent on a vessel costing $225,000. If the Government had its own vessel, it could not only do that work but it could also do a great deal of necessary investigation in connection with the fisheries of Alaska and the fisheries of the Pacific Ocean. Those are the reasons that have induced me to offer the amendment. I think it is for the benefit of the Government; it means a saving of money to the Government and increased service for the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to ask him how much it will cost to keep that vessel in commission for a whole year?

Mr. JONES. Of course it will cost something, but we will be able to accomplish something with the money. The vessel can be employed in the investigation of fishery matters in Alaska and on the Pacific coast. It could be there all the year round, where there is need for it, and that need would be served. Those are the facts and those are the reasons why I have presented the amendment to the Senate. If the Senate does not think that is a good business proposition, of course I do not want the Senate to take it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have in my hand a memorandum of what we are spending unnecessarily on the Pribilof Islands in connection with employees and service. As a part of it, I find a statement to which I call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming in connection with this matter.

Mr. WARREN. I will ask the Senator if that refers to the amendment now pending, offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; it refers to it in this way, that it seems to me to render his amendment unnecessary [reading]:

The one revenue cutter which is now on patrol up there, and must be so employed during the next 15 years, or through the life of the present fur-seal treaty act of 1911–12, can and will perform all the services required for transportation of the small annual requisitions for supplies needed on the islands, said requisitions for supplies being annually made to the Secretary of the Treasury by the caretakers of said seal islands. The Secretary then in turn directs his special agents in San Francisco or Seattle to purchase and ship these suplies to Dutch Harbor, Onalaska Islands, by any of the monthly freight lines which now are engaged on that route.

At Dutch Harbor (192 miles southeast of Pribilof Islands) the revenue-marine cutter, aforesaid, can receive and thus transport these supplies to the Seal Islands.

So much of it is pertinent to this particular question, but I desire to have it all read and put in the RECORD for the information of the Senate.

Mr. JONES. I will ask the Senator from whom the letter is, or who prepared the statement he has read?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Lieut. Elliott, who is very well acquainted with the entire fur-seal business.

Mr. JONES. That is the Mr. Elliott whom we have seen once in a while here in the city of Washington, is it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. You have not only seen him, but he has finally won out, and he has finally indicated that he knew more about this business than anybody else, and what he has recommended has been done.

I want that statement read to the Senate, and I want it to go into the RECORD as part of my remarks.

Mr. JONES. I will suggest to the Senator that I do not think we use our Revenue-Cutter Service for the transportation of supplies.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; not altogether. This paper states that these supplies are bought by the agents, and are transported to a certain place, and are thence conveyed by the revenue cutters to Dutch Harbor, or to the Pribilof Islands, where these caretakers are. I confess I do not know very much about the situation of things up there. I have not been there in a long time. But the reference of the Senator in a slighting way to Lieut. Elliott is a great mistake.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I did not intend that in a slighting way at all. I simply asked for information.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator said this man had been lying around here, or something of that kind.

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; oh, no. I did not use the words "lying around" at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator said he had been around, then. I do not mean "lying" in the sense of prevaricating, of course.

Mr. JONES. I was simply stating the fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Perhaps I misunderstood the Senator, but it seemed to me to be rather that way. He has been here for quite a long time. He went over to the House, and failed for a long time to get a hearing before the Ways and Means Committee; but finally he did get it, and he has impressed his ideas upon the House and upon the legislative branch of the Government.

I merely offer this part of the paper, however, to show that there is no necessity for buying a ship in order to transport things to the Pribilof Islands. I understand the Senator's amendment to involve other transportation problems as well, about which I know nothing; but there certainly seems to be no necessity for it as far as the Pribilof Islands are concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

FACTS AS TO THE BETTERMENT OF THE PUBLIC SERVICE ON THE SEAL ISLANDS OF ALASKA UNDER THE TREATY ACT OF AUGUST 24, 1912, AS ORDERED IN THE PENDING SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

I. The conditions calling for the public service of four special agents, two physicians, two school-teachers, two storekeepers and bookkeepers, two stockmen, and two janitors, and a naturalist, all detailed for St. Paul and St. George Islands, have been radically changed by the act of 1912, which orders a closed time to all commercial killing of fur seals on those islands for a period of five years from and after the passage and approval of said act, August 24, 1912.

This period of rest from slaughter by man on these islands at once restores the same conditions there which prevailed during the Russian "Zapooska" or "closed time" of 1834–1844. The entire administration of affairs then was devolved upon a single caretaker or superintendent on each island. These men performed all the duties now rendered on both islands by that large staff of idle and useless employees of the Government above itemized; and they did it even better and with more success than these agents of to-day have done and are doing or will do them, if continued.

This salary list of 1912, which is now on the rolls of the Government as agents and assistants thereto on the seal islands of Alaska, amounts to $25,000 annually. This change for the better, as proposed by substituting two caretakers for the two islands, at $2,500 each annually, saves the useless expenditure of $20,000 annually for such service as now done.

II. The act of 1912 also enabled the Government to dispense with two of the three revenue marine cutters which have been annually set apart by the Secretary of the Treasury and employed for the "Bering Sea patrol" for the protection of the fur-seal herd of Alaska on the Pribilof Islands.

The one revenue cutter which is now on patrol up there and must be so employed during the next 15 years or through the life of the present fur-seal-treaty act of 1911–12 can and will perform all the services required for transportation of the small annual requisitions for supplies needed on the islands, said requisitions for supplies being annually made to the Secretary of the Treasury by the caretakers of said seal islands. The Secretary then in turn directs his special agents in San Francisco or Seattle to purchase and ship these supplies to Dutch Harbor, Unalaska Islands, by any of the monthly freight lines which now are engaged on that route.

At Dutch Harbor, 192 miles SE. of Pribilof Islands, the revenue marine cutter aforesaid can receive and thus transport these supplies to the seal islands.

And, also, this cutter can bring down from these seal islands any and all "food skins" which may be taken thereon annually, and ship them in turn from Dutch Harbor to the collector of customs at San Francisco or Seattle; these officials in turn can ship them and sell them to the best advantage of the Government, even better than the officialism now in charge does it.

III. This service, thus rendered by the revenue marine cutter above cited, enables the Government to dispense entirely with that chartered "supply ship" which has been annually engaged as such, up to date, since 1909.

This effects a saving annually of at least $25,000 on that single item alone; that saving plus the $20,000 annually saved on account of cutting off the idle and useless agents specified in item "I" above makes a total saving of at least $45,000 annually to the Public Treasury on those items by substituting those two caretakers and the revenue marine cutter, as above cited.

IV. The Russian caretaker, or "superintendent," during the closed time of 1834–1844, was a man who had a fair knowledge of medicine, who taught the school, and who kept the books necessary for the receipt, distributions, and requisitions for annual supplies.

He had no help or assistance of any kind, except as volunteered by the natives, and he did not need more. He performed all of these duties admirably, as above stated, and then asked for more to do. Surely, an American can do as much now.

V. The conditions on the islands to-day, in so far as natives and the seals are concerned, are precisely as they were in 1834–1844, and when the Russian "zapooska," or closed time, was in effect. The natives are the same quiet, docile, inoffensive people, and fewer in number. They require no "regulation" by our agents. The simple administration of their small affairs up there has been always done by their church organization, which will continue to do so and is self-supporting.

VI. The seal herd is protected from any piracy by the revenue marine cutter, which will be on patrol around these Pribilof Islands during the next 15 years. Beyond that survey by man, the less it is viewed and experimented upon by idle agents and raw "naturalists" the better for it.

VII. The committee proposes, therefore, to let those natural laws, which alone govern the best existence of this wild fur-seal life, have free and unchecked action during the next five years. The past bitter experience of meddling agents and "expert" naturalists has been of nothing but positive harm to that life.

VIII. The treaty act of 1912 also orders and specifies that during any period of complete suspension of commercial taking of seals on the Pribilof Islands, that the annual sum of $10,000 shall be paid to the Government of Japan, and a like sum, annually, to the Government of Great Britain. Therefore, to meet that obligation, the committee estimates for it, as below itemized, in the lump sum of $75,000, appropriated, to wit:

For salaries of two caretakers, at $2,500	$5,000
For native subsistence, fuel, clothing	35,000
For treaty award to Japan	10,000
For treaty award to Great Britain	10,000
For freight charges and incidentals to sale of food skins	15,000
Total sum	75,000

NOTE.—The food skins of the seals, which are to be preserved and sold annually (some 2,000 of them), will bring in the gross sum of at least $50,000 in seasons of dull trade, and as much as $75,000 annually in seasons of brisk trade.

HENRY W. ELLIOTT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 28, 1913.

Mr. JONES. I never supposed when I offered my amendment that because it referred to the fur seal I would bring up all this fur-seal controversy. I notice that what our friend Mr. Elliott says there does not relate to this matter at all, but to the general administration of things up there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. JONES. Oh, I know he refers to the matter of transportation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That part of it which I read does relate to it. The balance does not.

Mr. JONES. I understand that.

I want to say that I did not intend to refer in any slighting way to Mr. Elliott. I have met him quite a number of times, and have gotten well acquainted with him and think a great deal of him. I am aware that he knows more about the fur-seal industry itself—not the transportation feature, but the fur-seal part of it—than any man with whom I ever came in contact. I am always glad to meet him and glad to get information from him with reference to these matters.

I have here a letter from the Commissioner of Fisheries that I shall ask to have printed in the RECORD without reading, in connection with this matter, showing the necessity of this amendment. As I said, as a matter of fact we are paying out $20,000 a year for ships to make two trips up there. If we ought not to do that, why, of course, we ought not to do it; but we are doing it, and I am of the opinion that we will probably keep on doing it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
BUREAU OF FISHERIES,
Washington, February 19, 1913.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: In the estimates of the Bureau of Fisheries for the fiscal year 1914 there was included an item of $225,000 for an ocean-going vessel for work on the Pacific coast. This item was not included in the sundry civil bill as reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations.

This was recommended for the following reasons:

(1) Now that the bureau is charged with the supervision of the fur-seal herds and the care of the natives on the Pribilof Islands, it is necessary to send a vessel at least twice in each season to the islands to carry supplies for the inhabitants and bring down the fur-seal skins.

(2) Experience has proved that it is impossible to charter a suitable vessel for less than $20,000 per season, and that it is impracticable to obtain one from other branches of the Government. Last year the cost of the charter was $20,025. Therefore it seems eminently advisable to construct a vessel which will not only be available for the above purposes but can be utilized in conducting deep-sea investigations and studies of the fisheries of the Pacific coast, including Alaska. Considering the immense coast line of the United States on the Pacific, and the fishery interests thereof, the necessity for a suitable steam vessel would seem to be obvious.

(3) The Albatross is not adapted for this work, having been built for oceanographic investigations and lacking storage capacity. If the new vessel is authorized it is my purpose, after she is built and equipped, to transfer the Albatross to the Atlantic coast where the latter can be utilized to great advantage and fill a long-felt want.

I beg to call this to your attention, and express the hope that you will do what you can consistently to secure the appropriation.

Yours, very truly,

GEO. M. BOWERS, Commissioner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

That so much of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1912, as provides as follows, to wit: "No additional appointments as cadets or cadet engineers shall be made in the Revenue-Cutter Service unless hereafter authorized by Congress," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Also, in lines 24 and 25, on page 37, it is proposed to strike out the words:

Not exceeding seven cadets and cadet engineers, who are hereby authorized.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, last year we provided, apparently without any protest, that there should be no more cadets. In this bill as it comes from the House they have provided that there shall be not exceeding seven. Of course it is clearly legislation, or rather it is a repeal of legislation. I should think, even aside from that, that it would be safer to accept the seven we have and start from there, rather than to undertake to repeal the entire law.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, of course I admit that the amendment is subject to the point of order if the Senator desires to make it. I have considerable literature here that I want to inform the Senate about in relation to the matter. I do not want to inflict it on the Senate, however, if the Senator will allow the amendment to go on the bill and simply consider it in conference. It involves no appropriation. It requires no estimate. It involves the continuance of a school for Revenue-Cutter cadets which is established in my home city. The legislation was put into the bill at the last session, and I have been trying ever since to find out what induced it to be put in. I have not been able to get any information on the subject.

I introduced a bill and referred it to the Senate Committee on Appropriations. I tried to proceed in the regular way, in a legislative way, but it was not reported. I make no complaint about that, however.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator say he sent his bill to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why, certainly; I sent it to the Committee on Appropriations at the Senator's own suggestion, and also to the Committee on Commerce. I have not been able to get any information about why this legislation was ever enacted. The effect of it is to close down this school, which has just been established in my town within the last two or three years, having been moved up from Arundel, Md.

I have all the facts here. I do not want to delay the Senate by having read a lot of letters and resolutions and reports of the Secretary of the Treasury recommending the repeal of this provision. I have them all here. All I ask the Senator to do is to let it go on the bill, and find out from the House why they insist upon this. If it is not thought to be a good thing to do to repeal it, I shall not protest against the conference report. I simply ask the Senator to consider it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it becomes the duty of Senators, in conducting these bills, to resist legislation as far as possible. We know that last year we were subjected to a great deal of legislation in appropriation bills, of which the measure the Senator speaks of was part. If no one else makes the point of order, I am tempted to let it go on the bill and be considered in conference, and then it can be taken out unless there is an acquiescence on the other side with the wishes and request of the Senator who is presenting the case. I understand the Senator to say he has a large amount of material there.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have, and I have the recommendation in the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury that this legislation never ought to have been enacted, and he advises its repeal. I have introduced a bill to repeal it. In the press of business the Senator's committee has not had time to consider it. Then I went before the committee and left the papers with the Senator's clerk, at his suggestion, with the request that the matter be considered as an amendment to the bill. In the great mass of subjects before him I do not know whether he has had a chance to consider it or not. I take this method of trying to get the House conferees to consider it, at least. That is all I ask. It does not involve a dollar of expense.

Mr. WARREN. If no one else objects, I shall not object. Let it go into conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE subsequently said: I want to have inserted in the RECORD, in connection with an amendment which I heretofore submitted, certain papers, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The papers referred to are as follows:

APPOINTMENT OF CADETS IN REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending the repeal of that clause in the sundry civil appropriation act for 1913 which provides that "no additional appointments as cadets or cadet engineers shall be made in the Revenue-Cutter Service unless hereafter authorized by Congress."

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 21, 1912.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have the honor to recommend for the consideration of the Congress the repeal of that clause in the sundry civil appropriation act for 1913 which provides that "no additional appointments as cadets or cadet engineers shall be made in the Revenue-Cutter Service unless hereafter authorized by Congress."

From July 1, 1911, up to the present time the following vacancies in the active list of the Revenue-Cutter Service have occurred: Six resignations, 3 deaths, and 6 retirements. During the remainder of the current fiscal year there will be 1 retirement for age. This makes a total of 16 vacancies in the commissioned personnel to be filled during the current fiscal year, over half of which have been caused by death or resignation.

There are at present 18 cadets undergoing instruction at the School of Instruction at New London, Conn. Of these, 13 will fill vacancies which existed prior to July 1, 1911, so that there are at present but 5 cadets available to fill the vacancies which have occurred since July 1, 1911. There remain, therefore, 11 vacancies that can not be filled because of the foregoing provision of law.

The total number of officers authorized by law is 242, and in such a small number the existence of 11 vacancies which can not be filled under the law, with every prospect of additional vacancies from death and resignation, is a serious condition, and if the inhibition of further appointments of cadets continues the efficiency of the service must of necessity suffer because of an insufficient number of officers to perform the duties required.

Even after Congress has authorized the filling of these vacancies by appointment of cadets time must elapse before these cadets can complete the course of instruction necessary to prepare them for the responsible duties of commissioned officers, and meanwhile additional vacancies will occur. It is therefore important that the task of preparing young men to be officers should not be interrupted, because the future efficiency of any service depends most upon the quality and training of the young men selected to fill the vacancies in the lowest grades, and the duty of recruiting the commissioned personnel of a service is a most serious one, second only in importance to the duty of performing the work for which the service itself is maintained.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE,
New London, Conn., February 19, 1913.

HON. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Referring to your favorable consideration of the proposition to repeal a provision in the last sundry civil bill which prevented the Treasury Department from making "additional appointments as cadets or cadet engineers in the Revenue-Cutter Service unless authorized by Congress," I have the honor to call your attention to the action of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives in providing for the appointment of "seven cadets and cadet engineers" during the next fiscal year. While this shows a favorable spirit in the House committee, it does not, as you will understand, quite cover the needs in the case, since there are now 10 vacancies, and there will be more within the next year. You have kindly introduced a bill for the repeal of last year's provision, and I hope that you may feel that you can, through the chairman of the Appropriations Committee in the Senate, have your bill for the repeal of the provision for the nonappointment of cadets inserted in the sundry civil bill. I think you are aware that this would be agreeable to the citizens of New London, and it would be greatly appreciated by the Revenue-Cutter Service.

This matter has been brought to the attention of Senator OWEN, of Oklahoma, who has stated that he will call it to the attention of the Appropriations Committee when the sundry civil bill is taken up for consideration, and if you could confer with him it might be brought to the favorable consideration of the Appropriations Committee in the Senate and inserted in the sundry civil bill.

Thanking you for your interest in the matter, I am,

Respectfully,

W. V. E. JACOBS,
Captain, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, Superintendent.

Resolutions of the Board of Trade of New London, Conn.

Whereas there was enacted by Congress in the last sundry civil bill the following provision: "No additional appointments as cadets or cadet engineers shall be made in the Revenue-Cutter Service unless hereafter authorized by Congress"; and

Whereas should this provision continue in force it would result in closing the school of instruction at New London; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Treasury in his recent annual report has recommended that the above-quoted provision be repealed during the present session of Congress, in order that the Revenue-Cutter Service may obtain its officers as heretofore: Be it

Resolved, That this body bring to the attention of the Senators and Members of Congress from Connecticut the desirability of the repeal of the provision prohibiting appointments as cadets and cadet engineers in order that the school of instruction may be continued at New London, Conn., for the purpose of educating these cadets for commissions as officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service; and be it

Resolved, That the Senators and Members of Congress from Connecticut be requested, and are hereby requested, to use their active interest in inserting in the sundry civil bill, which is being considered at the present session of Congress, the following provision: "That portion of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 24, 1912, which provides that 'no additional appointments as cadets or cadet engineers shall be made in the Revenue-Cutter Service unless hereafter authorized by Congress,' is hereby repealed"; and be it

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each Senator and Member of Congress from Connecticut, urging them to use their efforts in effecting this desired legislation for the continuance of the school of instruction at New London.

Memoranda relative to the United States Revenue-Cutter Service and its school of instruction.

The cadet school of instruction was established about 35 years ago (1877) at New Bedford, Mass. The academic course was given to the cadets during the winter and the practical course was given during the summer months, when the practice cruise was taken, and this system is now followed. The institution remained at New Bedford, graduating class after class of cadets, until 1891. In this year the policy was adopted at Washington of appointing graduates from the United States Naval Academy. This policy continued for four or five years, 13 graduates from the Naval Academy having been appointed during that period, but it was discontinued because of lack of available graduates.

In 1894, however, the school of instruction was again established at New Bedford, Mass., where it continued for two years. The practice ship Chase was then sent on a cruise, which continued throughout the whole year, the academic and practical courses being given at the same time. This plan continued for about four years, when the school of instruction was located at Arundel Cove, South Baltimore, Md. From 1899 until 1910 this institution graduated its cadets from its school of instruction at Arundel Cove, Md.

In the autumn of 1910 the school was removed from Arundel Cove, Md., to Fort Trumbull, New London, Conn., where it has since been established, and from which during the last two years 32 cadets have been graduated and commissioned as officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Appointments as cadets and cadet engineers in the Revenue-Cutter Service are made by a strictly competitive system through written examinations. These examinations are held under subboards of officers on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts and on the Great Lakes. The appointments are made from the results of these examinations, the vacancies being given to those who obtain the highest averages in the examinations and irrespective of any outside influences. It will thus be seen that appointments are open to the youth of the whole land, and that the School of Instruction is thus a truly democratic institution.

The course of instruction covers three years and includes the following departments:

1. Discipline.
2. Seamanship.
3. Navigation.
4. Ordnance and gunnery.
5. Mathematics.
6. Engineering.
7. Law.
8. English and history.
9. Modern languages.
10. Hygiene.

The subjects under these departments include general conduct of cadets and general conduct of an officer, seamanship, theoretical and practical; signals, international, wigwag, and wireless telegraphy; navigation and compass compensation; astronomy, algebra, descriptive geometry, analytic geometry, trigonometry, and calculus; English composition, general history, rhetoric, and official letters and reports; civil government, navigation law, international law, military law, and service regulations; lectures on hygiene, first aid to the injured, and resuscitation drill; French grammar and conversation, French literature; gunnery, drill regulations, and ballistics; steam engineering, mechanical drawing, and naval architecture and surveying.

The work of the Revenue-Cutter Service is well known to include the following: The protection of the revenue; the suppression of piracy; the search for wrecked and missing vessels; the enforcement of the neutrality laws, by preventing expeditions against neighboring and friendly Governments; the suppression of mutiny; the protection of the Government timber reserves; the inspection of life-saving stations and the drilling of life-saving crews; the enforcement of laws and protection of property in Alaska; the destruction of derelicts menacing navigation; the rendering of assistance to vessels in distress and aiding the shipwrecked; the enforcement of navigation laws and of the quarantine regulations; the care for the safety of the public at yacht races and regattas; the supervision of anchorages in certain harbors; the protection of certain fisheries; and the defense of the country in time of war.

A reference to only two recent incidents in the work of the Revenue-Cutter Service will attest its value to the country, in citing the splendid work of the revenue cutter Gresham at the loss of the steamship Republic, and a very recent rescue of 58 passengers by the revenue cutter Seneca from the steamship Turrialba, which was stranded off the New Jersey coast on December 24, 1912.

These two reasons are but a small part of the results of the activities of the Revenue-Cutter Service, the totals of which are such as to call for the continued education of the cadets at the School of Instruction for carrying on in the future the protection of the maritime interests of the country.

The following extracts from the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1912–13 are herewith quoted: "I wish to call attention to the provision in the sundry civil bill of 1913, as follows: 'No additional appointments as cadets or cadet-engineers shall be made in the Revenue-Cutter Service unless hereafter authorized by Congress.'"

At the present time there are 10 vacancies in the commissioned personnel, the total numbers of officers authorized by law is 242, and in such a small number the existence of 10 vacancies, which can not be filled under the law, with every prospect of additional vacancies from death and resignation, is a serious condition; and if the inhibition of further appointments of cadets continues the efficiency of the service must of necessity suffer, because of the insufficient number of officers to perform the duties required. It is recommended that the above provision in the sundry civil bill be repealed.

In another part of the Secretary's report there occurs the following section:

APPOINTMENT OF CADETS.

"The sundry civil bill for 1913 contains the following provision: 'No additional appointments as cadets or cadet engineers shall be made in the Revenue-Cutter Service unless hereafter authorized by Congress.'

"From July 1, 1911, up to the present time the following vacancies in the active list have occurred: Five resignations, 3 deaths, and 6 retirements. During the remainder of the present fiscal year there will be one retirement for age. This makes a total of 15 vacancies in the commissioned personnel to be filled during the current fiscal year, over half of which have been caused by death or resignation. There are at present 18 cadets undergoing instruction at the School of Instruction at New London, Conn. Of these 13 will fill vacancies which existed prior to July 1, 1911, so that there are at present but 5 cadets available to fill the vacancies which have occurred since July 1, 1911. There remain 10 vacancies that can not be filled because of the foregoing provision of law. If the inhibition of the further appointment of cadets continues, the efficiency of the service must suffer because of an insufficient number of officers to perform the duties required. The total number of officers authorized by law is 242, and in such a small number the existence of 10 vacancies which can not be filled under the law, with every prospect of additional vacancies from death and resignation, is a serious condition, and it is earnestly recommended that the matter be presented to Congress for relief."

It is hoped that the above-quoted provision in the sundry civil bill may be repealed during the present session of Congress, and this may be done by the insertion in the sundry civil appropriation act for the coming fiscal year of the following provision: "That portion of the sundry civil appropriation act, approved August 24, 1912, which provides that 'no additional appointments as cadets or cadet engineers shall be made in the Revenue-Cutter Service unless hereafter authorized by Congress' is hereby repealed." This desired action on the part of Congress can best be brought about, it is thought, by having the above provision inserted by the Committee on Appropriations in the sundry civil bill now under consideration. It is greatly desired that this provision be placed in that part of the sundry civil bill dealing with the appropriation for the Revenue-Cutter Service in committee by the Appropriations Committee.

The effect of the nonenactment of the above provision at this session of Congress will result in closing the Revenue-Cutter Service School of Instruction at Fort Trumbull, New London, Conn., and as under the existing law there is no other provision for recruiting the commissioned personnel of the service, the great work which the Revenue-Cutter Service is doing for the country's maritime interests will be seriously affected.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 120, at the end of line 13, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That a right of way 100 feet wide for road, telegraph and telephone lines, and for no other purposes, is hereby granted through the Blackfeet Indian Reservation from a point on the line of said reservation north of St. Mary, thence in a northerly and northwesterly course west of lower St. Mary Lake to a point near the east end of Sherburne Lake, by the most feasible route, and that no part of the land herein authorized to be occupied shall be used except in such manner and for such purposes as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said road, telegraph and telephone lines, and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used, such portion shall revert to said Indian reservation.

Mr. WARREN. I shall have to make the point of order against that amendment, but shall withhold it for the moment.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will withhold it until he sees what it is for I think he will hardly make the point of order.

We have just provided $188,000 to be used in Glacier National Park. The park is now being gotten in position for the great trade that will manifestly be there during the season of 1915. It is quite essential if we are to use that park, as hundreds of thousands of people undoubtedly will during that summer, that we shall have the appropriation and provision made for the roads that are now laid out and are contemplated to be built.

I call the Senator's attention to this fact—I want him to look at the map, which comes from the department itself—as to the necessity of allowing the road to go through the Indian reservation: For instance, we have the Great Northern Road down here now to Midvale and they have a road already established up to St. Marys. That will be the regular route for tourists. On account of the topography it is necessary to go for about 5 or 6 miles, I think, through the edge of the Indian reservation to go around to the end of this other lake that is mentioned. This is simply to carry out the provisions of the appropriation of $188,000, so that there will be authority for crossing the Indian reservation near the edge there as between those two points.

Mr. WARREN. Let me ask the Senator, Is all that is proposed a right of way in an Indian reservation?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; just this part.

Mr. WARREN. Does it start in the park and finally end in the park?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. And on its way passes through the reservation?

Mr. McCUMBER. On its way it must pass through about 5 or 6 miles of the reservation.

Mr. WARREN. Has the matter been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; but there can be no possible objection to it.

Mr. WARREN. Since stating what I did I find it is regularly estimated here by the department as the Senator has stated it. Of course, I assumed that it was for the purpose of legislating to grant a right of way. I understand that this money has already been paid in here that is to be expended.

Mr. McCUMBER. It does not even direct how it is to be extended, except in order to extend it and extend it properly it must go through a portion of the Indian reservation.

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. On page 122 there was an item that was inserted by the House in regard to the Platte National Park. There was an estimate for the maintenance of the Platte National Park of $8,924. I think it ought to be provided for, and I offer the following amendment. It is estimated for by the department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 122, after line 5, insert "Platte National Park, for maintenance, bridging roads and trails, $8,924."

Mr. WARREN. I wish merely to state that the Platte National Park has been heretofore provided for. The estimate itself is eight thousand dollars and something. I shall find it in a moment. I presume the Senator has it also.

Mr. OWEN. I will send to the desk the estimate.

Mr. WARREN. It is unnecessary. It seems that the House, in its bill as it was passed, provided, first, the section which we have cut out. In that section it is proposed to cede the park to the State of Oklahoma. Then a paragraph was added providing that if the State did not accept it it was to be sold after a certain length of time to the highest bidder. They then added still another paragraph repealing a clause appropriating $17,500 that had been appropriated in an Indian appropriation bill for sewers, and so forth.

The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate only sought to add what was there printed, and as the striking out on a point of order on the floor of the last two of the three paragraphs left this standing alone we cut it out in order that we might not force it on the State of Oklahoma. Of course I shall accept the Senator's amendment, since it is estimated for and seems necessary under the circumstances.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. On page 112, after line 23, I move to insert as a new paragraph what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new paragraph, after line 23, on page 112, the following:

The fund derived from the act approved July 2, 1864, and the appropriation "Survey within land grants (reimbursable), act of March 2, 1895," is hereby made available for office work upon surveys under these acts in the offices of the surveyors general and in the General Land Office.

Mr. JONES. I have not had an opportunity to call this item to the attention of the chairman, because it just came to my attention. I am satisfied when the Senator understands the situation he will not make any objection to it.

Mr. WARREN. I do object, and I object that at this time in the consideration of the bill I am asked to accept an amendment which clearly changes the law. Is there any estimate for it? There is nothing here before us.

Mr. JONES. I do not know that there is an estimate, but I have a letter here from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WARREN. We have a great many letters from assistant secretaries, and a great many from secretaries. If we allowed everything that they ask for this bill would carry $200,000,000.

Mr. JONES. This amendment does not appropriate any money. If the Senator will let me explain the situation, I do not believe that he will object to it.

The railroads in the land-grant State put up about half of the money for the surveys of their lands. The lands are not subject to taxation until patents issue to the railroad, and patents do not issue until after the surveys are made and the surveys are approved. At a meeting of our county assessors in Olympia a short time ago they passed a resolution urging the acceptance of the survey, and calling attention to the fact that the surveyor general's office was filled with surveys that were unapproved, thereby preventing the issuance of patents to these railroad lands, and thereby preventing them from being subject to taxation for State purposes. They sent the resolution to the Secretary of the Interior to find out what the trouble was, and this is what the Secretary writes:

The resolution states that many townships in the State of Washington, on which the survey work has been completed, have not been approved for patents by the General Land Office, and this department is petitioned to hasten the approval of the surveys in order to aid settlement and place the land on the tax rolls. You forward the copy and ask for information in regard to the matter.

In reply I have to state that the Commissioner of the General Land Office informs me that the records of his office show the work of examining the returns of surveys sent to that office by the surveyor general for Washington to be practically up to date, and there is no case of surveys which has not been examined and acted upon or is not under consideration. Reports from the surveyor general's office at Olympia indicate that the greater number of surveys which are pending, owing to the office work not being completed, belong to the class of surveys known as railroad surveys; that is, surveys of lands within railroad limits. The force of transcribers and draftsmen in the office of the surveyor general seems to be inadequate to cope with the returns of surveys as fast as they are filed by the surveyors, and the delay which is complained of is caused by this fact.

For a clearer understanding of the matter it may be well to state that the majority of these surveys filed but not yet prepared by the surveyor general are of lands within railroad limits, and a recent decision (Nov. 16, 1912) by the Comptroller of the Treasury prohibits the use for office work of any portion of the fund from which the field work of these surveys are paid, and as the railroad companies are required to deposit a sum sufficient to pay for the expense of one-half of the surveys, there is no fund from which to pay the employment of additional draftsmen and transcribers in the surveyor general's office or in this office.

There is the situation. The local offices where the surveys are filed are swamped with the surveys, and they have not the help to examine the surveys. The fund from which the field survey is made is not available for the payment of this help. All that the amendment that I propose does is to make it available, so that the congestion in the local offices can be met and these surveys approved and patents issued, and the railroad land become subject to local taxation.

It does seem to me that the chairman would not object to remedying a situation like that. I would take care of it by separate legislation if it were possible at this time to do it, but we have not the time.

I wish the Senator would allow the amendment to go into the bill at any rate, so that he can look into the matter a little more fully. This letter is signed by Louis C. Laylin, the assistant secretary. If after investigation the chairman finds it is not needed, I am perfectly willing to allow it to go; but the people of my State and, I think, of other land-grant States would like to have this situation remedied. I am satisfied that my State is not the only one where surveys are held up because they have not the force in the local office to take care of them. I hope the Senator will allow the amendment to go in the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I received much information from the Senator, and I shall now give him some. We had the matter of surveys before the committee and gave it the most thorough examination. We invited the Secretary of the Interior and his assistants and the Commissioner of the General Land Office to appear before us. They appeared, through their representatives, before the committee. The committees of the House and Senate recommended, I think, about everything, if not everything, that they asked for.

The condition the Senator speaks of is about this: The offices of the surveyors general should be right up to date in their office work and with their field work, up to the time the comptroller's late decision was made, because up to that time the money that came in on deposits from the railroads and other sources was usable at any time in each of the offices for office work, and was so used in most or all of such offices. It is only within a few days that this decision has been promulgated. If it is to go on an appropriation bill, let it be taken up on one of the bills that follow, after we have had some time to look into it. I can not consent to its going on this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan offers the following amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, line 23, after the words "not to exceed $900 each," insert:

Compensation of storekeeper in charge of storehouse of the service at New York City, and the boat-storage house at Monmouth Beach Station, N. J., at such rate as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine, not to exceed $3,000 per annum.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I offer that amendment because of a request from the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, Mr. Kimball. The Clerk has a letter from the superintendent, dated the 25th of this month, directed to the Committee on Appropriations, in which he sets forth the reason for this amendment. Briefly I will state what he has said to me:

The storehouse of the service in New York City has until recently been under the charge of the Inspector of Life-Saving Stations, a senior captain of the Revenue-Cutter Service detailed for duty as inspector under provision of law. In effecting certain administrative changes in the Treasury Department, it was found desirable to transfer this officer's headquarters to the department at Washington where he could be in closer touch with this office and with the assistant inspectors located in the several districts, thus facilitating and enhancing the value of his work as inspector. This change necessitated the employment of a storekeeper, and the chief clerk of the storehouse office force, whose thorough familiarity with the duties gained through his 25 years' service, and whose sound judgment and proven ability peculiarly fitted him for this position, was designated as storekeeper. To his existing duties as chief clerk were added the duties and responsibilities involved in the purchase, inspection, custody, and shipment of the greater portion of the supplies of all kinds purchased by the service—all the supplies for the 200 stations located on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts and those stations on the Lake coasts supplied from the New York storehouse, as well as the purchase and inspection of much of those which are purchased under annual contracts from New York and other eastern points for distribution through the two other storehouses of the service. He is required to give bond for the faithful performance of these duties. Inasmuch as the position of chief clerk, with a salary of $2,000—is merged with that of storekeeper, for which a salary of $3,000 is now sought, the actual cost of the storekeeper would be only $1,000 per annum, as against that portion of the salary and allowances of a senior captain in the Revenue-Cutter Service (approximately $5,500), properly chargeable to this duty when performed by the inspector of life-saving stations, an amount which can not be definitely ascertained, but which far exceeded $1,000. Furthermore, the increase in salary for this faithful and efficient employee of the Government would be fully justified aside from his increased duties and responsibilities.

That is the statement of the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service in reference to the necessity of an increase of this allowance of $1,000 to the chief clerk, who has assumed the duties of purchasing agent for all the life-saving stations on the Atlantic and the Gulf coasts, as well as a large portion of the supplies purchased for the other stations in the United States.

Mr. WARREN. There is no estimate for it. It is a part of a legislative scheme that I have in my hand, which should certainly have the indorsement of the Committee on Commerce or of those who have charge of such matters. I shall have to make the point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the ground that the amendment was not estimated for, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have another amendment in connection with the same matter, which I presume is subject to the same point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 18, after the words "until expended," insert:

Provided, That so much of section 4249 of the Revised Statutes as provides that all life-saving stations shall be erected under the supervision of two captains of the Revenue Service, to be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury and to be under his direction, is hereby repealed, and the plans, estimates, specifications, etc., for all life-saving stations, and buildings and structures connected therewith now or hereafter authorized to be erected shall be prepared in the office of the Supervising Architect, who shall supervise the construction of such buildings and structures. The Supervising Architect shall also supervise the rebuilding and repair of life-saving stations and structures connected therewith, except such work as may be done by keepers and crews of stations.

Mr. WARREN. That is part of the same matter on which I raised the point of order. It is legislation clearly, and it is not estimated for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained on the ground that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. On page 54, after line 2, I move to insert the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, after line 2, insert:

For technical and clerical services and the purchase of equipment and supplies for collecting, maintaining, and making available to Federal, State, municipal, and hospital authorities, and institutions of learning, under such rules and regulations as shall be promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury, plans and descriptive matter of hospitals, asylums, dispensaries, sanatoria, homes for convalescents, nursing associations, and other agencies for the care of the sick, $6,000.

Mr. WARREN. That seems to be a matter of legislation for which we have no estimate, and as it is a matter of legislation, I shall have to make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to be heard just one minute on the point of order. The chairman very naturally comes to that conclusion on first blush, but I think he will change his mind if he will hear my statement. I introduced a bill——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not wish to cut the Senator off if he desires to make his argument on the point of order.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what I am doing. I introduced a bill to this same effect, and the bill was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine. The committee considered the bill, and upon investigation reached the conclusion that the Public Health Service had full authority in the matter, but that all it needed was provision for taking care of the work by the appropriation of a small amount of money. If the chairman will just give me his attention——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida is addressing himself to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WARREN. And the chairman of the committee is listening to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want the chairman of the committee to understand the process which this matter has gone through. The bill was introduced authorizing the Public Health Service to collect this data and assemble it, to be available to State, Federal, municipal, and other authorities in connection with the hospital service throughout the country. The committee to which it was referred, upon investigating the law giving power and authority to the Public Health Service, found that they already had the power and had the authority to do this. The committee said, "All you need and what you need is some kind of provision whereby the Public Health Service can detail clerks to gather this data and this information." Therefore all that was required was a simple provision appropriating the amount, and the service estimates the amount at $6,000.

When we consider that there is $1,500,000,000 invested in hospitals in this country, we can recognize that it is somewhat worth while that they should be properly constructed, and that the public are entitled to the latest scientific improvements in hospital arrangement, equipment, and construction.

This simply authorizes the Public Health Service to require one or two clerks to gather this data and assemble it here, where it will be available to every city, every community, and every institution, and to the Federal authorities, because it will have to do not only with hospitals, but insane asylums, and the Government is very largely interested in those institutions. It provides for the expenditure of only $6,000 per annum to accomplish this great result, and it is not legislation, because the needed power in that service is already given under the law. All they need is provision whereby they can pay the clerk to do the work.

Mr. WARREN. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will not delay the Senate. I only ask the privilege to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, remarks by Dr. S. S. Goldwater, superintendent of the Mount Sinai Hospital, New York City.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, without objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Outline of the remarks of Dr. S. S. Goldwater, superintendent of the Mount Sinai Hospital, of New York City, before the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, January 18, 1913, in support of Senate bill No. 4972, a bill to authorize and empower the Public Health Service to collect, maintain, and make available plans and descriptive matter relative to hospitals, asylums, dispensaries, and like institutions, and make provision therefor:

"The wide distribution of authority and responsibility for the care of the sick conceals the magnitude and importance of this social function. Calculated on the basis of the actual provision of beds for the sick in certain municipalities, the United States for its present population needs 500,000 hospital beds, representing about $1,500,000,000 of invested capital, which capital must be renewed at least every 30 years. The average annual capital outlay will therefore be $50,000,000, and the maintenance charges, calculated at $600 per bed, $300,000,000 per annum.

"The figures given do not include the vast field of the care of the insane, for whom 300,000 beds would not to-day be an excessive national provision (there are 33,861 insane patients in New York State hospitals alone); nor do they embrace sanatoria for the treatment of tuberculosis.

"The agencies engaged in this vast work include the United States Government; State, municipal, and county governments; and philanthropic corporations, which for the most part are under the supervision of governmental authority, and which in nearly 40 States are partially supported by public grants. The analysis of the results obtained under various systems and methods of administration is one of the many fields of usefulness open to the proposed bureau.

"It is inconceivable that in this country all hospital work can be placed under central direction, but progress in scientific management would be more rapid and uniform if a hospital-helping bureau were established.

"The National Government has a large direct interest in the subject and needs such a bureau for its own immediate purposes; individual agents of the various hospital branches of the Government are making the same inquiries and doing the same work over and over again. But the bureau would serve a wider need.

"Hundreds of communities are without any knowledge or experience in hospital construction or administration; their efforts to establish hospitals are laborious, clumsy, ineffectual, and costly.

"Many States are without adequate laws on the subject of hospitals. Such laws are generally being adopted, but legislative and administrative officers can only by the most laborious means acquire the knowledge needed for their guidance in drafting the laws.

"The cost of maintaining the proposed bureau would be so small (the necessary office force would be a director, with not more than two or three assistants) that the investment for the Nation would be unusually profitable from every conceivable standpoint.

"In the nature of things there can be no popular clamor for the creation of a Government utility of this kind, but the duty of the Government is none the less plain. Wherever the attention of the press has been called to the matter its support of this proposal has been unqualified and instantaneous."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I received while here in the Chamber this evening a letter from a very prominent man, a man of large affairs and large property interests in this city, which I ask to have read in reference to a provision in the bill which I shall move to strike out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be read in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 27, 1913.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I desire to invite your attention to H. R. 28775, the sundry civil bill, now before the Senate. I would like to urge that those provisions relating to a central heating and power plant, as found commencing on line 3, at page 54, be struck out. My reasons for making this request are:

1. No attention has been paid to the rights of the District of Columbia. The commissioners have not even been consulted, although the proposition included furnishing light and power for the Municipal Building.

2. The idea of using Great Falls for power purposes has just been made the subject of a report by Army Engineers. It is the consensus of opinion among business and commercial Washington that no action be taken on this central heating and power plant until after the Great Falls report has been printed, that the interested parties may have a chance to become familiar with the proposition.

3. There are many objections to the proposed site: (a) It is too small; (b) it will be bad policy to erect a municipal asphalt plant right alongside of the power plant, thus subjecting the plant to unusual danger from fire and explosion; (c) it would always be in danger should the Potomac rise and overflow its banks; (d) the use and occupation of this site is subject to restrictions.

4. This paragraph of the bill has been drawn defectively.

5. No estimate was furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury at the time the sundry civil lists were made up. The Secretary did recommend that this matter be made the subject of special legislation, and prepared the draft of a bill to be introduced in the House. Last year this matter was presented to the Appropriations Committee of the House in May and to the Senate on July 5. No action was taken by either House. It was not even then included in the list of Treasury estimates.

It seems to me that a proposition of this character should be carefully considered, as suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury, rather than tacked onto an appropriation bill.

Yours, very truly, B. H. WARNER, Jr.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, this bill and the particular feature of it which is mentioned in Mr. Warner's letter carries the sum of $1,494,104. Personally I am in favor of a power plant, and it has seemed to me an infinite waste of power for years that the upper falls of the Potomac have not been harnessed long before this; but I am much impressed with the letter of Mr. Warner. He is a man of large property interests and affairs. It seems to me, inasmuch as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has declared that this bill is being loaded clear to the gunwales, that here is an opportunity to relieve ourselves. I believe this legislation, as I read it, is hasty and at this time ill-advised. If there is, as there evidently is from the letter of Mr. Warner, a report from the board of engineers of this city on the subject to which he refers, I feel that the Senate should have it in order that they might act intelligently and in harmony with the thoughts that I have expressed and with the letter of Mr. Warner.

I move that all that portion of the bill from line 3, on page 54, and pages 55 and 56, over to and including line 3, on page 57, be stricken from the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that this is not a new matter; it is a subject that was considered at great length over a year ago and about which we have sought information through the Architect of the Capitol and through the Treasury Department. I have conversed, I might say, for almost hours with the Secretary of the Treasury concerning the great economy of a heating plant. As the Senator from New Jersey says, the adoption of his amendment would reduce the amount of the appropriation carried in the bill; it would reduce the bill by that much money, but it would continue an expense which, compared with what the expense of this proposition would be, is simply a trifle.

We had not long ago a heating plant constructed to heat this Capitol and had some of the buildings connected with it. That plant has been exceedingly satisfactory. It is for Government purposes. It has, so far as I know, the indorsement of everybody connected with it. Last year the members of the House committee informed me, when the matter was taken up and we were in council, that they would personally, as Members of the House, inspect this whole proposition. This plant is not only to provide for all of the down-town Government buildings, but it is to connect with the power plant that supplies the heat for this Capitol; so that, in case of the failure of either one, we would not be without heat.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I thoroughly appreciate the force of the Senator's thought. I know it is proposed by this means to make connection with the Capitol heating plant. I talked with Mr. Warner regarding this subject about six months ago, and I was very much impressed by what he said. As I have said, he is a man of large affairs and is identified with the District of Columbia. I still believe that a plant should at some time be constructed that would utilize the force of the waterfall on the Potomac, but I am so impressed with that which I have learned that I still believe that the pending proposition is an immature plan; and, with all deference to the Senator from Wyoming, that it is ill advised. I still adhere to my motion that that portion of the bill which I have moved to strike out be stricken out.

Mr. WARREN. The annual saving is one hundred and seventy-six thousand and some odd dollars, and I hope the clauses will not be stricken out.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. There is a saving if you can accomplish it judiciously, but that is the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WORKS. I move to amend by inserting, after line 17, on page 97, the following:

For repairs to hospital and repairs to three barracks, $14,992.

Mr. WARREN. That is all right.

Mr. WORKS. Within the last two minutes the Senator from Washington has handed me the following telegram——

Mr. WARREN. The matter is estimated for, and there is no objection to the amendment on the part of the chairman of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I also move, on line 13, page 97, to strike out "$180,000" and to insert "$190,000," so as to read:

For subsistence, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $190,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

Mr. WARREN. One moment. I should like to see where the amendment comes in.

Mr. WORKS. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that for the Kansas Central Branch $190,000 is appropriated for exactly the same purpose. There is a larger number of inmates in the Pacific Branch than in the others. There may be some reason for this smaller appropriation which does not occur to me.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, unless the Senator knows very positively the necessity for the increase and can explain the situation, I wish he would not press that amendment. We have to rely largely, of course, upon reports we get from the department, and also from those who have these matters in charge. The Senator's proposition will throw the appropriation out of balance, as we have figured it in connection with the others. I should like to know what it is for.

Mr. WORKS. It is for subsistence, including the same things specified under this head of the Central Branch. There is simply a difference of $10,000 between those two branches, and it does not seem to be justified by the facts.

Mr. WARREN. That does not necessarily carry any reason with it. Another thing: Subsistence is always a matter that is not cut short, because if you run short it comes up as a deficiency. There is no danger at all. The law provides what it shall be, if there is a shortage.

Mr. WORKS. There may be no reason in what I am saying, but I have already said that if there were any reason for this difference between the two branch homes that could be pointed out I should not complain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. OWEN. After line 7, on page 117, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 117, after line 7, it is proposed to insert:

For the purchase of the following-described real estate in the city of McAlester, county of Pittsburg, State of Oklahoma, to wit: The north 50 feet of lot No. 2 in block No. 487 in the original town site of South McAlester, the dimensions of said lot being 50 feet by 165 feet, with 50 feet front on South Third Street, in said city of McAlester, together with the two-story brick building and all other improvements thereon, for the use of the Bureau of Mines for a mine rescue station, and for such other purposes as the Bureau of Mines may from time to time desire to use the same, at and for the sum of $5,500.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, in 1910, when the Bureau of Mines was established, McAlester, which is the center of a large mining district, furnished the Government with these quarters. They cost about $10,000. There is a balance due of $5,500 on the property, and the men who furnished the Government this rescue station offered to turn it over and desire to turn it over. I have here a letter from Van H. Manning, acting Director of the Bureau of Mines, and a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Walter L. Fisher, of February 25, 1913, which has just come in.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; but that is a matter that has had consideration. It is not estimated for. The Bureau of Mines has been most liberally provided for, and the Senator should let that proposition run over until we can have a regular estimate for it. I shall have to make the point of order against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. OWEN. I ask to print in the RECORD the letters to which I have referred upon the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore Without objection, that order will be made.

The letters referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF MINES,
Washington, December 21, 1912.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SIR: In the absence of Dr. Holmes, I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 16, accompanied by inclosures from Messrs. F. B. Drew and William Busby, of McAlester, relative to the matter of purchase by the Government of the McAlester mine rescue station.

When the Bureau of Mines was organized in 1910 and inquiries were made toward securing local rescue stations and cars in mining districts, in which to train and instruct men regarding mine safety, the coal-mine operators of McAlester were the first to come forward and undertake to assist the Bureau of Mines by providing it with a building for rescue training, pending such future provision as Congress might make. This is the only case where such generous assistance was furnished. Subsequently, on receipt of a donation of a building site in Birmingham, Ala., the bureau constructed a rescue station there, and in Seattle the bureau is occupying the Philippine exposition building.

Still later the bureau has purchased rescue cars, and was authorized by a provision of the sundry civil act for 1912 to accept or purchase sites for sidings on which to store such rescue cars. There is no legislation, however, authorizing the bureau to purchase from private parties a rescue station and grounds, as in the case of this proposition from Oklahoma.

The bureau is still using as a rescue station at McAlester the building which cost the operators about $10,000. I understand that there is a floating debt on this amounting to $5,500, and on several occasions since 1911 the trustees have offered to turn the building over to the Bureau of Mines if the bureau will settle this floating indebtedness. By so doing the Government would come into possession of a property worth $10,000 at an expenditure of $5,500.

Since the Bureau of Mines must have a rescue station for the conduct of its work in McAlester, I believe it would be in the interests of the Government if an appropriation and authority can be granted for the purchase of this building and land at the above price. Such authority would probably be best inserted in the sundry civil bill. The letters from Messrs. Drew and Busby are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

VAN H. MANNING, Acting Director.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 25, 1913.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR OWEN: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of February 18, with inclosures from Mr. F. B. Drew, secretary of the Oklahoma Coal Operators' Association, and from the Acting Director of the Bureau of Mines, relative to the purchase by the Government of a mine-rescue station at McAlester, Okla.

The information contained in the letter of the Acting Director of the Bureau of Mines, December 21, 1912, regarding the floating debt of $5,500 on the mine-rescue station building and lot at McAlester, was based upon information received by the acting director at that time, while the copy of the bill drawn up by the department and transmitted to the Hon. C. D. CARTER, of the House of Representatives, on January 27 last, was based upon letters received from the former secretary of the Oklahoma Coal Operators' Association on January 31, 1911.

I understand that the amount expended for the lot and rescue-station building, with fixtures, has been not less than $10,000; that the lot—50 by 165 feet in size—is well located in the business part of the city; and that the building is a substantial brick building, which, with the lot, has a commercial value at this time equal to this amount. I understand also that this building has been occupied as a mine-rescue station by the Bureau of Mines for more than two years, and that the Government has no other building in the city of McAlester suitable for the use of the mine-rescue station.

In view of these facts and the need by the department for a suitable building for housing the mine-rescue work of the Bureau of Mines at McAlester, and in view of the recommendation contained in your letter of February 18, I am willing to approve the purchase by the department of this building for the use of the Bureau of Mines rescue work at McAlester at a price not exceeding the sum of $5,500, as may be decided upon after an investigation of all the conditions by the department.

The wording of the proposed amendment to the sundry civil bill authorizing the purchase of this building by the department should specify that the purchase be made by the Secretary of the Interior in an amount not exceeding $5,500.

Respectfully,

WALTER L. FISHER,
Secretary.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, on page 189, line 5, after the figures "$4,926,000," I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 189, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That hereafter no part of this or any other appropriation shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government who shall make or cause to be made, with a stop watch or other time-measuring device, a time study of the movements between the starting and completion of any job of any such employee; nor shall this or any other appropriation be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant; and no claim for services hereafter performed by any person violating this proviso shall be allowed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not wish to inveigh against the spirit or the requirement of that amendment, but it is clearly legislation of the most pronounced kind because it applies to this and all other appropriation bills. So I shall have to make the point of order that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, in that connection I desire to reserve action on the amendment that was offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] which provides for carrying into effect the provisions of the Senate bill passed April 2, 1912.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reservation will be made.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia reserves the amendment which he has stated. Without objection, the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will be concurred in in the Senate. The question is upon the amendment reserved.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Now, Mr. President, I desire to make the point of order that the amendment is out of order. It is a provision for an appropriation of $250,000 not presented by any committee and not estimated for by the head of any department. The same point of order was made against this provision at the last session and sustained by the present Presiding Officer. I can explain the matter more in detail unless the Chair recognizes it.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I should like to say a word on the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, there is no necessity for any estimate on this item. The appropriation asked in this amendment was embraced in a bill that has passed the Senate, and the amount was fixed by the Senate, and an estimate is impossible. On my motion it was attached as an amendment to the present bill. It is not like the case of a public building or anything of that sort. As I remember it, it provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have control of all payments, and all vouchers must be approved by him. By the way, I digress to remark that it is a little peculiar to me that the Knoxville provision, which was inserted in this bill and passed this afternoon and which was never heretofore passed by the Senate, should go through without any objection from the distinguished Senator from Georgia and that he should confine himself to this bill for the purpose of making an objection. As to the Knoxville Exposition, no bill has ever passed the Senate. I do not think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not feel called upon to respond to the suggestion of the Senator as to my reason for making a point of order in one case and not in another. I might say that I am not at all familiar with the Knoxville appropriation. I have not read it, and I do not know what it is; but I am familiar with this matter, and I wish to make this statement with reference to it: There is some sort of a charter for a company in Georgia under which there has never been an organization. There is not any organization at all to which to make this appropriation, and I am unwilling to see an appropriation made to a company in my State that has never been organized, merely on a paper charter that is so loose that I would not be willing to have——

Mr. BRADLEY. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BRADLEY. The corporation in Georgia of which the Senator speaks has nothing whatever to do with this case. The provisions of the bill making the appropriation authorize the President, whenever satisfied that corporation is organized and has made provision for the holding of the exposition and has raised and secured money or property to the amount of $50,000 for the purposes of the exposition, to issue a proclamation of the time, place, and purpose of the exposition. Besides, as stated, no voucher can be paid until approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. As to the location of grounds and buildings, they must be approved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. I do not know anything about this corporation, and I do not care anything about it; but the bill does not take effect until the negroes of the United States raise $50,000 in aid of this $250,000 appropriated by the Government. The corporation has no control of this matter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. While the bill providing for this exposition has passed the Senate, it has never passed the House.

Mr. BRADLEY. That is true.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is no law on the subject, and there is no such limitation. The mere passage by the Senate of a bill does not make it a law; it does not make it anything until the House passes it and it becomes a law. The Senate passed the bill, but the House never has passed it. It is not a law; it is not effective. The charter issued in Georgia has never been accepted, and there has been no organization under it. I am perfectly willing, although I ought not to discuss the merits of this case on a point of order——

Mr. BRADLEY. I hope the Senator will excuse me——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am simply now making the point of order that the amendment is not in order, as there is no estimate for it and as it comes from the floor without being referred to the committee.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I was under the impression that the original bill which passed the Senate had the approval of the Senator from Georgia. My memory may be at fault. If so, that would surely take the place of an estimate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator was mistaken. It did not. I did not vote for it. The senior Senator from Georgia had been examining it, but I had not up to that time. I was told that he had examined it, and as he had examined it I interposed no objection. Subsequently I examined the bill, and I think it is a very loose bill. There never has been any organization of the corporation.

Mr. ROOT. I suppose the Senator from Georgia does not doubt that if this appropriation takes effect there will be an organization?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do, very seriously; and I would want to know what sort of organization it was before it got the money.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, this has not been estimated for, it is true; but it is reported by a standing committee of the Senate and approved by the Senate, and it seems to me it is not open to objection upon that score.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The rule requires, Mr. President, that the estimate shall be made by the committee that reports this appropriation bill. The mere fact that some other committee of the Senate may have reported a bill on the subject does not bring it within the rule that from the floor a Member can add it to a general appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia, as the Chair understands it, makes three points of order against the proposed amendment—first, that it has not been estimated for; second, that it is general legislation; and third, that it has not been reported by any standing or special committee of the Senate—and the Senator from Georgia suggests that the Chair ruled against a similar amendment on a former occasion. The present occupant of the Chair does not recall that he ruled on a similar amendment during the last session, and yet that may be the case. The Chair will suggest that no estimate could possibly have been made upon an amendment of this kind, as such matters are never submitted to the heads of departments for consideration.

As to whether or not it is general legislation, the Chair repeats what he suggested a few days ago, that that is oftentimes a matter very difficult to determine. In addition to the points made by the Senator from Georgia, the rule provides that an amendment is in order if it has passed the Senate at the present session, and there are many precedents for ruling an amendment in order on that ground, the late Senators Frye and Harris being among those who held that an item that had passed the Senate at the same session of Congress was in order. In the Thirty-second Congress, William R. King, who was then acting as President pro tempore, ruled that a measure that had passed the Senate at the last session was in order, but that is not in accordance with the terms of rule 16. The amendment now before the Senate passed this body during the second session of the present Congress, which fact ought to be taken into consideration in determining the question. In addition to this, it will be recalled that two amendments of a similar nature were placed on the bill to-day, neither of which had ever been favorably considered by the Senate. In view of those facts the Chair feels that while the present amendment does not come technically within the rules, he may well avail himself of the privilege which permits him to submit questions to the Senate, and he submits this question:

Is the amendment in order on this bill?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Smith, S. C.
Bradley	Gamble	O'Gorman	Smoot
Brady	Gardner	Owen	Swanson
Bristow	Hitchcock	Page	Thomas
Burton	Jackson	Percy	Townsend
Catron	Johnson, Me.	Poindexter	Warren
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Pomerene	Wetmore
Chilton	Kern	Root	Williams
Crawford	La Follette	Sheppard	Works
Curtis	Lea	Shively
Dillingham	Lodge	Simmons
Fall	McCumber	Smith, Ga.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

The question is, Is the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] in order on the pending bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, that it is out of order I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate.

The proposed amendment refers to a bill which has passed the Senate, but which has not passed the House; and it undertakes to appropriate $250,000 to an exposition fund in pursuance of the terms of that bill. It comes from the floor of the Senate, not from the committee. It is offered from the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, shall Members disregard the rule, because perhaps they wish to vote for the appropriation, when the point of order is invoked?

The rule provides, as to amendments to appropriation bills:

No amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item of appropriation unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

The rule is perfectly clear. It limits the right to add increases of appropriation to an appropriation bill to certain specific ways. If a department has estimated for it, you can move from the floor to insert it. If there is a general law providing for it, though the committee has not reported it, you can move from the floor to insert it. But unless it is provided for by a general law or estimated for by a committee or presented from the committee in the committee's report, the rule says you can not add it from the floor of the Senate where the point of order is made on it.

If any Senator will show me anything in this rule that permits a Member of the Senate from the floor to increase on motion, over objection, a provision in an appropriation bill, except in two instances—where there is a general law covering it, or where a department has made an estimate covering it—I wish he would do so.

Mr. WARREN. I think there is one other point, though it does not apply in this case; that is, where it is reported from a standing committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (reading)—

Unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate.

This appropriation is not moved by a standing or select committee.

Mr. WARREN. I did not say it applied in this case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No. Now, are we to abandon the rule? This is going to be a record vote of the Senate. We will have the yeas and nays. Are we going to break down that rule and establish the proposition in future that wherever a Senator desires from the floor to increase an appropriation bill he shall have the right to do it?

The second provision is:

All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

So that where a standing committee moves the increase, its motion must be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and be by it considered and reported on.

So, Mr. President and Senators, if anything can be clear, this proposed amendment is out of order. Why, I have heard rulings from the Chair that would cover this a dozen times, on this bill, ruling out increases offered by Members. There are a dozen rulings of the Chair that will cover it, made to-night and to-day.

I shall not take the time of the Senate with further discussion.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I want to say a few words to the Senate about this bill.

In the first place, this bill was reported unanimously from the committee. The Senator says its provisions are loosely drawn. It is sufficient to say that was drawn by the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], and ample protection is given in every line of it for the safety of the application of the fund. The bill was introduced on the floor of the Senate, and, as I remember, there was not a single vote against it. Now we bring it up here as a bill which has passed the Senate and ask to have it placed on this bill. We have seen here this afternoon another bill passed—and I voted for it because I thought it was right—that never had been passed by the Senate, but which was tacked on to this appropriation.

I do not see why I should be made the special target of a point of order when others are not so made, and I hope the Senate will vote down this point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to one decision which I think covers this case. In the Fifty-second Congress, second session—

A question of order was raised that an amendment to an appropriation bill did not carry out the provisions of existing law, treaty stipulation, or act or resolution of the Senate passed at the present session. The Presiding Officer (Mr. Harris in the chair) decided that an act having passed the Senate during the present session embodying the provisions of the amendment, and making an appropriation necessary to carry out the same, should the act ripen into law, the amendment was in order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That refers to a bill passed during that particular session.

Mr. CURTIS. The previous session.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This was not passed during the present session.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether the bill contained in his amendment passed the Senate at this session or at the last session?

Mr. BRADLEY. I do not know exactly what the Senator means by the session, whether he means this session of Congress or this particular time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I mean this session of Congress, of course.

Mr. BRADLEY. Since we met in December?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRADLEY. No, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then it falls outside of the rule.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like very much to vote for this amendment. I voted for the bill; I am in entire sympathy with it; but when the question is put as to its being in order I can not possibly vote that it is in order, for it seems to me clearly out of order. It is not moved by standing or select committee. Even if moved by such a committee, it would have to go to the Committee on Appropriations first. It is not estimated for, and I construe the rule about estimating to mean that a general appropriation bill is to be confined to matters for which departments estimate. Whether they refuse to estimate voluntarily or whether they are unable to estimate does not seem to me to affect the point.

Therefore, Mr. President, as the amendment seems to me to be general legislation, I do not see how it can be voted in order unless we set the rule entirely aside. I say this with great regret, because I should like to vote for the amendment if I could vote on the amendment itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators who are of the opinion that the amendment is in order on the pending bill will say "aye." [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is declared to be not in order. The question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time?

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the clerks may change the section numbers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is understood.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order of the Senate the calendar under Rule VIII will now be taken up.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 8577) authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge across the St. Johns River between the town of Van Buren, Me., and the parish of St. Leonard, Province of New Brunswick, Dominion of Canada (S. Rept. 1333).

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to that request, because I want the Senate to take up the calendar in its regular order. When we reach this bill, then of course I shall be perfectly willing to have it considered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I will say to the Senator from Utah that it is a pressing matter and I should very much like to have the bill put on its passage.

Mr. SMOOT. We will reach it to-night.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. It is not on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. It goes on the calendar just as soon as it is reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be held on the table.

Mr. SMOOT. It will be on the table, and as soon as we are through with the calendar the Senator can call it up.

Mr. POMERENE. This morning a favorable report was made by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] on a local bill, House bill 4718——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The first bill on the calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 2493) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make an examination of certain claims of the State of Missouri was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that this bill and all the other bills on the first page of the calendar may go over, being Senate bill 1505, Senate bill 2151, Senate bill 256, Senate bill 3, and Senate bill 2234.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will go over under objection.

The bill (S. 5728) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Osage Nation of Indians against the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to have that bill taken up and disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been heretofore read twice at length. Is it desired that it shall be read again?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

BROTHERHOOD OF NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS.

The bill (S. 5186) to incorporate the Brotherhood of North American Indians, was announced as next in order, and it was read.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. OWEN. As far as I can recall, it is. It has been a long time since it was reported. It was reported nearly a year ago, on April 3 last.

Mr. SMOOT. I know it has been reported and on the calendar quite a while.

Mr. OWEN. I have been absent from the Senate, and therefore I have never brought it up. I do not recall any objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. There have been objections made to it a good many times when it was reached on the calendar. I wanted to ask the Senator if it is a unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. OWEN. I do not know of any objection to it in the committee. I do not recall any. It was considered there nearly a year ago. I do not recall any objection.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 15, after the word "equal" to insert "in every respect," and in line 16, after the word "people" to strike out "and inferior to none" and insert "or race," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the purposes and objects of the said corporation shall be to teach, obtain, and maintain rights, liberties, and justice for all Indians equal in every respect to that of any people or race; to preserve and perpetuate the ancient traditions, arts, and customs of North American Indians; to unify their efforts and interests; to council together; to promote and encourage industry and thrift among Indian people; to collect, secure the preservation of, and to publish the records, papers, documents, and traditions of historical value and importance to North American Indians; to mark, by appropriate monuments, places historic and sacred to the American Indian; to impress upon present and future generations of American Indians the importance of united action for the common good; to promote a feeling of friendship, brotherhood, and good citizenship among its members; and to provide for the aged and infirm of the Indian race.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 5, line 21, after the word "may," to insert "repeal or"; in line 22, after the word "alter," to strike out "repeal" and insert "amend," and in the same line, after the word "incorporation," to strike out "but no contract or individual right made or acquired shall thereby be divested or impaired," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That Congress may repeal or, from time to time, alter, amend, or modify this act of incorporation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, to strike out section 9, as follows:

SEC. 9. That this act shall take effect immediately on its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to incorporate in the District of Columbia the Brotherhood of North American Indians."

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 461) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Ponca Tribe of Indians against the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 5917) relating to procedure in United States courts was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. At the request of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5863) for the retirement of employees in the civil service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 4654) to regulate contracts for the future delivery of cotton was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 6109) for the protection and increase of State game resources was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 5069) to promote the efficiency of the enlisted personnel of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 93) to establish a botanical laboratory at Denver, Colo., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2344) to pay the balance due the loyal Creek Indians on the award made them by the Senate on February 16, 1903, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2845) to acquire certain land in Washington Heights for a public park to be known as McClellan Park was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The next business on the calendar was the motion submitted by Mr. POINDEXTER that the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of S. 3297 to abolish the Commerce Court, etc., and that said bill be placed upon the calendar, under Rule VIII, for consideration by the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to ask the Senator from Washington if there is any reason why that motion should not go under Rule IX?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I know of none. I realize that there is no time for the consideration of it in the two Houses of Congress before adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be placed under Rule IX.

The bill (S. 7030) to provide for a permanent supply of coal for the use of the United States Navy and other governmental purposes, to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 6896) to reopen and extend certain letters patent granted to Richard B. Painton, and to insert certain claims in said letters patent dated May 9, 1899, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 2518) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 6172) to regulate the method of directing the work of Government employees was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROOT. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 6812) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of land in severalty," etc., approved February 28, 1891, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Senate resolution No. 362, for an investigation into the expenditures of the Forest Service and the appointment of a committee for that purpose, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over.

The bill (S. 223) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (H. R. 24153) to amend and reenact section 5241 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 3345) to amend the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Senate resolution 375, discharging the Committee on the Judiciary from further consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 4) instructing the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT At the request of the Senator from Arkansas, I ask that that may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over.

The bill (H. R. 16461) to regulate judicial procedure of the courts of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. CATRON. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4994) to authorize the inclosure of certain lands in the State of Nevada containing dangerous quagmires was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Is there any objection to that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. SMOOT. There is objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

The bill (S. 3130) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to permit the Conrad-Stanford Co. to use certain lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 226) of three members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURTON. Let that go over.

Mr. JONES. That has already passed.

Mr. STONE. I should like to have that resolution considered.

Mr. BURTON. I ask that it go over.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator ask to have the resolution go over?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. STONE. I hardly think Senators desire that. I have conferred with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. BURTON. I understand that the session this evening is merely for the purpose of considering unobjected bills.

Mr. STONE. I understand.

Mr. BURTON. I have stated that I object to the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution goes over.

The bill (H. R. 27475) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that there is a disposition to object to the consideration of these pension bills this evening, and therefore I wish to give notice at this time that immediately upon the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning I shall move to take up this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4241) to encourage rifle practice and promote a patriotic spirit among the citizens and youth of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 8188) to amend section 113 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1912, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 110) to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in Todd and Bennett Counties, in Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 19236) to regulate the practice of osteopathy in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let it go over.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the Senator will not object to that bill. It was very carefully considered by the committee twice, full and complete hearings were had, and the bill has been reported with a view of protecting the people in this practice and to get men and women who are qualified to follow the practice in the District of Columbia.

A very large number of States have a similar law. This proposes to regulate the practice. Only those who have a certificate may practice now, but hereafter in order to practice they must have a certificate from a standard school and pass an examination. This is rather to insure that those who practice in this District are properly qualified, and I hope there will be no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the objection to the consideration of the bill withdrawn?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I do not withdraw it, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

MARY MACARTHUR.

The bill (H. R. 27806) granting a pension to Mary MacArthur was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that bill passed over a few minutes without prejudice to be recurred to again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. CURTIS. That bill passed to-day as an amendment to another measure.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I understand it was made an amendment to an omnibus pension bill. There is, however, Mr. President, a possibility that that bill which is a Senate bill may fail. This is a House bill, carrying exactly the same amount which the Senate provided in the omnibus pension bill.

Mr. ROOT. Let it be passed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should ask to have it passed, except for the fact that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], on behalf of the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], is commissioned to object to the passage of every pension bill to-night. I do not think that his objection would apply to this bill, and shall ask to have it passed over temporarily, in order that I may communicate with the Senator from Florida and see if he intended his objection to be so broad.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask to recur to Calendar No. 1044, being the bill (H. R. 27806) granting a pension to Mary MacArthur.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think I ought to state that since we passed over that bill the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and myself have conferred, over the telephone, with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], and he does not wish to interpose an objection to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to understand just what the agreement between the Senators is. There are several other House bills here exactly in the same attitude. They have passed the House and have been reported by the Senate committee and are also pension bills. Did the waiver of the Senator from Florida apply to all those or simply to this bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I asked the Senator from Florida whether his objection applied to this bill. I did not inquire further than that, I will say to the Senator. I have asked that this bill be taken up simply because the Senate disposed of it this afternoon as an amendment upon another bill, which I apprehend may not pass in the House, as it was a Senate bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There are several other bills in the same attitude. Did the Senator from Florida put his waiver upon the ground that it had passed the House and that the Senate committee had made an identical report?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. He put his waiver upon the ground that the Senate had dealt with the bill this afternoon, and he had no objection to it. However, if it is going to delay matters——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall not object; but I think he ought to have made the rule apply to all bills in the same identical condition.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment in line 8, before the words "per month," to strike out "$100" and insert "$75," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary MacArthur, widow of Arthur MacArthur, late lieutenant general United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $75 per month.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Inasmuch as the Senate this afternoon voted to make the pension $100 per month, I trust that that proposed amendment will be voted down.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, $75 looks like a pretty good special pension.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This is the widow of Gen. MacArthur, and I do not believe that there is a precedent for pensioning the widow of an officer of his rank at less than $100 per month.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSEBUD INDIAN RESERVATION, S. DAK.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw the objection which I made to Senate bill 7110.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 110) to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in Todd and Bennett Counties, in Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect.

Mr. THOMAS. I object to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

JOHN R. FUGILL.

The bill (H. R. 3967) granting an increase of pension to John R. Fugill, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] asked me if he were not in the Chamber when any of the pension bills upon the calendar came up to object for him to the consideration of any such bills this evening. For that reason I object.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object also, and I am in the Chamber.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

The bill (S. 7722) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health Service, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

Mr. OWEN subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to withdraw my objection to Senate bill 7722. When it was reached on the calendar I did not clearly understand it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if that bill is to be considered to-night I want to offer certain amendments to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection at all to the consideration and passage of the bill, providing the amendments which I wish to propose are agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Then let it go over.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator from Utah and I can agree on the amendments which he desires to offer to the bill, if the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] will withdraw the objection.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw my objection. I thought the consideration of the bill was going to consume time; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 7722) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health Service, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Utah desires to offer certain amendments to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 1, line 7, before the word "rooms" where it occurs the second time, it is proposed to strike out "seven" and insert "six"; in line 8, before the word "rooms" where it occurs the first time, to strike out "six" and insert "five"; and, in line 8, after the word "rooms" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "passed assistant surgeon, four rooms; assistant surgeon, three rooms," so as to make the section read:

That hereafter when officers of the Public Health Service on the active list are not provided quarters, they shall receive in lieu of same commutation therefor at the rate of $12 per room per month, as follows: Surgeon General, eight rooms; assistant surgeon general, six rooms; senior surgeon, five rooms; surgeon, five rooms; and shall receive commutation for necessary fuel and lights for the same at rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That officers while serving beyond the continential limits of the United States or on sea duty shall receive an additional 10 per cent of their salaries and increase while on such duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I also offer an amendment to section 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, page 2, lines 5 and 6, it is proposed to strike out the words "seven thousand two hundred" and to insert "five thousand," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the allowance for baggage and personal effects to an officer in changing stations shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed in any case 5,000 pounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of section 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1 it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That a vacancy in the grade of Surgeon General shall be filled by appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among officers in the grade of senior surgeon or surgeon, and the term of office of the Surgeon General shall be for a period of four years, at the expiration of which term he shall, unless reappointed, be carried as an extra officer in the grade of senior surgeon.

Mr. OWEN. I hope the Senator will not insist on that amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. If it is objected to I shall withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida withdraws the amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 16314) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4669) for the relief of S. W. Fenton was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 7202) fixing the date of reenlistment of Gustav Hertfelder, first-class fireman, United States Navy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that that bill go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes ever.

LEGISLATIVE DRAFTING BUREAU.

The bill (S. 8337) to create a legislative drafting bureau and to establish a legislative reference division of the Library of Congress was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

Mr. ROOT subsequently said: Mr. President, my attention was diverted by a question that was being put to me when Senate bill 8337 was reached on the calendar. Was there objection to the consideration of that bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] objected.

Mr. ROOT. I hope the Senator will not press his objection. This is a very simple bill, but a bill of considerable importance.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will object if the Senator from Mississippi does not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

STATUE OF JOHN MARSHALL.

The bill (S. 7657) for the erection of a statue of John Marshall was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

COPYRIGHT LAWS.

The bill (H. R. 23568) to amend section 55 of an act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright, approved March 4, 1909, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 6691) to indemnify the State of Massachusetts for expenses incurred by it in defense of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 7845) relating to the adjudication of homestead entries in certain cases was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 5179) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare designs and estimates for and report cost of a national archives building in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

WATER SUPPLY, EVERETT, WASH.

The bill (S. 2622) to authorize the city of Everett, Wash., to purchase certain lands for the securing and protection of a source of water supply for said city was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if he has any hope of this bill being passed at this session, and, if not, whether it is worth while to consider it at this time?

Mr. JONES. I do have hope, because we have enacted similar laws, which have been very carefully gone into, and this follows them exactly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then the Senator thinks he will get it up in the House?

Mr. JONES. I think so. I hope so, anyhow. This city is very anxious to have this water supply.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It did not seem to me to be worth while to take up time with matters which can not be enacted into law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUE OF MAJ. GEN. GEORGE GORDON MEADE.

The bill (S. 6062) for the preparation of a plan for the erection of a foundation and pedestal on ground belonging to the United States Government, in the city of Washington, upon which to place a memorial or statue, to be furnished by the State of Pennsylvania, of Maj. Gen. George Gordon Meade, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Library with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "the attorney general of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, one member of the Senate and one member of the House of Representatives of the State of Pennsylvania, the commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania," and on page 2, line 4, to strike out "to select a site in the city of Washington and secure plans and designs for a memorial or statue of Maj. Gen. George Gordon Meade, late commander of the Army of the Potomac; the foundation and pedestal for said memorial or statue to be furnished by the United States Government at a cost not in excess of the sum of $10,000; the said memorial or statue to be furnished by the State of Pennsylvania at an approximate cost of $20,000; the said memorial or statue to be approved by the National Association of Fine Arts," and insert "with power to select a site on property of the United States in the city of Washington, and secure plans and designs for and erect on the site selected a memorial or statue of Maj. Gen. George Gordon Meade, late commander of the Army of the Potomac; the foundation and pedestal for said memorial or statue to be furnished by the United States Government at a cost not in excess of the sum of $10,000, which sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the said memorial or statue to be furnished by the State of Pennsylvania at an approximate cost of $20,000: Provided, The plans, designs, and location for said memorial or statue shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of War, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House, the governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and the general chairman of the committee on Meade statue of the Philadelphia Brigade Association be, and they are hereby, created a commission with power to select a site on property of the United States in the city of Washington, and secure plans and designs for and erect on the site selected a memorial or statue of Maj. Gen. George Gordon Meade, late commander of the Army of the Potomac; the foundation and pedestal for said memorial or statue to be furnished by the United States Government at a cost not in excess of the sum of $10,000, which sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the said memorial or statue to be furnished by the State of Pennsylvania at an approximate cost of $20,000: Provided, The plans, designs, and location for said memorial or statue shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the preparation of a plan and the erection of a foundation and pedestal on ground belonging to the United States Government, in the city of Washington, upon which to place a memorial or statue, to be furnished by the State of Pennsylvania, of Maj. Gen. George Gordon Meade."

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 6083) to amend an act entitled "An act for the widening of Benning Road, and for other purposes," approved May 16, 1908, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 6028) for the relief of the heirs of the late Samuel H. Donaldson was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

SPECIAL EXCISE CORPORATION TAX.

The bill (H. R. 27323) to provide for refund or abatement under certain conditions of penalty taxes imposed by section 38 of the act of August 5, 1909, known as the special excise corporation tax, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that any corporation, joint-stock company, association, or any insurance company subject to the special excise tax provided by section 38 of the act of August 5, 1909, known as the special excise corporation-tax law, which has been or may be compelled to pay or become liable for any additional tax within the provisions of subsection 5 of section 38, which additional tax has been or may hereafter be imposed for a neglect to file a return as provided in the corporation-tax law on or before the 1st of March of any year, may, within one year after the passage of this act, or within one year after the date of notice of assessment where such notice is given after the passage of this act, make application to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for a refund of such additional tax, and directs the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the advice and consent of the Solicitor of Internal Revenue, to remit, abate, or pay back all such additional taxes in excess of $100 for any single year whenever in any case it appears to his satisfaction that the additional tax was assessed or imposed solely because of a neglect to make a return at the time or times specified in the act, and without any intention or design on the part of any officer of such corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company to hinder or delay the United States in the collection of the tax originally assessed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 7878) for the relief of Severin and Bertha L. Evenson, dependent parents of Sigurd Evenson, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that that bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 8404) for the relief of Jennie G. Lyles was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 8438) granting an increase of pension to Annie G. Hawkins, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let it go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

TITLES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 23939) to legalize titles in the District of Columbia to certain citizens was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes Catherine Maroney, a citizen of the United States and a resident of the city of Leadville, in the State of Colorado, to acquire, hold, and dispose of any and all real estate lying in the District of Columbia, as heir at law of Mary Shugrue, a citizen of the United States and late of the District of Columbia, notwithstanding the alienage of the common ancestor of said Mary Shugrue and Edward D. Brown, son of Catherine Maroney by her first husband, through whom she traces her right to acquire such real estate, and that all forfeitures incurred by reason of any act of Congress or law in force in the District of Columbia in respect of such real estate are hereby remitted; and the United States quitclaims and releases in favor of Catherine Maroney, her heirs and assigns, any and all title which the United States have in or to any real estate in the city of Washington and District of Columbia of which Mary Shugrue died seized and possessed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 8516) to amend sections 801, 808, and 1199 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

FIRE ESCAPES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 8306) to amend an act entitled "An act to require the erection of fire escapes in certain buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 19, 1906, as amended by the act approved March 2, 1907, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that bill go over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is a Senate bill. Certainly we can not pass such bills at this session.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a very important bill. The House might pass it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will let it be considered, then. My objection was upon the idea that it is a Senate bill and that we are just wasting time staying here and considering Senate bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the Senator will let that particular bill be passed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Go ahead.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment on page 2, line 14, after the word "gongs," to insert "but fireproof buildings used for office purposes above the second floor or for mercantile or manufacturing purposes shall be provided with safe and sufficient means of exit of such dimensions, character, and number as the commissioners may determine," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 5 and 13 of an act entitled "An act to require the erection of fire escapes in certain buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 19, 1906, as amended by the act approved March 2, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

Amend section 5 so as to read:

"SEC. 5. That each elevator shaft and stairway extending to the basement of the buildings heretofore mentioned shall terminate in a fireproof compartment or inclosure, separating the elevator shaft and stairs from other parts of the basement, and no opening shall be made or maintained in such compartment or inclosure unless the same be provided with fireproof doors.

"That a building used for office purposes above the second floor or for warehouse, storage, mercantile, or manufacturing purposes, and which is a fireproof building under the building regulations, shall be exempted from the requirements of this act as to fire escapes, guide signs, and alarm gongs, but fireproof buildings used for office purposes above the second floor or for mercantile or manufacturing purposes shall be provided with safe and sufficient means of exit of such dimensions, character, and number as the commissioners may determine: Provided, That where a wall of such building is within 30 feet of and faces a nonfireproof building each opening of such wall shall be protected with wire glass in fireproof sash and frames: And provided further, That the last-mentioned proviso shall not apply to buildings heretofore erected."

Amend section 13 so as to read:

"SEC. 13. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 21714) to amend subchapter 2 of chapter 19 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 7891) to provide for annual assessments of real estate in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over, and the next one, S. 8227.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to state to the Senators that I am objecting to all these Senate bills solely because I think it is useless to waste time with them; but in any case where a Senator has a special reason for wishing a bill disposed of, I will withdraw the objection.

PUNISHMENT FOR EMBEZZLEMENT.

The bill (H. R. 21709) to amend subchapter 2 of chapter 19 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the Code of Law for the District of Columbia by adding to subchapter 2 of chapter 19 the following section:

SEC. 851a. Whoever shall be guilty of any offense defined in sections 834, 835, 836, 837, and 838 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia shall, where the thing, evidence of debt, property, proceeds, or profits be of the value of not more than $35, be punished by imprisonment for not more than one year or a fine of not more than $500, or both.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WESTERN AVENUE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 16319) to extend and widen Western Avenue NW., in the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Western Avenue NW. from its present terminus at Beech Street northeastward along the northwestern boundary line of the District of Columbia, with a uniform width of 120 feet, to Rock Creek Park, but the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in such proceedings as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned for such extension, plus the costs and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits; and it proposes to appropriate, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings and for the payment of the amounts awarded by the jury as damages, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to ask if this bill carries an appropriation; and if so, how much?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is only a trifle—to be repaid from the assessment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall not object to it, then.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 234) amending section 2 of an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War," approved April 19, 1908, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that that bill and all the other bills on page 13 of the calendar may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to have Senate bill 8002 considered. It is a very brief bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All the other bills on that page, at the request of the Senator from Georgia, will go over.

Mr. JONES. I desire to say to the Senator from Georgia, with reference to Senate bill 7889, that some of the Senators who are interested in that bill think they have the assurance of the committee in the House that they can pass it at this session.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Which bill is that?

Mr. JONES. The bill for widening Rhode Island Avenue.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Very well.

BYRON W. CANFIELD.

The bill (S. 8002) for the relief of Byron W. Canfield was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws Byron W. Canfield, late captain Company E, One hundred and fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 30th day of January, 1863, but no pension, bounty, pay, or other pecuniary emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is not the bill to which I waived my objection. It was Senate bill 7889.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The senior Senator from Ohio asked the Senator from Georgia whether he would waive his objection to Senate bill 8002.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would rather have it go over to-night. The Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] is not here. He has been looking into these matters.

Mr. BURTON. It is not a pension bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is not? Then I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BURTON. It is an act of belated justice. An order was made revoking the dismissal in 1868.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Order of Business No. 1097, for the relief of Byron W. Canfield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One moment, Mr. President. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether that is a pension bill, or what is it?

Mr. BURTON. It is not a pension bill, although the person for whose benefit the bill is introduced would be eligible for a pension; not, however, in the past. The man was taken prisoner during the Civil War, and was dismissed in the year 1868 while he was in prison by order of Gen. Grant. He was reinstated, but the department has held the order to be ineffectual.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not ask the Senator with a view of getting the details of the bill, but there are a number of pension bills here, several of which have been passed by the House, and general notice has been given that none of them would be permitted to go through by unanimous consent to-night.

Mr. BURTON. This is to correct the military record of the person named.

Mr. CATRON. It is not a pension bill at all. It is to correct a military record.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It ought to apply to all bills of this character. I have no objection to the bill, but it seems to me that we are acting in a manner that is discriminating.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN E. JOHNSON.

The bill (S. 7492) for the relief of John E. Johnson was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RHODE ISLAND AVENUE.

The bill (S. 7889) to authorize the widening and opening of Rhode Island Avenue from Fourth Street east to the District line was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment in section 1, page 2, line 9, after the word "benefits," to strike out "not less than one-half thereof shall be assessed against the Washington Railway and Electric Company" and insert "such proportional amount thereof as the jury herein provided shall determine shall be assessed by said jury as benefits against the City and Suburban Railway Company of Washington," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within six months after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the widening and opening of Rhode Island Avenue to it full width of 130 feet, as laid down on the permanent system of highways plan for the District of Columbia, from Fourth Street east northeasterly to the District line: Provided, however, That the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceeding as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned for said widening and opening, plus the costs and expenses of the proceeding hereunder, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits: Provided further, That of the amount to be assessed as benefits such proportional amount thereof as the jury herein provided shall determine shall be assessed by said jury as benefits against the City & Suburban Railway Co. of Washington, to be collected as special assessments are collected.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceeding taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOURS OF LABOR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 7723) to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia in any mill, factory, manufacturing or mechanical establishment, or workshop, laundry, bakery, printing, clothing, dressmaking, or millinery establishment, mercantile establishment, store, hotel, restaurant, office, or where any goods are sold or distributed, or by any express or transportation company, or in the transmission or distribution of telegraph or telephone messages or merchandise, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is objected to and goes over.

The bill (S. 7051) for the relief of I. H. Aiken was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What became of Senate bill 7723?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was objected to and went over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the objection will be withdrawn. This is a bill to regulate the hours of employment of females in the District of Columbia. It is possible that it might get through both Houses before adjournment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is a very excellent opportunity to have it passed by both Houses. If it could be passed here to-night, there is every reasonable expectation that it would pass the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have known bills originating in one House to be passed there within three days before final adjournment and still they would get through. This is a bill of great public utility. It is a humanitarian bill.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Is there any opposition to it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not know from whom the objection came.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I hope there is no objection to it. It is a very worthy measure.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will inquire who made the objection?

Mr. McCUMBER. I made the objection, and I make it again.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I just wanted to know, that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask leave to return to the bill (S. 7723) to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia in any mill, factory, manufacturing or mechanical establishment, or workshop, laundry, bakery, printing, clothing, dressmaking, or millinery establishment, mercantile establishment, store, hotel, restaurant, office, or where any goods are sold or distributed, or by any express or transportation company, or in the transmission or distribution of telegraph or telephone messages or merchandise. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] made his objection under a misapprehension as to the character of the bill, and he has notified me that he withdraws it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 2, after the enacting clause, to strike out "That no female shall be employed or permitted to work in any mill, factory, manufacturing or mechanical establishment or workshop, including among others any laundry, bakery, printing, clothing, dressmaking, or millinery establishment, store, hotel, restaurant, office, or where any goods are sold or distributed, or by any express or transportation company, or in the transmission or distribution of telegraph or telephone messages or merchandise," and insert "That no female shall be employed in any manufacturing, mechanical, or mercantile establishment, laundry, hotel, or restaurant, or telegraph or telephone establishment or office, or by any express or transportation company in the District of Columbia," so as to make the section read:

That no female shall be employed in any manufacturing, mechanical, or mercantile establishment, laundry, hotel, or restaurant, or telegraph or telephone establishment or office, or by any express or transportation company in the District of Columbia more than eight hours in any one day or more than six days or more than 48 hours in any one week.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 16, to strike out:

SEC. 3. That where a female is employed in the same day or week by more than one concern or employer in any establishment or occupation named in section 1 of this act, the total time of employment must not exceed that allowed per day or week in a single establishment or occupation. It shall be the duty of the employer to make diligent inquiry as to such previous or other employment of such female employee elsewhere, and as to the hours of such employment. Any person who shall require or permit a female to work between the hours of 6 o'clock in the evening or 7 o'clock in the morning in violation of the provisions of this section shall be liable for a violation thereof, and the employment of such female employee in excess of the total time of employment permitted by law shall be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to be with knowledge of such violation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 8, to change the number of the section from "4" to "3."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 18, to change the number of the section from "5" to "4."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 4, line 4, after the word "section," to strike out "The presence of any such female on the premises at any other hours than those stated in the printed notice shall constitute prima facie evidence of a violation of this section," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That every employer shall post and keep posted in a conspicuous place in every room in any establishment or occupation named in section 1 of this act in which any females are employed a printed notice stating the number of hours such females are required or permitted to work on each day of the week, the hours of beginning and stopping such work, and the hours of beginning and ending the recess allowed for meals. The printed form of such notice shall be furnished by the inspectors authorized by this act. The employment of any such female for a longer time in any day than that stated in the printed notice shall be deemed a violation of the provisions of this section. Where the nature of the business makes it impracticable to fix the recess allowed for meals at the same time for all females employed, the inspectors authorized to enforce this act may issue a permit dispensing with the posting of the hours when the recess allowed for meals begins and ends, and requiring only the posting of the total number of hours which females are required or permitted to work on each day of the week and the hours of beginning and stopping such work. Such permit shall be kept by such employer upon such premises and exhibited to all inspectors authorized to enforce this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 4, line 19, to change the number of the section from "6" to "5"; and, in line 21, after the word "stating," to insert "the wages paid," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That every employer shall keep a time book or record for every female employed in any establishment or occupation named in section 1 of this act, stating the wages paid, the number of hours worked by her on each day of the week, the hours of beginning and stopping such work, and the hours of beginning and ending the recess allowed for meals. Such time book or record shall be open at all reasonable hours to the inspection of the officials authorized to enforce this act. Any employer who fails to keep such record as required by this section, or makes any false statement therein, or refuses to exhibit such time book or record or makes any false statement to an official authorized to enforce this act in reply to any question put in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be liable for a violation thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 5, line 8, to change the number of the section from "7" to "6," and in line 9, after the word "inspectors," to insert "two of whom shall be women," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to appoint three inspectors, two of whom shall be women, to carry out the purposes of this act, at a compensation not exceeding $1,200 each per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 12, to change the number of the section from "8" to "7."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 5, line 18, to change the number of the section from "9" to "8," and in line 22, after the word "therein," to insert "and also the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to provide that all persons employing female help in stores, shops, or manufactories in the District of Columbia shall provide seats for the same when not actively employed,' approved March 2, 1895. They shall make a daily report to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and also," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That the inspectors authorized by this act shall visit and inspect the establishments and places of employment named in section 1 as often as practicable, during reasonable hours, and shall cause the provisions of this act to be enforced therein and also the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide that all persons employing female help in stores, shops, or manufactories in the District of Columbia shall provide seats for the same when not actively employed," approved March 2, 1895. They shall make a daily report to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and also report any cases of illegal employment contrary to the provisions of this act to the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 6, to change the number of the section from "10" to "9."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia."

THOMAS B. M'CLINTIC.

The bill (S. 7480) for the relief of the legal representative of Thomas B. McClintic, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

W. A. KELLY.

The bill (H. R. 25264) for the relief of W. A. Kelly was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is a House bill, and a very worthy case. There is a Member of the House very much interested in it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn.

The bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $50 to W. A. Kelly, postmaster at West Frankfort, Ill., to reimburse him for postal savings stamps stolen while in the custody of the post office at West Frankfort, Ill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 21315) for the relief of Robert Ross was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to explain why I object to it. There has been a general direction left here to object to all pension bills, and it seems to me it ought to be carried clear through.

Mr. BRISTOW. This is a House bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It ought not to be respected at all, one way or the other.

Mr. BRISTOW. This is not a pension bill. It is to correct a military record.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know; but that means the pension, of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill will be stated.

CHARLES DUDLEY DALY.

The bill (S. 7747) for the relief of Charles Dudley Daly was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint Charles Dudley Daly to the grade of first lieutenant of Field Artillery, United States Army, to take rank on the list of first lieutenants of Field Artillery next after the name of Charles P. Hollingsworth, and that no back pay or allowances shall accrue as a result of the passage of this act, and there shall be no increase in the total number of officers now authorized by law by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARION B. PATTERSON.

The bill (S. 3201) for the relief of Marion B. Patterson was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. GAMBLE. I hope the Senator from Kansas will withdraw his objection. It is a very meritorious bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. I can not withdraw it. The bill would lead to a very long discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. GAMBLE. The junior Senator from Colorado withdraws his objection to Order of Business 1033, Senate bill 110.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We have already passed upon it. I think the objection had better stand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

RALPH E. HESS.

The bill (H. R. 12131) for the reimbursement of Ralph E. Hess for two horses lost while hired by the United States Geological Survey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Ralph E. Hess, of Visalia, Cal., the sum of $150 in compensation for two horses lost while hired by the United States Geological Survey.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BARKLEY S. DENISON.

The bill (H. R. 11627) to correct the military record of Barkley S. Denison was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION.

The bill (H. R. 21532) to incorporate the Rockefeller Foundation was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

ROSEBUD INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. GAMBLE. The junior Senator from Georgia withdraws his objection to Order of Business 1033, Senate bill 110, and I would be very glad to have it disposed of.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is a long bill, and a Senate bill. Why should we waste time on it?

Mr. GAMBLE. I should like to have it disposed of. It is in the usual form.

Mr. BRISTOW. We have been kept here a long time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It can be read very rapidly.

Mr. GAMBLE. It can be read rapidly because it is in the usual form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The most of the bill has been read.

Mr. GAMBLE. I think the bill has been largely read.

The bill (S. 110) to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in Todd and Bennett Counties, in the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 1, page 2, line 15, after the word "Provided," to strike out "That any Indians to whom allotments have been made on the tract to be ceded may, in case they elect to do so before said lands are offered for sale, relinquish same and select allotments in lieu thereof on the diminished reservation: And provided further," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, as hereinafter provided, to sell and dispose of all that portion of the Rosebud Indian Reservation in the State of South Dakota lying and being within the counties of Todd and Bennett, described as follows, to wit: Commencing at a point on the boundary line between the States of South Dakota and Nebraska where the third guide meridian west intersects the same; thence north on said guide meridian to a point where the same intersects the township line between townships 39 and 40; thence west on said township line to a point where the same intersects the boundary line between the Rosebud and Pine Ridge Indian Reservations; thence south on said boundary line between said reservations to a point where the same intersects the State line between the States of South Dakota and Nebraska; thence east along said State line to the place of beginning, except such portions thereof as have been or may be hereafter allotted to Indians or otherwise reserved and except lands classified as timber lands: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may reserve such lands as he may deem necessary for agency, school, and religious purposes, to remain reserved as long as needed and as long as agency, school, or religious institutions are maintained thereon for the benefit of said Indians: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee simple to the duly authorized missionary board, or other authority, of any religious organization heretofore engaged in mission or school work on said reservation for such lands thereon (not included in any town site hereinafter provided for) as have heretofore been set apart to such organization for mission or school purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 4, line 11, after the word "prescribe," to strike out "and he is hereby authorized to set apart and reserve for school, park, and other public purposes not more than 10 acres in any town site, and patents shall be issued by the Secretary of the Interior for the lands so set apart and reserved for school, park, and other public purposes to the municipality legally charged with the care and custody of lands donated for such purposes, upon receiving satisfactory evidence that said towns have been duly incorporated"; in line 22, after the word "direct," to strike out ", and he shall cause not more than 20 per cent of the net proceeds arising from such sales to be set apart and expended under his direction in the construction of schoolhouses or other public buildings or in improvements within the town sites in which such lots are located"; and on page 5, line 3, after the word "aforesaid," to strike out "less the amount set aside to aid in the construction of schoolhouses or other public buildings or improvements," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That before any of the land is disposed of, as hereinafter provided, and before the State of South Dakota shall be permitted to select or locate any lands to which it may be entitled by reason of the loss of section 16 or 36, or any portion thereof, by reason of allotments thereof to any Indian or Indians, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to reserve from said lands such tracts for town-site purposes as in his opinion may be required for the future public interests, and he may cause same to be surveyed into lots and blocks and disposed of under such regulations as he may prescribe. The purchase price of all town lots sold in town sites, as hereinafter provided, shall be paid at such time and in such installments as the Secretary of the Interior may direct. The net proceeds derived from the sale of such lots and lands within the town sites as aforesaid shall be credited to the Indians, as hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 8, line 11, after the word "Indians," to strike out "shall be at all times subject to appropriation by Congress for their education, support, and civilization" and insert "including the interest thereon, may be expended for their benefit or distributed per capita, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That from the proceeds arising from the sale and disposition of the lands aforesaid, exclusive of the customary fees and commissions, there shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the said reservation, the sums to which the said tribe may be entitled, which shall draw interest at 3 per cent per annum; that the moneys derived from the sale of said lands and deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians, including the interest thereon, may be expended for their benefit or distributed per capita, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the sale and disposition of the surplus and unallotted lands in Todd County, in the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect."

S. W. FENTON.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it is in order, I ask the attention of the Senator from Kansas. If it is in order, I want to withdraw the objection I made to the bill (S. 4669) for the relief of S. W. Fenton.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to explain why I withdraw it. I made the objection because I thought it was exceedingly unfair to have a general direction left such as that was and then to have bills that would terminate in the same object passed. But upon second thought it is not my business to be correcting it, and I withdraw the objection.

Mr. BRISTOW. Thank you.

I ask to return to Senate bill 4669, for the relief of S. W. Fenton.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

The amendments of the Committee on Claims were, in line 4, after the name "Fenton," to insert "R. L. Fenton and Richard Wallace," and, in line 7, after the word "dollars," to insert "in such amount to each respectively as the Postmaster General shall determine," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to S. W. Fenton, R. L. Fenton, and Richard Wallace, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, in such amount to each respectively as the Postmaster General shall determine, and said sum of $1,000 is hereby appropriated as reward for their services in capturing a robber who held up a train of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad Co. near Okesa, Okla., on October 4, 1911, and who robbed the United States mail thereon, in violation of the provisions of section 197, Penal Code, act of March 4, 1909.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of S. W. Fenton, R. L. Fenton, and Richard Wallace."

ROBERT ROSS.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to return to the bill (H. R. 21315) for the relief of Robert Ross. It is a very short bill, and the objection has been withdrawn.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

JOHN C. SULLIVAN.

The bill (H. R. 18294) for the relief of John C. Sullivan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of War to reopen and reaudit the account of John C. Sullivan, of Oswego, N. Y., the contractor for the heating apparatus at Fort Ontario, N. Y., and if it shall appear that an unintentional mistake has been made on the part of said Sullivan or on the part of the officers of the War Department, that the amount of the claim found to be justly and equitably due said Sullivan, not exceeding $1,108.40, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to pay said claim, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 27874) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. SMOOT. The next two bills are pension bills, and they will go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will be passed over.

MISSISSIPPI BRIDGE, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

The bill (S. 8377) to authorize the Northern Pacific Railway Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River in Minneapolis, Hennepin County, Minn., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT ROSS.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to state that the Senator from Georgia has withdrawn his objection to the bill for the relief of Robert Ross.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill (H. R. 21315) for the relief of Robert Ross was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 9, after "1862," to strike out "and that a certificate of honorable discharge from the United States Army be issued to him," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Robert Ross, now a resident of Ryan, Ky., shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company B, Sixty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, on the 28th day of December, 1862: Provided, That no pension, emoluments, or allowances of any description shall accrue by reason of this act prior to date of approval thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Mr. OWEN. The Senate passed a short time ago the bill (S. 7722) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health Service, and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] offered an amendment to which I objected at the time. I wish to withdraw the objection with a like change. I should like to have it read.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill passed with certain amendments, and when the bill passed the Senator from Florida had an amendment, which he offered.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Florida had an amendment, which he offered, and I objected to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will object to the amendment, so there is no need of reconsidering it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. What was the request of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. OWEN. That we again return to the consideration of the bill (S. 7722) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health Service.

Mr. SMOOT. That bill has been passed with certain amendments.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; it passed; and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] had an amendment, which he offered to the bill and to which I objected.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall object to the amendment, so there is no need of reconsidering the vote by which the bill was passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, BATON ROUGE, LA.

The bill (H. R. 25762) for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Baton Rouge, La., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 13) to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the consular districts of the United States in China was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 279) providing for the return of certain duties incorrectly collected on cutch was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 276) to create a tariff board was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 7319) to authorize the sale and issuance of patent for certain land to H. W. O'Melveny was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

HOMESTEADERS ON COEUR D'ALENE RESERVATION.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) providing for extending provisions of the act authorizing extension of payments to homesteaders on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, Idaho, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the provisions of an act of Congress approved April 15, 1912, authorizing the extension of time within which to make payments of certain moneys by homestead entrymen upon the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, be extended and held to apply to payments that became due prior to the passage of the act under the same conditions that apply to payments becoming due subsequent to the passage of the law, but this shall not affect any valid adverse claim initiated prior to the passage of the resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PURCHASE OF LANDS BY NEVADAVILLE, COLO.

The bill (S. 8130) granting to the town of Nevadaville, Colo., the right to purchase certain lands for the protection of water supply was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 3, after line 20, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That within one year after the passage of this act granting the foregoing-described property to the town of Nevadaville said town may purchase said lands by payment of the purchase price therefor, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to cause the same to be patented to said town.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 2. That within one year after the survey of the foregoing-described property proposed to be granted to the town of Nevadaville, said town may purchase said lands by paying the amounts prescribed in section 1 hereof, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to cause the same to be patented to said town.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 5, line 1, before the word "used" to insert "so," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the lands to be purchased as hereinbefore set forth and all portions thereof shall be held and used by said grantee for the purposes herein specified, and in case the said lands shall cease to be so used they shall revert to the United States, and this condition shall be expressed in the patent to be issued under the terms of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN TEXAS.

The bill (H. R. 27875) authorizing the President to convey certain lands to the State of Texas was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President of the United States to direct the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the State of Texas, for the use of the State experimental station in connection with the agricultural research and demonstration work, such portions of the old Fort Brown Military Reservation as he may deem advisable, and provides that should the State of Texas at any time fail or refuse to use the property authorized to be conveyed for the purposes above set out it shall revert to the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CERTIFIED CHECKS.

The bill (H. R. 24703) to extend the authority to receive certified checks drawn on national and State banks and trust companies in payment for duties on imports and internal taxes and all public dues was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that it shall be lawful for collecting officers to receive certified checks drawn on national and State banks and trust companies, during such time and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, in payment for duties on imports, internal taxes, and all public dues, including special customs deposits; and proposes accordingly to amend the act of March 2, 1911, entitled "An act to authorize the receipt of certified checks for duties on imports and internal taxes."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 8324) to appoint James W. Keen as master's mate in the Revenue-Cutter Service and to place him as such upon the retired list was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 7060) for the relief of Samuel H. Walker was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

JAMES PARSONS.

The bill (H. R. 24661) for the relief of James Parsons was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, James Parsons shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a lieutenant of Company D, Second Regiment Colorado Volunteer Cavalry, but no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISIANA DISTILLERY CO. (LTD.)

The bill (H. R. 12339) to refund certain taxes paid by the Louisiana Distillery Co. (Ltd.), of New Orleans, La., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $194.40 to the Louisiana Distillery Co. (Ltd.), of New Orleans, La., as a refund payment for excessive duty paid on importation of molasses.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SPARROW GRAVELY TOBACCO CO.

The bill (H. R. 18213) to refund to the Sparrow Gravely Tobacco Co. the sum of $173.52, with penalty and interest, the same having been erroneously paid by them to the Government of the United States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $176.99 to reimburse said Sparrow Gravely Tobacco Co., that sum having been erroneously paid by the company to the United States Government.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was rejected.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 7826) to provide for the participation of the United States in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROOT. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (H. R. 28746) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (H. R. 28672) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 4662) for the relief of Charles Richter was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

MATHEW T. FULLER.

The bill (H. R. 16993) for the relief of Mathew T. Fuller was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let the bill go over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the Senator from Georgia will not object to that bill. It is not in the same category as other bills.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The only responsibility I have is that I was on the subcommittee which reported it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the word "Infantry," to insert: "Provided, That no pension shall accrue or become payable prior to the passage of this act"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of pension laws, Mathew T. Fuller shall hereafter be held and considered to have been absent with proper authority and in the line of duty as a soldier at the time of his capture by the enemy while serving as a member of Company D, Sixty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no pension shall accrue or become payable prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 6775) to grant an honorable discharge to David Steers was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 8454) to amend section 914 of the Revised Statutes was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let that bill go over.

Mr. O'GORMAN. What is that bill?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will not object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. ROOT. The junior Senator from New York asked what it was.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. ROOT. That is a bill to give the Supreme Court the same authority regarding rules in common law as in equity.

Mr. O'GORMAN. We are all agreed as to the wisdom of passing that bill.

Mr. ROOT. The Committee on the Judiciary are all agreed upon the wisdom of it. It is very simple.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will say that I was requested by a Senator who has left the Chamber to ask that the bill go over.

Mr. ROOT. I am very sorry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

EXECUTION OF JUDGMENT.

The bill (S. 3194) to revise section 985 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That bill can not possibly pass at this time.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope the Senator from Georgia will withdraw his objection. It relates simply to the matter of execution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thought it could not possibly pass the House.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not so sure that it can not.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, in section 1, page 1, line 5, after the word "amended," to strike out

"so as to read as follows" and to insert "by adding thereto the following," and on page 1, after line 6, to strike out:

SEC. 985. All writs of execution upon judgments or decrees heretofore or hereafter obtained in a circuit or district court of the United States in any State, and now or hereafter in force, may run and be executed in any district in that State or in any district of any other State or in any Territory, and such writ shall be issued from and be made returnable to the court wherein the judgment was obtained; but in case the writ is issued to another district in the same State, it may be executed by the marshal of the district wherein the judgment was obtained or by the marshal of the district wherein property is sought to be seized, and may be addressed to the marshal of said district or to "any marshal of the United States," and executions may be issued to different marshals at the same time, but there shall be but one satisfaction. In every case, before the clerk of any such court shall be required to issue such writ for execution outside of his district and before any marshal shall be required to execute such writ, the judgment creditor shall deposit with the clerk sufficient money to cover all costs likely to be incurred in the execution of said writ, and the clerk shall indorse on said writ that said amount to cover said costs is so on deposit, and on return of said writ, which may be returned by mail, said clerk shall forthwith transmit to said marshal the proper amount of costs due him.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Whenever it is sought to execute any judgment or decree, for the payment of money, heretofore or hereafter rendered or entered in any circuit or district court of the United States in any district of any other State than the one in which the judgment or decree has been or shall be rendered or entered, the party or parties entitled to satisfaction may file in the office of the clerk of the district court of the United States in the district in which execution is sought a duly certified copy of such judgment or decree, with proof that there has been no satisfaction; and thereupon, after due application, the clerk shall issue an execution, directed to the marshal of that district, and it shall have the same force and effect, and all proceedings relating thereto, the levy thereof, the sale of property thereunder, and the rights of all persons affected shall be the same as though the judgment or decree had been rendered or entered by the court in the district in which the certified copy thereof is filed.

So as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 985 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"Whenever it is sought to execute any judgment or decree for the payment of money, heretofore or hereafter rendered or entered in any circuit or district court of the United States in any district of any other State than the one in which the judgment or decree has been or shall be rendered or entered, the party or parties entitled to satisfaction may file in the office of the clerk of the district court of the United States in the district in which execution is sought a duly certified copy of such judgment or decree, with proof that there has been no satisfaction; and thereupon, after due application, the clerk shall issue an execution, directed to the marshal of that district, and it shall have the same force and effect, and all proceedings relating thereto, the levy thereof, the sale of property thereunder, and the rights of all persons affected shall be the same as though the judgment or decree had been rendered or entered by the court in the district in which the certified copy thereof is filed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONVEYANCES OF LAND IN NEVADA.

The bill (S. 7600) legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Central Pacific Railroad Co. and others within the State of Nevada was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROOT. I think that bill had better go over.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I hope there will be no objection interposed to the consideration of that bill. The Senator will remember that the bill was unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee. It is a bill introduced by the then Senator from Nevada, Mr. Massey, and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and his colleague [Mr. PITTMAN] from Nevada are extremely desirous of having the bill passed at this session, if it is possible to have it acted upon. There is no objection to it. It is similar to a bill that we enacted a year ago.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I hope that the bill may be considered.

Mr. ROOT. I will withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 1, line 3, before the word "agreements," to insert "written"; in line 4, after the word "by," to insert "the Central Pacific Railway Co. of California"; in line 6, after the word "company," to strike out "or the Southern Pacific Co., or the Contract & Finance Co."; on page 2, line 7, before the word "agreements," to insert "written"; and in line 12, after the words "conveyances or," to insert "written," so as to make the section read:

That all conveyances or written agreements heretofore made by the Central Pacific Railroad Co. of California, the Central Pacific Railroad Co., or the Central Pacific Railway Co., or the Pacific Improvement Co., or the successors or assigns of any of them, of or concerning land forming a part of the right of way of said companies, or either of them, granted by the Government by the act of Congress of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," and all other acts of Congress amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, and also all conveyances or written agreements heretofore made by said companies, or either of them, or the successors or assigns of any of them, of or concerning land forming a part of the right of way, and within the State of Nevada, of any of said companies granted by or held under any act of Congress, and all conveyances or written agreements confining the limits of said right of way, or restricting the same, are hereby legalized, validated, and confirmed to the extent that the same would have been legal or valid if the land involved therein had been held by the corporation or person making such conveyance or agreement under absolute or fee-simple title.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WALLKILL VALLEY CEMETERY ASSOCIATION, N. Y.

The bill (H. R. 28469) granting two condemned cannon to the Wallkill Valley Cemetery Association, of Orange County, N. Y., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES S. KINCAID.

The bill (H. R. 26078) for the relief of Charles S. Kincaid was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that bill go over.

Mr. KENYON. I hope the Senator will not object to that bill. It is similar in all respects to 10 or 12 bills that have been passed to-night. It is not a pension bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the word "late," to strike out "of Company A, Thirty-seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry; Company B, One hundred and ninety-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry; and"; and, in line 6, after the word "captain," to strike out "Company B," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Charles S. Kincaid, late captain Third Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Infantry, African descent, subsequently known as the Fifty-sixth Regiment United States Colored Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said Third Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Infantry on the 2d day of August, 1864: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. KENYON. I hope the Senate will not agree to the committee amendment. The amendment merely strikes out some descriptive words that are useless, perhaps, in the bill, but they can do no harm.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 6675) to grant an honorable discharge to Philip Cook was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 118) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept the title to approximately 5,000 acres of land in the vicinity of Tullahoma, in the State of Tennessee, which certain citizens have offered to donate to the United States for the purpose of establishing a maneuver camp and for the maneuvering of troops, establishing and maintaining camps of instruction, for rifle and artillery ranges, and for mobilization and assembling of troops from the group of States composed of Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 20048) declaring that all citizens of Porto Rico and certain natives permanently residing in said island shall be citizens of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. At the request of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 5107) for the relief of W. D. McLean, alias Donald McLean, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

LUMBER RIVER BRIDGE, LUMBERTON, N. C.

The bill (S. 8565) to authorize the Virginia & Carolina Southern Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Lumber River at or near the town of Lumberton, N. C., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 1, page 1, line 8, after "North Carolina," to insert "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation," so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Virginia & Carolina Southern Railroad Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of North Carolina, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches across the Lumber River, at or near the town of Lumberton, or North Lumberton, State of North Carolina, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. D. M'LEAN.

Mr. STONE. Do I understand that the bill (S. 5107) for the relief of W. D. McLean, alias Donald McLean, was objected to?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I objected to it simply on the ground that it is a Senate bill, and of course it can not possibly get through the House.

Mr. STONE. There is a possibility, I will say to the Senator, of its getting through.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the pension laws W. D. McLean, alias Donald McLean, who was a sergeant in Company K, Sixty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and sergeant of Company F, Tenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of the last-named regiment on the 1st day of November, 1864.

Mr. LEA. On behalf of the committee I offer the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment of the committee it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHILIP COOK.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understand it is desired that the bill (S. 6675) to grant an honorable discharge to Philip Cook, to which I objected, be passed. It is the same kind of a bill as the one just acted upon, and I will withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the pension laws Philip Cook, who was a private of Troop H, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said troop and regiment on the 3d day of August, 1865.

Mr. LEA. On behalf of the committee I offer the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Philip Cook."

PEND OREILLE RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 8310) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pend Oreille River opposite the town of Newport, Wash., was announced as next in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

LIEN FOR TAXES.

The bill (H. R. 25780) to amend section 3186 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 2, line 3, after the word "collector," to strike out "in the office of the registrar or recorder of deeds of the county or counties, or parish or parishes in the State of Louisiana" and insert "in the office of the clerk of the district court of the district"; and, in lines 8 to 12, to strike out the following proviso: "Provided further, That the provision herein relating to the filing of notice shall be applicable whenever, and only whenever, the laws of the State wherein the property is situated shall authorize the filing of such notice in the office of the registrar or recorder of deeds as provided herein," so as to make the bill read:

That section 3186 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3186. If any person liable to pay any tax neglects or refuses to pay the same after demand, the amount shall be a lien in favor of the United States from the time when the assessment list was received by the collector, except when otherwise provided, until paid, with the interest, penalties, and costs that may accrue in addition thereto upon all property and rights to property belonging to such person: Provided, however, That such lien shall not be valid as against any mortgagee, purchaser, or judgment creditor until notice of such lien shall be filed by the collector in the office of the clerk of the district court of the district within which the property subject to such lien is situated."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PROBATION SYSTEM IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

The bill (S. 2890) for the establishment of a probation system in the United States courts, except in the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT WELDON SPRINGS LANDING, MO.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from South Dakota to withdraw his objection to Senate bill 8443.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will do it. I do not see the use of passing these Senate bills, however.

Mr. STONE. This is a bill for the construction of a bridge that must go through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn. The bill will be read.

The bill (S. 8443) to authorize the St. Louis-Kansas City Electric Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the town of Weldon Springs Landing, Mo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, with an amendment to strike out all of section 1 and insert:

That the time for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved August 10, 1911, to be built across the Missouri River at or near the town of Weldon Springs Landing, in the State of Missouri, is hereby extended to one year and three years, respectively, from date of approval hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the town of Weldon Springs Landing, Mo."

JOHN H. FESENMEYER.

The bill (S. 7854) for the relief of John H. Fesenmeyer, alias John Wills, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

IOWA JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

The bill (H. R. 28635) to amend section 81 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4957) for the relief of Simon M. Preston was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is a Senate bill. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand there is no chance to put it through. I make the objection simply to save time.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 163) amending and extending the operation of the act for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River, for the preservation of Niagara Falls, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We can not do anything with that, either.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I think that ought to go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will go over.

The bill (H. R. 23673) to abolish the involuntary servitude imposed upon seamen in the merchant marine of the United States while in foreign ports and the involuntary servitude imposed upon the seamen of the merchant marine of foreign countries while in ports of the United States, to prevent unskilled manning of American vessels, to encourage the training of boys in the American merchant marine, for the further protection of life at sea, and to amend the laws relative to seamen, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

OFFICERING AND MANNING OF VESSELS.

The bill (H. R. 23676) to regulate the officering and manning of vessels subject to the inspection laws of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 3, section 2, line 4, after the word "every," to strike out "ocean-going" and insert "ocean," and in line 5, after the word "coastwise," to insert "sea-going," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 2. That the board of local inspectors shall make an entry in the certificate of inspection of every ocean and coastwise sea-going merchant vessel of the United States propelled by machinery, and every ocean-going vessel carrying passengers, the minimum number of licensed deck officers required for her safe navigation according to the following scale.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

JOHN H. HOWLETT.

The bill (S. 228) for the relief of John H. Howlett was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

That concludes the printed calendar. There are certain bills reported to-day, which, without objection, will now be taken up.

ALONZO D. CADWALLADER.

The bill (H. R. 24296) for the relief of Alonzo D. Cadwallader was announced as next in order.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is that a new bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does that mean that the soldier did not serve 90 days, and that now we are going to place him on the pension rolls?

Mr. POMERENE. To whom is the question addressed?

Mr. SMOOT. Whoever reported the bill; I do not know.

Mr. POMERENE. It was reported by Mr. CATRON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. He is not here. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

COURT LIBRARIES FOR NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO.

The bill (H. R. 4718) to authorize the use of certain unclaimed moneys now in the registry of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio for the improvement of the libraries of the United States courts for said district was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL BUTTER & CO.

The bill (H. R. 20511) for the relief of Samuel Butter & Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 3, before the word "be," to strike out "Navy" and insert "Treasury," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reimburse in the sum of $11,709.69 to Samuel Butter & Co., of the city of Boston, Mass., the same being on account of an overpayment by the said Samuel Butter & Co., and in excess of the value of certain condemned property sold and delivered to them by the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 8497) to repeal section 3 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What is that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been reported by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand what it is, then. There is a provision of law with reference to a bridge at St. Louis, which, in the opinion of the Post Office Department, put an unjust burden on the Government. We have rectified it in our appropriation bill by declining to appropriate more than a certian sum—the sum we thought ought to be appropriated. This bill is to repeal the other law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the calendar number of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has just been reported to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It has reference to mail service only. There is a statute authorizing the Postmaster General to pay $50,000 a year, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the transportation of the Government mail from East St. Louis to central St. Louis. The Post Office Committee had this matter up before the Senate last year, and again this year. Last year we cut the appropriation to $35,000. This year we cut it to $20,000. There is a general law that authorizes the Postmaster General to go to $50,000. We think that law ought not to stand; that the $20,000 is ample. This bill is to conform the general law to the appropriation we passed this year, and repeal the provision of the general law that authorizes the payment of $50,000.

Mr. STONE. I should like to have an opportunity to examine that bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should rather have it passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] withdraws his opposition to this post-office bill. It is just an effort on the part of the Post Office Committee to protect the general law, to repeal a possible arbitrary and unjust payment of rates.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that is the same bill to which I objected, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think it is rather a bad precedent, anyhow, to bring up a lot of bills that are not upon the calendar, that nobody can understand. I think I shall object to all of these bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go to the calendar.

The bill (H. R. 25781) to amend section 77 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911," was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. What is that bill? I do not understand the nature of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read. The title does not disclose the nature of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

ERNEST C. STAHL.

The bill (S. 7620) for the relief of Ernest C. Stahl was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of the laws relating to pensions and to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Ernest C. Stahl shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a lieutenant serving in the Colored Infantry of the United States at Alexandria, Va., on January 12, 1866, but no back pay, bounty, or pension shall become due or available by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SEVERIN AND BERTHE L. EVENSEN.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask unanimous consent to consider Order of Business 1070, being Senate bill 7878. I will say that I have no hope of its passing the House, but it is a worthy bill, and I want the Senate to act on it.

Mr. LEA. I ask that one more bill on the calendar be reported, and that the title be read, at least.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Mississippi to object to the consideration of bills not upon the printed calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We have several days remaining in the session yet, and I would rather that the bills should go upon the calendar and be printed upon the calendar, so that we may know what they provide.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This bill is on the calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Probably I may have no objection to the bill which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] mentions, and none to a bill which I understand the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] desires to have acted upon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I am sure the Senator would not object if he understood the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a bad precedent, however. We can not be too careful about following the usual rules, so that we may know what is going on. It might be that bad bills might slip through in this way. So I shall object to all bills that are not printed upon the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills that have not been acted upon will go to the calendar.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 7878) for the relief of Severin and Berthe L. Evensen, dependent parents of Sigurd Evensen.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Severin Evensen and Berthe L. Evensen, dependent parents of Sigurd Evensen, who was killed on the U. S. S. Neptune while employed in coaling the same at Melville, R. I., on the 18th of October, 1911, through an accident which occurred without negligence or misconduct of said Sigurd Evensen, the sum of $1,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SEAMEN IN THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to make an inquiry as to what became of House bill 23673.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill went over on objection.

Mr. SMOOT. It went over under objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very sorry if that is the case. It is a bill that abolishes involuntary servitude in the merchant marine.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there were some Senators interested in the bill who are absent, and they desire to be here when it is considered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock midnight) the Senate adjourned until Friday, February 28, 1913, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 27, 1913.

The House met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God and our Father, whose tender mercies and loving kindness have been over Thy children from the beginning, shaping, guiding their destiny, continue, we beseech Thee, Thy care over us; give us plenteously of Thy grace that we may do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with Thee, and hallow Thy name day by day. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, and Mr. SPARKMAN rose.

The SPEAKER. The situation about this matter is there are three or four conference reports here, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] says it will not take over 30 minutes to get through with the deficiency bill, and while the Chair wants to expedite these matters he believes it will expedite business by allowing this bill to go on and therefore he will recognize the gentleman from New York.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 28858, the general deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 28858, the general deficiency bill, with Mr. ADAIR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 28858) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913 and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the fiscal year 1913, $75,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of line 23. I notice this is a provision for deficiencies in the contingent fund of $75,000. May I ask first whether it is likely to be enough? Later in the bill you provide for the members elect of the present Committee on Ways and Means to expend not exceeding $10,000 out of the contingent fund, and then again still later the next paragraph authorizes an expenditure of some more money out of the contingent fund by the members elect of the Committee on the District of Columbia. Will this $75,000 be sufficient to pay the bills outstanding and incurred especially for the investigating committees and leave enough in the fund to take care of this $10,000 for the Ways and Means Committee and whatever sum may be required by the District Committee? I question whether that has been fully covered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The chairman of the Committee on Accounts, from the best information that can be gathered from the several committees authorized to expend money out of the contingent fund, states that there has been contracted for and will be expended on those authorizations between $50,000 and $60,000. That would leave from $10,000 to $15,000 margin, which should take care of the items to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. MANN. Well, I should think it would be quite certain there will be some other expenses, and I take it it is desirable to give the gentleman from Alabama sufficient funds to do the work which he contemplates doing during the vacation before the extra session meets. It ought not to be stopped by lack of funds.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think there will not be any lack of funds for this reason.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I was otherwise engaged at the moment; was the gentleman referring to an item in reference to the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. MANN. Only whether there was money enough to meet it; nobody questioned the item. I was endeavoring to ascertain whether there was money enough in the contingent fund to meet it. Has the gentleman a list of the expenditures which have been incurred by the investigating committees which have not yet been paid?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We asked the Committee on Accounts to furnish that information. The District Committee was authorized to expend by House resolution 230, $5,000; by House resolution 536, $10,000; by House resolution 756, $10,000; in all, $25,000; and they expended out of the $25,000, $9,897.83. That would leave a little over $15,000.

Mr. MANN. There was only one resolution——

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are three resolutions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I can explain that.

Mr. MANN. I am not questioning the proposition, except whether there is money enough.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is nothing asked of one $10,000 appropriation. The committee spent less than $3,000, and that leaves more than $7,000 for an unexpended balance.

Mr. MANN. That will not be required.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Not at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Committee on Banking and Currency was authorized by House resolutions 465 and 519 to expend $60,000, and has expended $22,318.05 and has outstanding obligations in the neighborhood of $40,000, so that they will take the entire $37,601 of the balance not yet drawn. Merchant Marine and Fisheries, by House resolution 470, was authorized to spend $25,000, and has expended $9,145.48, leaving an unexpended balance of $15,854.52.

The Committee on the Judiciary, the Money Trust investigation, was authorized by House resolution 486 to spend $25,000, and has expended $1,601.24. For the committee investigating violations by steel companies amounts were authorized by House resolutions Nos. 173, 342, and 469 aggregating $39,000; amount expended, $38,976.50. For the committee to investigate the Sugar Trust the amount authorized by House resolution No. 184 was $25,000; expended, $11,486. For the committee to investigate a system of shop management the amount authorized by House resolution No. 328 was $10,000; expended, $4,395. For the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department the amount authorized under departmental special resolution No. 474 was $7,500; expended, $6,328.45. The total expended to date is $112,360.58.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman the record of the expenditures in the Shoe Trust investigation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What investigation?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Have you the record of the expenditures in the Shoe Trust investigation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Was it paid out of the contingent fund of the House?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I presume it was.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. I requested the Committee on Accounts to furnish the Committee on Appropriations with a statement showing the expenditures made ont of the contingent fund for the various investigations conducted under authority of the House.

Mr. MANN. That investigation was conducted by the Committee on Rules, and I think there was no resolution passed in regard to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Committee on Appropriations made an exhaustive investigation as to the price to be paid for smokeless powder, and as a result of which it reported to the House in its bills, and there has been incorporated in bills reported by other committees, a limitation of 53 cents on the price to be paid per pound, a reduction of 7 cents. There was no expense incurred in that investigation. It was conducted by the committee that does all that work.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Over $100,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. One hundred and twelve thousand dollars.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell the net result of those investigations?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. One of them has disclosed an expenditure of $1,000,000 by the Federal Government for which no return has been had, but which will be reimbursed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Have any arrests been made of any criminals caught in the act as the result of the expenditure of the $112,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was not any expectation that they would be arresting anybody as the result of these investigations. We have conducted them for the purpose of obtaining information, and if the gentleman had read as assiduously as I have the proceedings before these various committees he would now be possessed of an amount of information on a number of important subjects that he never dreamed existed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the trouble. There is so much to read that the common people can not begin to comprehend it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In order to keep up with the procession, it is necessary to spend not only the days but long hours of the night in the performance of public duties here.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman recall the arrest of a single millionaire or multimillionaire, or other malefactor of great wealth, as the result of the expenditure of the people's money in this search?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the gentleman any recollection of it?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like a categorical answer to a very plain question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman permit me to answer his question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will not answer in my way.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman can recall any intimation at any time that the purpose of these investigations was to apprehend, arrest, and incarcerate in jail some multimillionaire residing in the hallowed precincts of Philadelphia, I would be glad to have the information given to the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Have any of the malefactors of great wealth who have been accused in any way as the result of these investigations, most of whom resided in the sacred precincts of the metropolis represented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], been apprehended?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have come there doubtless after they have finished their iniquitous career in order to enjoy their ill-gotten wealth in a place where they can do it properly. Nobody ever dreamed of going to Philadelphia to spend the leisure part of his life in enjoyment. They leave Philadelphia as quickly as they can.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And they usually go to New York to teach them how to do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They show good judgment by selecting New York.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] want some more time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not unless somebody else desires to be further illuminated on this interesting subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to follow up that Shoe Machinery Trust investigation, if some one can tell us something about it. It was one of the most spectacular investigations ever started by this House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall ask first for a vote.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] may have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the newspapers were filled with columns of announcements every day of what the Democratic Party was going to do to this Shoe Trust; they told how the people of the country were being robbed right and left for the aggrandizement of the predatory millionaires. I recall very clearly that when the committee went to Philadelphia it stayed overnight, and then, like the Arab, "folded its tent and silently stole away," and after that we heard nothing of the Shoe-Trust investigation. [Laughter.] I ask, Why was this?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that this administration brought some kind of a criminal proceeding against some people connected with the so-called Shoe Machinery Trust. I am not quite sure whether it was because of the lack of a good case or the incompetency of these high-priced Republican attorneys that the prosecution failed, and therefore I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he pursue his inquiries at the Department of Justice, where, since 1902, they have had about $4,000,000 with which to suppress these illegal concerns that have been operating in defiance of the law. Whether the work that has or has not been done was successful or otherwise can best be judged by a careful analysis of the results of the election which took place last November. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am satisfied with the answer the gentleman has given, or has attempted to give, but can the gentleman answer one further question? Can he tell whether a distinguished gentleman who is announced as a probable member of the Cabinet in the incoming administration, was the counsel for the Shoe Trust or the counsel against the Shoe Trust, or whether he occupied both positions at one and the same time? [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman speaking of me, or of some other Member of this House?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am trying to get light on the subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can get no light from me as to the personnel of the incoming Cabinet. I have made no request in that connection and have not been answered.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from New York stated that nobody expected that any malefactors of great wealth, either in Philadelphia or in Pittsburgh, would be arrested in consequence of these investigations. I hope the gentleman will strike out "Pittsburgh," for the reason that, although there are many men there of great wealth, there are no malefactors. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suppose that is applying a rule of a recent Republican administration, that there are good malefactors and bad malefactors, and all the malefactors of great wealth in Pittsburgh, in the estimation of the gentleman, are good ones and all the bad ones live elsewhere. [Laughter.] The bad ones all go to New York, I guess, under the theory of the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I accept the gentleman's explanation. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I just came into the Chamber a few moments ago, but have been somewhat interested in the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

I want to say a word about the work of the Committee on Appropriations, if the gentleman from New York will give me his attention. As I roughly estimate, the Committee on Appropriations recommends to the House the expenditure of probably between $350,000,000 and $400,000,000 in the annual appropriation bills. Members talk about investigations. I just heard the gentleman from New York speak of the investigation made by the Committee on Appropriations touching powder. That investigation has resulted from time to time heretofore, and will no doubt again result in real legislation for the benefit of the Government to the advantage of the Treasury. That investigation as to powder, like all the investigations pursued by the Committee on Appropriations, has been prosecuted for real results.

A MEMBER. Good!

Mr. CANNON. We have not had any Associated Press dispatches given out and printed from day to day and no headlines in the yellow journals about the investigations made by the committee, either this year or in former years; and I want to do the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and his colleagues the justice to say that to my knowledge, in the preparation of these great bills, the work of the committee has been exhaustive, without the employment of a band, or the beating of a drum, or the blowing of a fife, and all along the line the recommendations of that committee have borne real fruit, because its investigations have been conducted in real good faith for the benefit of the country. [Applause.]

I wanted to say that much. I will not pause to speak of other investigations, because I have not read all the evidence. But whenever I see a committee conducting investigations and get the first knowledge of them in the headlines of the yellow journals, I think I am justified in saying, from my former experience and recollection, that they are blowing. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the two items just read appropriate $85,000 for deficiencies in the contingent fund of the House for the purpose of carrying on investigations by select and other committees. If these items are allowed, as I have no doubt they will be, they will complete a total of $330,000 for these purposes in the fiscal years 1912 and 1913, or $165,000 per annum. The expenditures under a Republican Congress for 10 years for these purposes averaged $95,000, so that this is an increase of $70,000 a year, or over 80 per cent in the expenditures of a Democratic Congress over the expenditures of a Republican Congress for these purposes.

I am not inclined to be captious with regard to these matters, because we are all favorable to all proper and necessary and helpful and useful investigations; but this item is reminiscent. It is reminiscent of those days in the beginning of the Congress when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] and other gentlemen on that side of the House assured us of the wonderful economy that the Democratic Congress proposed to practice.

I am less inclined to be overcritical in view of the fact that there were some gentleman on that side, notably the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who did not join in the loud and hilarious applause with which the promise of Democratic economy was launched upon the House.

It may be claimed that these extravagant expenditures were necessary to uncover the widespread and deep-seated iniquities that had existed under long-continued Republican administrations, and we are reminded that the expenditure of $330,000 has at least developed the fact that there never was any "Dick to Dick" letter, and that it cost $2,605 to determine the condition of the throat of a multimillionaire.

So far as I now recall, these are the only really startling matters developed by the expenditure of this $330,000, and I am sure that all the patriotic gentlemen on the other side and all patriotic citizens everywhere will join with us in the pride we feel that the expenditure of these great sums, the broad casting of the dragnet, the use of the fine tooth comb, and the plentiful swinging of the bludgeon by these committees have failed to develop any wrongdoing on the part of Republican officials during the long period of Republican supremacy, and have not, in my opinion, uncovered any serious extravagances. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last part of the paragraph. I am one of those who do not criticize some of the investigations that have been carried on during the present Congress. I think, however, many of these minor investigations, particularly those conducted by the Expenditures Committees, have had too much politics ingrafted into them at the beginning and throughout their deliberations to be of any value to the country, but I do believe that the investigations of some of the great industrial and financial conditions of the country, carried on in what is known as the Steel Trust investigation and the Money Trust investigation, have brought to light and to the knowledge of Congress and of the country some important facts concerning present industrial tendencies. But I desire here to record my protest against the habit that has originated with our Democratic brethren, every time a committee of any importance is appointed or given authority to make investigations, of employing special counsel in those investigations. Take particularly the Money Trust investigation; the employment of counsel from the very locality to be investigated has practically made an overpowering influence in the committee that has been, I think, a humiliation to every Member of the House who wishes to bring out the important facts and to have a real congressional investigation. It has been currently reported—how true it is I know not, but I have never heard it denied—that even members of that committee have not felt at liberty to ask questions pertaining to facts involved in the investigation.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman state what committee he refers to?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The Pujo committee, otherwise denominated the Untermyer committee. There are just as good lawyers in this House as there are out of it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to say——

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If I may have an extension of my time, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask the gentleman to allow me to interrupt him for a moment.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure. I shall ask for further time.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman referred to the investigation of the Steel Trust. We conducted that investigation clear through, and not a dollar was paid to any lawyer outside of the committee, and all questions and investigations were made by members of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will not be certain about that committee, but some special committees have employed lawyers and paid large fees.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am certain about this committee because it is a fact that not a dollar was expended for a lawyer.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. What the gentleman says about that particular committee may be true.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is not "may be true"; it is true.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman from Georgia acknowledges it, and that settles it. But, Mr. Chairman, I was not directing my attention to that committee; there are other committees that have been investigating here where the question of authority for employing counsel has been in dispute, and that they employed counsel and how they were paid has been a matter of mystery. But we have had before the House at another time, particularly the money trust committee, and they have employed expensive outside counsel to do the business of the House. Aside from being an extravagant expense—I do not know what the expense is, but it was reported that it was to be $15,000—aside from the extravagant expense of employing outside counsel in matters of that kind, when we have just as good attorneys in the House employed by the year and paid for, I want to say that the employment of special counsel for committees from the environment of the matter to be investigated destroys the value very largely of the work of the investigating committee. In this matter I refer to it has been currently reported that the distinguished counsel has been spending the last few weeks at Palm Beach writing out what the committee is supposed to report to this House, and I see in the newspapers this morning that it is doubtful whether they will accept what the distinguished counsel has prepared as final conclusions. When this House appoints Members to investigate a great and important subject in which the House and the country is interested, instead of getting the results of the work of the deliberation of that committee, it receives the investigation of the counsel taken from the environment of the matter to be investigated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks that the time of the gentleman from South Dakota be extended five minutes; is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman from Wyoming says that the expenses of these committees was $300,000. Does that include the expense of public printing?

Mr. MONDELL. No.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman from Wyoming says it does not.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. It was reported that the physician who went to examine Mr. Rockefeller was paid $500 a day; is that the fact?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I know that when further appropriation was asked to cover expenses that had been incurred without authority, only two weeks ago, it was said that a throat specialist had been sent down there, at an expense of $500 a day and expenses, making $2,600 for five days' work. But I am referring particularly to the practice our Democratic brethren have drifted into of giving us special investigations under the domination of influences outside of the membership of this body. It gives us investigations that neither the House nor the country nor the people can have that complete confidence in that they are entitled to when we direct investigations of great subjects of this kind.

The committee has brought forth important facts, but they are facts that inhere in the very records of the financial institutions themselves. I think the important fact developed in that investigation is the interlocking of directorates. But that could have been found by simply obtaining a list of the great financial institutions and comparing the names of their directors. It is a fact that those who want to see the light thrown upon these great questions have deplored that some of the great interests centering in Wall Street have not been called before the committee at all. Apparently this lawyer appointed to take the part of the committee and question witnesses in his own way is preparing a report for the committee automatically to sign and to bring into the House.

If a lawyer in New York or elsewhere has important knowledge by virtue of his professional associations and his practice and close association with the facts, which this committee and this House are entitled to know, let him be called as a witness and let us put him on the stand here to tell what he knows, and let it be paid for at the rate of witness fees and expenses, instead of paying him a $15,000 fee for coming and dominating the spirit of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who is in sympathy with that investigation. I believe there are——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think that any lawyer could dominate the membership of a committee if the committee knew its business?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I think if the committee is attending to its business, and is capable of doing its business, there is no place for a lawyer to dominate it or control its proceedings. The lawyer in this case has been the whole show. The committee has sat there silent, dumb as oysters, as to the proceedings, and if any one of them wanted to know anything which the lawyer did not see fit to bring out, they have sent a paper up to him to ask if, in his discretion, he would not see fit to put such a question. I say that that is a humiliation to the dignity and the tradition of this great representative body, and I for one desire to file my protest and to state my resentment against it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to say anything in reference to what has been said by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] and others, except as to one item in this expense account and the contingent fund.

The committee to which I shall refer, and whose expense account is in this item, was a committee known as a committee to investigate the Steel Corporation of the United States. That investigation was conducted, with the exception of 2 months, for 11 consecutive months. There was appropriated by the House $39,000 for that purpose, and there remains unexpended of that sum $23.41. During that investigation, at the beginning of it, and through it, application was made to the committee to employ a lawyer to represent the committee, to conduct the questions, and to aid the committee in the matters before it. Under the resolution we had full authority to employ a lawyer. There arose before that committee questions of great importance, of great doubt, involving the constructions of contracts, the construction of the act of 1890, and the right of the committee to proceed after the suit had been instituted at the instance of the United States Government against the corporation. I take no credit to myself for what was done in respect to that matter, but I do know it to be a fact that there never was an effort made in that committee from the beginning to the end to employ counsel to assist it, and no counsel was ever employed. No lawyer was ever advised with, that I am aware of, in respect to a legal question coming before the committee or the examining of witnesses or for the purpose of getting an opinion as to what the committee had the right to do or what the law was or as to the business of that committee. The minority members and the majority members had among them some of the ablest lawyers in the House. They devoted their time and gave their information and their legal opinion, with reference to everything connected with it, and every member of that committee took part in examining the witnesses that appeared before it.

I will not say of what benefit that committee has been to the public, except to refer to a suit that is now pending in the State of New Jersey to dissolve this great corporation, which it was charged existed and carried on its business in violation of the laws of the United States. If any gentleman has read the testimony of the witnesses, and the procedure that has taken place there, he will find that the bill originally was filed upon the evidence obtained by that investigating committee, and that the suit is now being conducted by the Government, through the information and knowledge that we obtained, and that the witnesses that we examined are being examined in that suit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to refer to some of those things. Not only that, but we found evils to exist, to which the attention of the public and the Congress has been called. Decisions of the court have not been able to reach the great evils that exist by reason of the law not being such that it could correct them, and that committee recommended to this House amendments to the antitrust law which would, if enacted into law and enforced, correct some of the crying evils in reference to the business of the country conducted by these great corporations. I need mention but one. I want to say that we had no lawyers to draw these bills or to suggest the provisions in them. They were drawn and suggested by the members of this committee, endeavoring to carry out our duty and the instructions of the House that after this investigation we recommend such legislation as we thought would reach the evil. A great evil has grown up all over the country by reason of the ownership by manufacturing corporations of railroads, of transport companies of terminal lines, through which a discrimination was made in favor of the corporation owning the railroads or the transport lines, it also being engaged in business in competition with others. That was one of the crying evils. We have recommended bills to the House which we believe if enacted into law will correct that great evil.

I do not intend to detain the Congress nor state what other bills we recommended, but that is one, and great benefit was received by the country from it. I did not intend to say anything with reference to this item, but merely to say and to challenge the criticism and the scrutiny of investigations by that committee in its action, so far as the expenditure of money is concerned, and to say that we undertook to carry the business on as economically as we could, and every dollar expended was spent in order to get information and for the necessary expenses of conducting this investigation, and no dollar was paid for attorney's fees. Then let me say, in reference to this committee known as the Money Trust investigation, I doubted the propriety of forming such a committee. I thought it ought to be done by the committees of the House which had charge of such things—the Judiciary Committee, the Committee on Banking and Currency—and I did not vote for the supplemental resolution that was brought in here in the House. I did not vote to pay this attorney's fee or the doctor's fee in this bill when it was before the House being so recommended, and therefore have recorded my objection to that without any criticism upon those gentlemen who did. I now yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman has made a defense of the steel investigation?

Mr. BARTLETT. No; I have not made any defense at all; I have stated the facts.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman referred to the Steel Trust investigation and named one great investigation in which they had accomplished good, and he criticized in plain language the policy of employing counsel in the so-called Money Trust investigation to dominate that committee, and I would like to know whether the gentleman from Georgia justifies the course that has been taken in that investigation?

Mr. BARTLETT. I am not here to defend that action or charges made with reference to that committee. I voted against the policy of having it done, and I voted against this bill for doctor's and lawyer's fees. [Applause.] That is all the criticism I have for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments close.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman will not do that for a moment, I desire to ask a question.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have a few minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MANN. I want not to exceed five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will withhold for a few minutes, but I hope the gentleman will be brief.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if I may divert the attention of the House from the great subject that it has just been considering relating to the method of investigation to minor questions which affect the integrity of the proceedings of the House, then I wish to submit a remark or two. One of these investigating committees, the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department, some time ago authorized one member of that committee to carry on an investigation and without ever submitting any recommendation to the committee itself and without having any action taken by the committee itself, without the committee ever authorizing any report, a single gentleman, a Member of the majority, contrary to the rules and the practice of this House, submitted a report to the House which to my judgment is not warranted by the facts even if the committee itself had acted. I think that committee perhaps needs a counsel, for certainly no committee of this House will think that it has the authority to appoint one member of the committee to carry on an investigation and make a report to the House without any action by the committee itself. If that practice were to be indulged in it would violate every principle of proper legislation. If a majority of the committee can authorize one majority Member to carry on an investigation and report to the House without the minority having any chance to be heard by the committee or to make minority views, the bossism which has ever existed anywhere in the world would pale into insignificance with the bossism which grew up out of such a practice. Now, Mr. Chairman, sufficient for that. That report ought to be withdrawn if it was submitted through lack of knowledge of the Member of the House, or if it was submitted in violation of the rules and practice of the House it ought to be stricken from the files on a motion made by some one on the majority side of the House.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Not just now; I have only a moment. Recently the House passed the Indian appropriation bill. It struck out on a point of order an item in that bill. When that bill was engrossed that item was still in the bill. When the bill was sent from the Clerk's desk to the engrossing room the item was still in the bill. The other day the House acted upon a Senate bill and by amendment struck out section 2 of that bill, another bill relating to Indian matters, but when the Senate act went from the Clerk's desk to the engrossing or enrolling room that section was not stricken out and was still in the bill.

And it was transmitted to the Senate without the amendment being shown.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. MANN. I will not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I supposed you would not.

Mr. MANN. I would like to be permitted to make an intelligent statement in the House. I am not proposing to criticize the clerks at the Clerk's desk. I think they are doing very efficient work. In our control of the House we had a Journal clerk and an assistant Journal clerk. Our economical friends on the other side, who have spent something over $100,000 in investigations of doubtful value, were so economically inclined that at the beginning of this Congress they dispensed with the services of the assistant Journal clerk and put a burden upon the Journal clerk attending to his own work, which is all or more than one man ought to carry. In the old days the Journal clerk and the assistant Journal clerk, when bills were under consideration and amendments were offered, used to aid the reading clerks in keeping track of the amendments and the changes which were made in the bill. Our two reading clerks have been worked pretty hard in this session of Congress. I have no criticism to make because they made a slip on these bills. Far from me to criticize the Journal clerk, but I criticize the majority for dispensing with the services of a needed man at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. I would like just one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. If we amend a bill in the House or in the committee and the amendment does not get in the bill, but goes to the other Chamber or stays in the act as it is enrolled, the integrity of the proceedings of the House can never be certain to be preserved. We have the right, both the minority and the majority, to have a sufficient force at the Clerk's desk to see that the proceedings taken by the House or the Committee of the Whole are properly recorded and preserved, so that men may have faith in the integrity of our proceedings.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] a question. I understand he was a member of the steel committee.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; I was.

Mr. WILLIS. I wondered whether it would be possible to obtain anything in the line of an itemized statement of the expenses of printing by that committee. The reason I am asking that is that I have received numerous requests for such information. I understand these hearings have been distributed from the room over at the House Office Building in enormous quantities, and it has been suggested they were distributed largely to aid the political fortunes, not of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], but of some of the other gentlemen of the committee. I wondered if we could have an itemized statement of the expense for the benefit of the country.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not know the gentleman was going to ask the question or I should have endeavored to secure the information. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], the chairman, would doubtless know about that. The expense of that committee can be ascertained.

Mr. WILLIS. Can the gentleman give any estimate of it? It certainly must have been tremendous.

Mr. BARTLETT. No; I do not think so. I want to say, so far as I am personally concerned, I think there were seven copies allotted to me, and I have not sent out any more during the investigation. As the hearings were printed there were certain lists furnished by me of the names of about 100 of my constituents, to whom they were sent, and that is all the information in reference to the distribution that I can furnish. So far as being used for political purposes is concerned, I do not know that that is true. I would doubt it very much, unless the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] would assert it very positively. Of course, I can not answer for the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], but, without reflecting upon the statement of the gentleman from Ohio, I doubt the truth of it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN], in connection with his discussion of the so-called Money-Trust committee, adverted to the conduct of the gentleman who had been retained as the special counsel for that committee, and I think, in passing upon these particular items in this bill, that it is a perfectly proper and logical plan for Members of this House to consider the question as to the propriety of sinking their individuality, either on this floor or in the conduct of the business of this House, through the agency of committees. I have no personal criticism to make of any gentleman on the Banking and Currency Committee if he sees fit to set aside the dignity that should attach to that committee and transfer the power and all the functions of that committee to an individual who is not connected in any way with this House. With other Members of this House, I have attended hearings conducted before that committee, and I want to say, not by way of criticism of the committee, but more by way of reference to the conduct of the gentleman who has been given this unbridled license, that his treatment of reputable gentlemen from various parts of this country was unbecoming a member of the bar. And it was doubly unbecoming a committee of this House to tolerate the manner in which he treated men who were brought here upon subpœnas issued by this House and who came in response to them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was not this same gentleman frequently acting as attorney for the very interests he was supposed to criticize?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. As to whether or not the gentleman who was employed as special counsel was acting as counsel for other parties, I am not prepared to say. But wholly apart from that, I am speaking from personal observation as a Member of this House when I say that the conduct of Mr. Untermyer before that committee was not, in many instances, in keeping with the proprieties and was not creditable to the committee that retained him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In what respect was his conduct out of keeping with the dignity of the House? The gentleman from Pennsylvania, instead of indulging in these general aspersions, ought to point out individual acts, so that we can judge of them.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If I had the time, I would be glad to enlighten the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman should not indulge in this general denunciation in a place where his remarks are protected instead of specifying the action he takes exception to, so that the country might judge.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from New York, as one of the leaders on the other side——

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I did not say that——

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The leader of the other side for the time being [laughter], if he wishes to enter into a defense of the gentleman employed in that capacity as special counsel, and will give me the time a little later on, I shall be delighted to enlighten him in regard to the conduct of the gentleman whom I referred to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let us have one instance now, to see whether the gentleman deserves any time later on. [Laughter.] Give one instance that is discreditable to this House, showing the conduct of Mr. Untermyer in respect to that committee.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, every expression of countenance, every intonation of voice, and every attitude of the special counsel, Mr. Untermyer, in that committee was on many occasions insolent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman from Pennsylvania should not expect everybody to look as handsome, as pleasant, and as attractive as he does. [Laughter.] What the gentleman says is no indictment of the special counsel.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I fear I never will attain the high standard of the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand the gentleman, taking into account the whole scope of this investigation and the attitude and action he speaks of, he would be entitled to recover under the common counts. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with reference to the necessity of the retention of that gentleman as special counsel of the investigating committee, I want to call the attention of the House to the committee as it is constituted—the majority of that committee—to show the lack of necessity of retaining the special counsel by the committee. The Democratic members of that committee were chosen by the majority side of this House. On the majority side of that committee there are eight lawyers, two bankers, and one physician——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is he a throat specialist? [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And that gentleman has been practicing medicine for 23 years. Yet they pay $2,650 to ascertain the physical condition of a gentleman who, for some reason or other, they hounded for a number of months.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What does the gentleman mean by "hounded"?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Oh, well, I do not propose to interpret every word that is commonly used in the English language for the enlightenment of the gentleman from New York. The gentleman is familiar with that word and its meaning.

Mr. FITZGERALD. An attempt was made, Mr. Chairman, to execute the process of this House, and it was impossible to do so.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will give me additional time to compensate for these interruptions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman think that when the officers of this House are attempting to execute the orders of the House they are guilty of hounding somebody?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Oh, no; I did not say that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have two minutes more. The gentleman did not make any response to my requests for specifications. I ask that he may have two minutes in which to close this illuminating debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] may have two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I ask for five minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; two minutes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two minutes, or I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If I can not have five minutes, Mr. Chairman, it will be of no use for me to proceed, and I yield the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I was not in sympathy with some of the proposed investigations or with the conduct of some of the committee making this particular investigation. I had heard repeated statements that Mr. Untermyer, the special counsel of the committee——

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the debate having been exhausted on this amendment, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out the paragraph. That has not yet been discussed. Having heard, I say, of the conduct of Mr. Untermyer toward witnesses, I personally attended some of the hearings of the committee, sat there patiently through them, and so far as I am any judge, Mr. Untermyer treated the witnesses with the courtesy, respect, and deference to which they were entitled.

Now, the only complaint that can be specified by gentlemen is the one that is made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE].

For some reason or other he thinks that Mr. Untermyer is not as pleasant in his manner as he ought to be. Mr. Untermyer has not the attractive and handsome features of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and other self-constituted judges who sit over there in judgment on that committee. I believe that this House can not attempt to determine the degree of pulchritude that an attorney must have in order to appear before committees of the House.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Like the gentleman from New York I do not entirely agree as to the manner of expending the money for the investigation of the Money Trust, and I want to ask the gentleman from New York if that can not be guarded in the future, when a resolution is passed authorizing a committee to expend a certain sum of money, to provide also that before any money is expended, or before any obligation is incurred by that committee, it shall submit to the Committee on Accounts its estimate, and the items upon which the money is to be spent, so that the Committee on Accounts, in addition to this committee, may be held responsible for the manner of expending this money?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think perhaps it would be too much to assume that all the virtue of the House is in the Committee on Accounts, and perhaps we ought to have some other committee to check it up; but that is apart from this. The chief grievance, the chief complaint, the only special case made in justification for this general assault upon Mr. Untermyer, is that gentlemen do not like his looks; and I submit to the House and to the country that that is not a sufficient justification for this wild, intemperate, and extravagant denunciation of his conduct toward witnesses.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has been a Member of the House a great many years. Has he ever served upon any committee at any time in connection with his responsible duties here when he, as a member of the committee, was not permitted to ask a question without first submitting it in writing to an employee of that committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No committee ever tried to do that to me.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. How long would the gentleman remain a member of any such committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know that that has been done in any other instances, although I have served with some Republicans on committees where, if I could have had my way, I would have adopted a rule that they should not be permitted to ask any questions at all, because I thought it was a waste of valuable time.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman visited the Money Trust Committee room during its proceedings?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Did he observe any member of that committee exercising his right to ask any question without first putting it in writing and submitting it for approval to Mr. Untermyer?

Mr. BARTLETT. That was the rule that was adopted. The minority members never complained of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand the committee adopted a rule that, in order to keep their hearings in some systematized shape and not have them incoherent, as frequently happens when a great many men attempt to conduct one investigation, they should have all their questions asked by one man. Now, if his name had been something else besides Untermyer, and if, instead of being a distinguished Democratic lawyer, he had been a prominent Republican lawyer, I am sure the procedure would have appealed to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] as eminently proper, because the gentleman from Pennsylvania is about as partisan a Republican as I am a partisan Democrat, and beyond that it is difficult to go.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. CAMPBELL, Mr. KAHN, and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, and think I have a right to speak.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the rule, after debate has been had it is in order to move to close debate.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. How far has the Clerk read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has read to the end of page 43.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Which paragraph is to be stricken out?

Mr. FITZGERALD. None.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the paragraph, and upon that motion to address the Committee of the Whole for five minutes. I ask if it is not in order now under the rules of this House for a Member opposed to that motion to address the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; after debate on an amendment under the rule it is in order to close debate by a majority vote, and I have made that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that it is in order to close all debate on the paragraph.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CAMPBELL and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania) there were 76 ayes and 52 noes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I demand tellers.

The question of ordering tellers was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. Eighteen gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I object. The paragraph ought to be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture, and materials for repairs of the same, $29,500.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The real question at issue is whether or not the Democratic Party was sincere in its professions of economy at the beginning of the last session. It wants more money to continue useless investigations; investigations that have proven themselves to be worthless in that they have effectuated no result whatever except scandal, annoyance, and disturbance in the business world. In the common parlance of the day, the whole performance of these investigations has been "bunk"; "bunk" pure and simple. It goes outside of this House, with its distinguished lawyers and its constitutional lawyers upon the other side, to employ great attorneys presumed to represent the common people to investigate the rights and wrongs of corporations, and what does it get? In the instance of the Shoe Trust, in which it failed lamentably, it secured one who, by reason of his legal reputation, is now proposed as a suitable person for a position in the Cabinet of the President, and yet he is being opposed all over New England because in the Shoe Trust investigation it appeared that he acted as counsel for both sides, representing first the antitrust people and then the trust people. In the instance of the Money Trust investigation, one of the hugest jokes before the country, out of which we have had nothing but the spew of the New York financial market and the effusions of those who represent "the common people" on the other side, where they were going to beard the financial lion in his den; they found that they had not a lawyer on the great Committee on Banking and Currency with sufficient legal ability to conduct an investigation, and so they went out to find one born of the soil, born of "the common people," to take up their cause against the mighty giants of wealth who have been putting their iron heels on the poor, downtrodden common people, giving them no right to live.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not now. Whom did they select for this patriotic purpose? One of the common people, one who springs from the soil, one who comes out of the trenches, one who was born in a potato patch, one who comes from the apple orchards of Arkansas or Missouri? Where did they go to get a lawyer of sufficient legal talent to represent the poor people of the land? They got Samuel Untermyer, of New York; and who is Mr. Untermyer? We have his own language as it appears in "Who is Who"; and what is Mr. Untermyer's relation to the common people of the land?

Born in the city of Lynchburg, Va., migrating, as southern lawyers sometimes do when they want to make money, to the metropolis of New York, the center of great fortunes, represented on this floor by the distinguished gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House [Mr. FITZGERALD], he went through the regular law court sprouts and finally came out as the real friend of the downtrodden and the poor until the Democratic committee found him to champion their cause.

But let us find out what Mr. Untermyer says about himself. He was admitted to the bar in 1879, and has since been in practice in New York, and is now the senior member of the firm of Guggenheim—oh, what a horrid name to the common people of the country [laughter]—Untermyer & Marshall, these gentlemen representing the downtrodden of New York and of Kansas and Missouri and Alabama, but still this distinguished lawyer is the head of the concern of Guggenheim.

He organized and is counsel for many brewing companies—think of it—mining companies—and that means copper—industrial and railway corporations. Oh, if the common people of the land who are represented so profoundly in this body by the other side only knew how close was their alliance to these real corporation friends of the poor, how much more they could appreciate the service of the distinguished lawyer who is representing them all!

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He represents all these great brewing companies, all these great manufacturing companies, all these great mining companies, all these industrial and railway corporations, and reorganizations—and in these days you do not reorganize unless somebody has looted a corporation. He is counsel for the Kansas City Southern Railway and the receivers of the Seaboard Air Line. Yes; some one talks about defunct corporations and reorganizations. Mr. Chairman, you do not get defunct organizations unless the common people have been skinned somewhere, and you usually get the ablest counsel to represent the defunct organizations while any of the assets last. He is counsel for and director of the American Lithographic Co. of New York, and how it did want the tariff put on to protect itself against German imports in the last session, and how it wants protection by the present Ways and Means Committee! He represents not only the New York breweries and the northeast breweries, but the United States Brewing Co., and yet our friends on the other side are preaching prohibition now and want to put it into effect, while in their ardor for the poor they solicit the counsel of all the brewing companies in the country. He represents the General Development Co., and under the title "General development" you can organize almost anything in the United States, from a mining company that advertises its fake schemes and takes the money of the poor to the extent of $160,000,000 a year in the United States, up to these magnificent land schemes that are worked up in Washington and other large cities to take the money of the school-teachers and the savings they lay away for a rainy day. He is not only counsel for the General Development Co. and many others, but he is a member of the Democratic Club of New York and of the Democratic national something, not clearly stated in the biography. Go on, friends of the poor, and keep Mr. Untermyer for your counsel.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to my friend from Pennsylvania that he will find a supplement to his biographical sketch of Mr. Untermyer in the editorial column of the New York Sun to-day.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I had the New York Sun I would read it now into the RECORD; but not having it, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the editorial.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

MR. SAMUEL UNTERMYER AGAIN ON THE STAND.

Q. We shall now, with your permission, Mr. Untermyer, resume the examination interrupted by your recent memorable official visit to Jekyl Island and your subsequent absence for rest and recreation on the Florida coast. If, however, there is anything in your physical condition making it dangerous to subject your memory to a strain at the present time the sworn certificates of three reputable physicians will be accepted as good reason for postponement. This is ordinary humanity, and not as indicating any relinquishment of interest in your testimony. Have you any objection to proceeding?—A. (By Mr. Untermyer.)——

Q. I find, Mr. Untermyer, in the autobiographical notice furnished by you to the book entitled "Who's Who in America" this eloquent description of yourself: "Champion of rights of minority stockholders, urging changes in laws for their protection; has put forth in public addresses and articles pleas for Federal regulation of trusts, reform in criminal laws, protection of minority stockholders, and kindred subjects." Did you write that description of yourself in earnest good faith, Mr. Untermyer, or have you an uncontrollable propensity to humorous utterance?—A. (By Mr. Utterance.)——

Q. Do you remember the deplorable attempt of one Stein and one Beard, with the assistance of astute legal counsel in New York City, to scoop in and combine in restraint of trade about 70 straw-paper mills operating in the Northwestern States, and thus to establish a monopoly or trust in the wrapping-paper business? Do you remember whether the projectors and directors of this scheme were particularly solicitous for the protection of the rights of minority stockholders?—A. (By Mr. Untermyer.)——

Q. Do you recall, Mr. Untermyer, the circumstance that this operation of promotion and combination in restraint of trade got to the high courts, both Federal and State, in cases arising from the invasion of the rights of owners and stockholders and from attempted performances of the general character eloquently described in one of your public addresses and articles on this and kindred subjects as "an economic curse to the country, destroying opportunity for the rising generation, paralyzing the economic laws of supply and demand and levying tribute upon us by sheer brute force, more cruel and ruthless than the forced tribute exacted by the robber barons of old"? This is a rather long sentence, and I will gladly repeat the question if your attention has not grasped its significance at the first recital.—A. (By Mr. Untermyer)——

Q. Do you remember, for example, that one Dickerman and other minority stockholders of the Columbia Straw Paper Co. filed in the Federal courts a petition setting forth that they, with other stockholders of the mortgagor company—the Columbia Straw Paper—had been injured by the alleged fraudulent manner in which its securities had been issued; that the mortgagor was controlled by the bondholders and that its directors were not fitted to conduct the suit by reason of their adverse interests?—A. (By Mr. Untermyer)——

Q. Do you remember, Mr. Untermyer, that when the case reached the Supreme Court of the United States the history of this transaction was set forth in an opinion rendered in 1900 by Mr. Justice Brown and reported in 176 U. S., 181? Do you remember that Mr. Justice Brown said, among many other severe things:

"Instead of calling the mill owners together and organizing a new corporation, Beard and Ramsdell turned over the options to Stein, and articles of incorporation were drawn by a member of the New York firm under the laws of New Jersey, which were executed by Beard, one Taylor, a clerk in the office of the New York firm, and one Heffenheimer, a New York lawyer, residing in New Jersey, each of these subscribing for 4 shares, aggregating 12 shares out of a total issue of 40,000."

Is that the sort of thing you had in mind when you used the phrase "champion of the rights of minority stockholders"—incorporation by 12 shares out of 40,000?—A. (By Mr. Untermyer)——

Q. I shall trouble you, Mr. Untermyer, to listen a little further to Mr. Justice Brown's remarks from the bench of the Supreme Court:

"The three incorporators met immediately in Hoboken as stockholders and elected themselves as directors, with six others, two of whom were members of the New York firm, and the others clerks in their office. Not a single mill owner who expected to become a stockholder was placed on the board at this time, although representations had been made by the syndicate that the stockholders would be mill owners. Philo D. Beard was elected president and Samuel H. Guggenheimer secretary.

"Immediately thereafter, and on December 10, 1892, Stein, who held all the options, assuming to act as an independent owner, though he had obtained the options for the benefit of the company and had promised to pay for them in the stock of the company, made a proposition in writing drawn by a member of the New York firm to this board of directors to sell the 39 mills to the paper company for $5,000,000, being an advance of $2,113,000 over what he had agreed to pay for them. This proposition was drafted by the New York firm, and the stockholders, upon the day the proposition was received, held another meeting and instructed themselves as directors to accept. They authorized Beard as president to enter into a contract with Stein, which was accordingly done."

Not intimating any present interest of your own in this judicial narrative, Mr. Untermyer, but addressing you only as a champion of stockholders' rights and an expert in their protection, what do you really think of the business? Do you agree with Mr. Justice Brown, who followed still further into its financial details this story of promotion and then remarked from the bench:

"Bound as these promoters were to deal fairly and honestly with the stockholders in the new corporation, they were guilty of apparently inexcusable conduct in excluding the mill owners from all participation in organizing the new corporation, putting in their own clerks as directors and paying off the mill owners in stock which was really of little more than half the value they must have expected to receive. If they were able to obtain options upon only 39 out of the 70 mills they should have made known this fact, or at least given these mill owners the benefit of the surplus stock. * * * We think that no legal knowledge was necessary to apprise these parties that they were not dealing fairly with the owners of the mills in concealing from them the facts connected with this purchase and in dealing with the property as if they themselves were the only parties in interest."

Severe words, Mr. Untermyer, although not all the names are here mentioned. Does not this characterization of the business by the Supreme Court of the United States awake your indignation and zeal as a champion of stockholders' rights?—A. (By Mr. Untermyer)——

Q. By the way, Mr. Untermyer, can this be the same transaction that was denounced in another case, See, receiver, v. Heffenheimer, by Vice Chancellor Pitney, of New Jersey, when he said in a written opinion:

"At the suggestion of Stein they then entertained the notion of consolidating the plants of these straw-paper makers into a corporation. Mr. Beard waited upon Mr. Samuel Untermyer, of the law firm of Guggenheimer & Untermyer, of New York City, and he undertook that his firm should act as counsel in organizing for that purpose under the laws of New Jersey. He had had much experience in that kind of business and gave to the affair in hand his personal attention from that time on."

Personal attention as a champion of stockholders' rights, Mr. Untermyer, and as an expert in their protection?—A. (By Mr. Untermyer)——

Q. And still quoting Vice Chancellor Pitney:

"These stockholders and directors were the associates and employees of Untermyer, who was the managing genius of the whole transaction, and they were chosen by Untermyer and Beard especially for the purpose of accomplishing at once, and without any lengthy investigation, the manifest object of the proceeding, viz, the purchase of those properties at the round sum of $5,000,000, payable in cash and securities, of which little more than one-half was to go to the real owners. * * * The whole transaction was planned by Stein, Beard, and Samuel Untermyer. They then certainly occupied the position of promoters of the corporation, and at the same time as vendors to it."

I shall not quote further here from the vice chancellor's remarks, Mr. Untermyer. He used some very ugly language about you and your associates—particularly about you—language which would be extremely libelous if written and not judicially privileged. Is it not a fact, Mr. Untermyer, that when the vice chancellor's opinion was published by the New York Herald in 1906 you so accurately perceived the serious character of the implication that you wrote to that newspaper styling the opinion a mere "document," on the ground that the suit had been settled with the court's approval two months before the official publication of Judge Pitney's opinion, and warning the Herald that it was "not protected in it as being the record of a judicial proceeding"? Did you ever bring that libel suit, Mr. Untermyer? And how about the opinion of Mr. Justice Brown of the Supreme Court of the United States?—A. (By Mr. Untermyer)——

Q. If you have nothing to offer as a champion in stockholders' rights and an expert in protection against astute promoters, you are excused from the stand for the present, Mr. Untermyer, particularly as you must be very busy with the members of the Pujo subcommittee now preparing their report on evil financial methods.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this is no attack upon Mr. Untermyer, of Wall Street, this is no attack upon Mr. Brandeis, but it is an attack upon that condition of affairs which the Democratic Party thrust the country into at the beginning of its administration in this House, when it made the bald pretense that it proposed to economize; when it told the people of the country it was the friend of the poor and the downtrodden. It is humiliating that the committee should now be compelled under dire necessity, for lack of ability amongst the great Democratic lawyers here, to obtain the services even of so distinguished a champion of the poor as Mr. Samuel Untermyer, of New York.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], coming from the quiet city on the Schuylkill, has again broken loose this morning, and his tirade to-day is principally against the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Now, the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts needs no defense from me, but the truth of the matter is I have a very warm spot in my heart for that rugged, rocky north shore above Boston. Once upon a time I made a speech to a young lady way up on those rocks, and that young lady is now my wife. I am reminded of the story that is told of a young lady from the city of Philadelphia who was visiting her school friend in Boston. She had strolled around that city for a few days and finally one morning said to her friend, "Elizabeth, how in the world do you ever get around in this city with its crooked streets and byways? Every time I go out I have to hold on to the buildings to be sure that I am on the same side of the street that I started out on. Now, down in Philadelphia everything is laid out as nice and straight as could be, and you just ought to come down there and let me show you around." Her Boston friend replied, "Well, Mary, when Boston is as dead as Philadelphia, she will be laid out nice and straight too." [Laughter.]

But to the question at issue, I think the American people are well satisfied with the work and results of our investigating committees.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the wail of the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. MOORE] is pathetic. The gentleman mournfully complains of the work done and being done by the investigating committees appointed by the Democratic House. The Republican Party had been in control so long that it was absolutely necessary to make these investigations so that we could have the facts of conditions before us when we were ready to remedy the evils that have sprung up under Republican administrations. [Applause.] These committees have brought to light information that the people were unable to obtain before the Democrats got control of this House. This information will be of great value to the President and the Congress during the Wilson administration. In these closing hours of a Republican administration, Republicans squirm under the white light of Democratic investigations, and, Mr. Chairman—

The Republican swan,
In his latest breath,
Chants bitterest strains
And sings himself to death.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. In a criticism, which I think was entirely warranted, I have succeeded in drawing forth considerable discussion, culminating in one of the entertaining stories we are always glad to get from the gentleman from Alabama. But I do not want this discussion to be left at this point and to overlook the real vice I undertook to point out in my opening remarks. We appointed a committee to investigate the Money Trust. I thought at the time it ought to be a special committee selected for that particular purpose, but the Banking and Currency Committee insisted upon the exercise of their function and considered they had jurisdiction. A limit of expenditures was put upon the committee, as I remember, of $25,000, and they proceeded with their work—and the methods of procedure were somewhat astounding—which culminated in the presentation of a bill or request for further authorization of something like $26,000, covering confessedly unauthorized expenditures that they had obligated themselves to make, and it appeared that $15,000 of that item was for the employment of counsel and some $2,600 for the work of a throat specialist. Now, I believe there was a great opportunity for this committee to perform a good task. I believe they brought out some things of value to the country, but nothing compared with what they could have done if they had given a real congressional investigation without the dominating direction of special counsel selected from the very environment of the things which they were expected to investigate. Have you heard of any Guggenheims, a name prominent in financial circles, testifying before that committee as to whether there is a Money Trust? Have you heard testifying among the bankers one of the largest and, so far as I know, most respectable, Kuhn, Loeb & Co.? I protest, simply as a Member of the House who sincerely voted for the investigation of the Money Trust, against the method which has subverted the purposes and intentions of that investigation. Now, then, if that committee of 8 lawyers in a Democratic membership of 11, and 1 physician and 2 bankers is not able to properly go into these facts without the necessity of employing special counsel, I would have suggested—and I presume it would have been suggested if the committee had frankly come before the House before they increased their obligations beyond the limit which the resolution authorized them—I would have suggested that if that committee found it necessary, with eight lawyers, to employ another one, that they should procure a lawyer outside of the environment of the things to be investigated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The original resolution, voted for by the gentleman, authorized the employment of counsel.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. But the amount of appropriation was limited, and then I did protest in a mild way against that——

Mr. COVINGTON. I am sure the gentleman from South Dakota does not want to put the Committee on Banking and Currency in a false attitude. He certainly must be informed that the great head of the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., Jacob H. Schiff, was before the committee and was exhaustively examined. The ramifications of that firm extend to financial groups in Wall Street beyond the sphere of Morgan & Co.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I certainly do not desire to place any Member of this House, nor any other person, in any false light, and if I am mistaken it is on account of my limited knowledge of Wall Street; and in regard to the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., I am not making any animadversions upon the firm. I understand it is one of the best, but I am talking about the partial investigation that always results from the taking of a man from the very environment which the investigation is intended to cover.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman voted for the resolution authorizing this investigation?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly; but I did not vote for the $26,000 expended by it without authority.

Mr. HARDWICK. But the gentleman voted for the provision that this committee should have counsel, undoubtedly?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes; I voted for the resolution.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then you voted for this provision?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I have not anything to clear my skirts from.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If it became necessary to employ counsel for the committee, which I deny—and the suggestion is a reflection upon the great ability of the lawyers on that committee and others of the House—the proprieties of the case should have suggested that the committee go outside of the particular locality, namely, Wall Street, which was to be investigated, to employ their counsel. And then there was impropriety, the counsel being selected from that locality, in turning the whole investigation over to him, the questioning of witnesses, adopting a resolution that no Member should be expected to question witnesses, and then in allowing the counsel to proceed down to Palm Beach, and in the quietude of his vacation to prepare words to put in the mouth of the legislators of this body. This is a degeneration of the proper proceeding of a congressional committee. I want to record my protest against it, and to suggest that any further expense money that may be asked for that sort of proceeding ought to receive the condemnation of this body.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RAKER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 28750) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. BURNHAM, and Mr. SHIVELY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 28766) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For folding speeches, to continue available during the fiscal year 1914, $3,000.

Mr. OLMSTED, Mr. BUTLER, and Mr. KAHN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is recognized.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to this debate this morning, and I believe the House is entitled to know and should know who received any emoluments from any of these investigating committees. I have spoken to the chairman of the Committee on Accounts, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD], who told me that that committee does not print the names of persons who have received and are receiving pay during these investigations. I think the House is entitled to know and should know who was in the employ of the various committees of investigation. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] says that $330,000 was expended in these investigations. I am told that there was a gentleman named McRae who received $15,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman had been in here earlier, he would not have made that statement. I stated the amount expended by each committee, and it aggregates $112,000.

Mr. GILLETT. That does not include printing, does it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. The expense of printing is never included in that way.

Mr. GILLETT. That is a very large expenditure, is it not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I understand the gentleman from Wyoming——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not accept statements of gentlemen who are not informed concerning these matters.

Mr. KAHN. I accept the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. MONDELL. That statement I made is correct—$330,000 in two years.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] again asserts that in two years $330,000 has been spent. The gentleman from New York states that $112,000 has been spent. In either case, it was a very large amount. The discrepancy shows that it would be well if the amounts paid to all employees of investigating committees were printed in itemized statements. I believe the House should know who received every dollar of the amount expended and every purpose for which money has been expended during these numerous investigations.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. In this particular instance that is being discussed the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO] did put in the RECORD the items for which this money was paid out and gave the names of the gentlemen who were to receive it.

Mr. KAHN. True, in that particular instance, he did; but there have been dozens of investigations in this Congress. This Congress has been called "the Congress of a thousand investigations."

Mr. LLOYD. If the gentleman desires, if he will read the report that is made by the committee in this particular case in the bill now pending, he will find the statement of every dollar that has been expended by these investigating committees, and it does not amount to as much as $100,000.

Mr. KAHN. Are those expenditures itemized?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir. Look at the hearings, on page——

Mr. GARNER. May I say to the gentleman——

Mr. LLOYD. It is an itemized statement, so far as the amount is concerned, which has been expended by each investigating committee. If the gentleman wants to know just what has been expended by any committee, if he will come downstairs to the Committee on Accounts, he will find the books are open, and he can examine for himself and ascertain every dollar that has been allowed to anybody and for what purpose.

Mr. KAHN. I do not criticize the Committee on Accounts; I have the highest regard for the chairman and all the members of that committee. They perform a difficult duty, and perform it well; but I think the House has a right to know the name of every individual who received any of this money.

Now, I am told—I do not know, but I am told—that there was a gentleman by the name of McRea, who was employed by the steel investigating committee. He received something like $15,000 as an expert accountant, and I am told that the full result of his expertness was in digging up some facts that the Steel Trust itself was willing to volunteer, and did volunteer. I do not know whether that be true or not, but I have heard that statement made. At any rate, I think this House is entitled to know the name of every man who received any money as an employee, as an expert, or as an accountant during these investigations.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman; certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to say in reference to the employment of Mr. McRea that he was employed by the authority of the full committee, participated in by both the minority and majority of the committee, and that his bill for services was first approved, after it was rendered, by a special committee, in which the minority was represented, and before the subcommittee would recommend its payment it was carried before the full committee and investigated and approved.

Mr. KAHN. How much was it?

Mr. BARTLETT. I think the gentleman has stated it correctly, $15,000 for a year's work.

Mr. KAHN. I think he was employed at the rate of $50 a day. I think that was the agreement, and the total amount paid him was $15,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. I am told that in the Sugar Trust investigation there was a gentleman paid $700 for indexing, and that the index work is not yet done for the second volume.

Now, the House has a right to know these things. Gentlemen on the other side have seen fit to cast a doubt on the integrity of many worthy men employed in the Government service in various capacities, and a multitude of investigations were ordered. They have found practically nothing, and yet it has cost the country thousands, yes, hundreds of thousands, of dollars.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Was there any one of these committees that did not have a minority Republican representation on it?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, there is no doubt but that the committees did have minority Republican representation. But the full result of the work of the committees is nothing. You found absolutely nothing, although you tried to work a big political scheme by muddying the waters and leading the people of the United States to believe that there was rottenness in the Government. [Applause on the Republican side.] And after investigating all the departments and bureaus of the Government for two years you have found practically nothing upon which to predicate a single substantial charge against any employee of the Federal Government. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Now that the gentleman has gotten rid of his opinion, may I ask him as to one other matter of fact? Has any Republican member of any investigating committee of which the gentleman complains risen in his place on this floor to complain of an expenditure as being unjust or unwarranted? And if he has not, why not, if the gentleman's position is right?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, the gentleman must know that I do not complain of these expenditures myself. I simply say that the House and the country have the right to know who were the recipients of the salaries and allowances that were made by the committees.

I will say, further, that, notwithstanding you have made all kinds of investigations, you have unearthed not a single thing that was worth the time or the expenditure that you permitted during this entire Congress. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California yielded to me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman's time is up.

I just wish to say this: If the gentleman were as familiar with the facts as he is glib with his statements, he would be more careful as to what he says to the House.

As the result of the investigation of the Steel Trust, it may be of interest to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] to know that a suit was precipitated against the United States Steel Corporation by the Attorney General to anticipate what was being done, and a distinguished former member of a Republican Cabinet was retained as a special counsel. This bill carries the balance of the money necessary to pay him $40,000 for his services up to date.

Another investigation originating on this side of the House resulted in the retirement of a member of the Cabinet during the present administration. The gentleman speaks of no results having been attained by these investigations. He should not forget some things very unpleasant to his own party.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that all this debate be closed.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I want just half a minute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Kentucky inquired if any Republican member of one of these committees had ever protested against the expenditures of these investigating committees. I want to state that, as one member of a Committee on Expenditures, I have repeatedly protested against the expenses that were being incurred by that committee and against the employment of counsel.

Mr. SHERLEY. What committee?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

Mr. SHERLEY. That was in connection with the investigation by the committee of which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] was chairman?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. That was paid out of the contingent fund.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say for the benefit of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] that I hold in my hand the annual report of the Clerk of the House, in which are printed vouchers containing the names, services, and amounts paid to every person and chargeable against the contingent fund of the House; the gentleman, without any more than a due amount of industry, by obtaining the annual report of the Clerk of the House, can procure in print all of the information for which he is clamoring. My impression is that gentlemen do not wish information so much as they desire an opportunity to make sensational and unfounded statements.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say to the gentleman that I am as earnest in seeking information as he is and that my purpose was not to make any sensational statement. I went to the chairman of the Committee on Accounts to find out whether these items were printed. He told me they were not, and I believed and still believe they ought to be printed, and I am glad to learn that they are printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They had not been printed at that time. They are printed at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. The chairman of the Committee on Accounts has nothing to do with the printing.

Mr. KAHN. I asked the chairman of the Committee on Accounts this morning.

Mr. LLOYD. If the gentleman will permit me, there is no difference between us when we understand each other. The gentleman from California asked me if these accounts were printed, and I said, "No; they are not printed yet, and they will not be printed until the report of the Clerk is printed at some time in the future."

Mr. KAHN. Then, I am right, and the gentleman from New York is wrong.

Mr. LLOYD. The gentleman from New York is right, because all these things will be printed in their regular order. We have now the report of the expenditures during the last fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. They are printed annually.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course, they can not be printed before they are made.

Mr. MANN. The accounts can not be printed before they are made up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am going to insist now that the debate be germane to the bill. We have had enough irrelevant debate.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania has an amendment, I am not going to preclude him from discussing it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the paragraph as follows.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 44, line 4, by striking out the last word.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I have moved to strike out the much-abused last word for the purpose of putting in what may be my own last word.

Whatever items in this bill may be proper subjects of criticism, it should be remembered that they were not put there by the Committee on Appropriations until they had been authorized by this House. Therefore the blame, if any, does not rest with that committee.

On the 21st of December, 1911, I notified my worthy constituents by open letter published in all the newspapers of my district that I should not again be a candidate for election to this House. I shall retire from this body next Tuesday. This bill, upon which we shall vote in a few minutes, is the last of the great appropriation bills to be passed in this Congress, and is therefore the last in the passage or preparation of which I shall take part.

I have been a member of the Committee on Appropriations for some time, and wish to say that if there is any gentleman in this House or out of it who thinks that Congressmen do not earn their salaries, he ought to sit for a time on that committee. Its labors and investigations extend to every item of property owned by the Government and to every activity of the Government on land and on sea, and in every island of the sea over which our flag floats. These labors are not always pleasant. They are always arduous, but often the committee gets more kicks than compliments for its very best service.

I remember to have met some years ago a member of the President's Cabinet in very bad humor. He had been before the Committee on Appropriations. They had questioned him sharply and cut down his estimates. "Confound JOE CANNON," he began, and then he stopped and added, "but I love him for his rugged honesty and for his unfaltering courage." [Applause.] "And I guess he has saved this country millions of dollars, for probably, if every department got all it wanted, we would soon empty the Treasury."

The distinguished gentleman who, as chairman of the Appropriations Committee, saved hundreds of millions of dollars to the Treasury, and then was elected and served four terms as Speaker of this House, is now the ranking minority member of the committee and, although in his seventy-seventh year, is as active and attentive to his duties to-day as any member of the committee or of this House. He is there by day and there by night. The labors of subcommittees frequently do extend into the night. I desire also to say for the present chairman, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], that he is faithful, earnest, intelligent, industrious, painstaking, and patriotic in his labors. And so are all the members of the committee, as much so as possibly could be expected of any set of men. [Applause.]

I could not leave the House without this word of commendation. The committee is composed of 14 Democrats and 7 Republicans, but I have never heard in that committee room a single suggestion of partisanship; it has never entered into the consideration in the framing of any bill since I have been a member.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on Tuesday next I shall retire from this House after a service of 16 years, from a district which has never before returned a man more than for two consecutive terms. These 16 years have been wonderful years in the history of this country. Arising from the depressed conditions of 1896, it entered upon a period of unexampled prosperity and has experienced a growth of national power and greatness unparalleled in the history of nations.

Within that period we have successfully carried on a foreign war, concluded an honorable peace, paid the expenses of the war and repealed the war taxes, wrested Cuba from the cruel hand of Spain and established there a new Republic, freed the Philippines and Porto Rico from the same grasp and given them freer and better forms of government than they had ever before enjoyed and with as much of self-government as they are at present fitted to enjoy, we have annexed Hawaii and made it a Territory of the United States, and by creating three new States we have added three stars to the flag.

Within that period we have firmly established the currency upon a gold basis. We have created two new great departments of Government, thus adding two members to the President's Cabinet. We have established new and important bureaus in other departments; we have commenced and carried well toward completion the Panama Canal, that stupendous undertaking which is destined to be of great and lasting benefit to the whole country; we have established and carried into operation throughout the land the rural free-delivery service, bringing the American farmer into touch with all the world; we have established the postal savings-bank system; we have established the parcel post; a deficit in the National Treasury has been converted into a surplus; within that period of 16 years we have passed constructive, progressive, remedial, regulative, and beneficial laws which, if we except those incident to the Civil War, exceed in importance all the previous legislation of Congress from the time when Frederick Muhlenberg of Pennsylvania, the first Speaker, ascended that rostrum and assumed the gavel, which you, Mr. Speaker, now so skillfully wield.

Within that period our population has increased 50 per cent; the amount of money in circulation in this country has more than doubled; the amount paid out annually in wages for labor has more than doubled; the annual value of our agricultural products has more than doubled; the business of our railroads and the products of our mines and of our factories has more than doubled; our exports and our imports have each more than doubled—in short, the great volume of our commerce, both foreign and domestic, has more than doubled within the past 16 years.

We upon this side of the aisle think that the great growth and prosperity of the country is attributable in large measure to Republican ascendancy in the National Government. Some of you upon that side think that it has occurred in spite of such ascendancy. You hope and believe that after the 4th of March there will be continued growth and prosperity because of Democratic control. We have some misgivings, but hope that prosperity will continue notwithstanding Democratic control.

We all struggle for the same end although we differ in regard to methods and principles of government. Speaking for myself, and I believe for every gentleman upon this side of the House, we can not agree with you in your policies, but we credit you gentlemen upon the other side with the same patriotic desires and impulses which actuate us. We all hope and pray for the prosperity of our country.

I wish to express my appreciation of the many kindnesses and courtesies received at the hands of my fellow Members. I shall return to my home bearing in my heart the kindest feelings toward each and every one, and the associations and friendships formed here will be with me as precious memories to the end of my days. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, after the beautiful speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], whose coming departure we all regret, I am not disposed to further refer to matters in controversy. I should not do so if it were not for the fact that some figures I quoted a short time ago seem to have been questioned. The item on which I made my statement is this:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, exclusive of salaries and labor, unless specifically ordered by the House of Representatives, fiscal years as follows.

Following which are two items, one of $75,000, a deficiency in 1913, and one of $10,000, a deficiency in 1912. This is a regular item of appropriation carried on appropriation bills for many years. Under this item of appropriation the expenditure for 10 years prior to 1912 under Republican administrations averaged $95,000 per annum. On the other hand, in the year 1912, during this Democratic House, the appropriation was $75,000 and the deficiency was $105,000, or a total of $180,000. For 1913 the appropriation was $75,000, and the deficiency now asked and just granted is $85,00, a total of $160,000, being a total for two years not of $330,000, as I stated a moment ago, but $340,000. That makes $170,000 per annum for special and select committees under Democratic economy, as compared with $95,000 per annum under so-called Republican extravagance.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. LLOYD. The gentleman does not wish to leave the impression upon the House that the $95,000 expended under Republican administration was for select committees of investigation, and I take it that the gentleman does not want to leave the impression upon the House that the $170,000 to which he refers is on account of select and special committees, but it is the whole of the contingent fund. It includes any expenditures which may be made out of that fund. It includes the amount expended on account of the death of employees; it includes expenditures on account of telephones, telegrams, and a great many other items which I shall not take the time to enumerate.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri is usually accurate, and always wants to be, but he is unfortunately inaccurate in this matter. I read the item of appropriation, and, so far as I know, it has not been changed in years:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, exclusive of salaries and labor, unless specifically ordered——

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I am not questioning the gentleman's statement. I am only asking him, if he can, to make a segregation of expense. The first part of this item is miscellaneous expense, and as I remember it the items under the last Republican administration of $95,000 were nearly all miscellaneous expense.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman is through with his exposition of lack of information, I will proceed. I again say, and I read from the RECORD, that the items to which I formerly referred, the item to which I now refer, is as follows, and I know that no Republican Congress ever violated the terms of the law. What a Democratic Congress may have done in violation of it I know not. The item is:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, exclusive of salaries and labor,

And so forth.

Under a Republican administration for 10 years we spent $95,000, approximately, per annum, and under Democratic so-called economy and muck-raking we have spent last year and this $170,000 per annum.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], both of whom are generally very frank—neither of whom I charge with any responsibility for this extravagance—have pleaded guilty on behalf of their party to the charge of extravagance and unwisdom, shall I say, lack of wisdom in the expenditure of these sums?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, my time was largely taken by an interruption of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD]. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. In order that I may not be compelled to take the time of the committee in discussion of an item soon to be reached, I desire to call attention to the fact that this bill carries a deficiency of $285,000 for the Printing Office. I do not know how much of this deficiency is by reason of the printing of the voluminous reports of these special committees, but I am of the opinion that practically all of it is due to such printing. Therefore, we must add to the very great sums I have just referred to, this additional item of $285,000 for printing.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman aware that one Member of this House is said to have sent many carloads of printing, as the result of one of these investigations, into his own State?

Mr. MONDELL. I was not personally aware of that fact, though I have heard rumors of it.

Mr. MANN. Mail sacks by the hundreds went out under frank of one Member of this House.

Mr. MONDELL. I am glad to have that interesting information.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no question as to its accuracy, for I know, and we all know, that tons of literature have been sent out, due to the activities of these special committees.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I have only five minutes.

Mr. HARDWICK. I was not here when the gentleman began. I take it the gentleman does not refer to me. I was at the head of one of these investigating committees——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not refer to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to say that, in my opinion, the investigation conducted by the gentleman from Georgia and his committee was conducted economically and was a very useful investigation indeed——

Mr. HARDWICK. I am obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. And brought out many interesting facts. Now, it has been said here we have not protested against these expenditures. The gentleman from South Dakota and I have repeatedly protested against the expenditures of a committee of which I was a member. It is a fact that any crank, any evil-disposed person, haunting corridors of the Capitol, no matter how irresponsible, could secure the ear and attention of the majority members of these committees, and, absolving Members from any disposition to do anything but perform their duty, I know, and I think others know, that many of these investigations were instituted on the suggestion of people who had miserable personal grievances to air and who had no desire to serve the public interest. The expenditures made and the time wasted do not reflect credit on the American Congress. Some of these investigations started with a flourish of trumpets and beat of drums suddenly subsided into stillness compared with which the voiceless silence of a clam is a cyclone. The Dick-to-Dick letter, the investigation of Controller Bay heralded throughout the Nation and suddenly never heard of more, the Chief Executive of our great Nation brought into question in regard to his veracity and good faith, the newspapers carrying it to the ends of the earth, all based upon a miserable falsehood—these are samples of some of the things done under these appropriations. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment and ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses under the resolution of the House of Representatives adopted January 10, 1913, to procure and install the necessary furniture and furnishings for the Hall of Representatives in accommodating and seating the Members of the House of the Sixty-third Congress and to do all such other things as may be necessary in the preparation of the Hall of Representatives for the assembling of the Sixty-third Congress, under the direction and supervision of the Commission to Rearrange and Reconstruct the Hall of the House of Representatives, $25,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, after line 14, insert: "The Maltby Building is transferred to the control of the commission in charge of the House Office Building, and rooms therein shall be assigned for use of Members of the House of Representatives who can not be accommodated in the House Office Building in the same manner and under similar conditions as rooms are assigned in the House Office Building."

Mr. MANN. Of course, I understand the purpose of this is to take care of the surplus Members in the Maltby Building who can not be accommodated in the House Office Building. Is there sufficient room in the Maltby Building which will be ready by the 1st of April to provide rooms for all the Members of the House who desire them in that building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Superintendent of the Capitol informs us that there is, and also the necessary furniture, and that it requires only a little work in cleaning up.

Mr. MANN. These rooms in the Maltby Building are of sufficient size to take care of the Members?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand so. I have not examined it, but the Superintendent of the Capitol did; and he says the rooms are ample and that the accommodations will be very suitable.

Mr. MANN. As a matter of fact, those Members who have not yet been accorded filings in the House Office Building are not likely to suffer materially by going to the Maltby Building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They will be very comfortably located; but most of the Members seem to be desirous of being in the House Office Building. All of the rooms there are assigned, and it is impossible to obtain more than 14 or 15 additional in the present building.

Mr. MANN. Well, the Members like to go to the House Office Building now, but I recall when I had the chairmanship of the committee on the assignment of rooms in the House Office Building very few of those who were in the Capitol Building wanted to get out. It seems like home now, and yet they want to be there; but these new Members—and, necessarily, they will be new Members in the main—in the Maltby Building when they are located there will feel like they are at home there; and I think will be perfectly satisfied, as much as they would be in the office building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, it is the only accommodation that can be afforded.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, line 10, after the word "Congress," insert a comma and the following: "To fumigate and thoroughly cleanse the Hall of Representatives and all the furniture thereof."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee can see their way clear to permit this amendment to be made. It does not do violence to the paragraph, and would be in line of direction to those who are charged with the care and cleaning of the House.

I call the attention of the committee to the fact that we have just passed a paragraph which provides allowances for widows of several Members of the House who died during the third session of this Sixty-second Congress, four of them Democrats and three of them Republicans. Since the Sixty-second Congress began the mortality rate here has been tremendous, greater than it has been for very many years. We have lost altogether 18 Members of the House, while 7 Members of the Senate have died. Now, some of the Members who have died have died of tuberculosis. Every Member understands full well that the air of this Hall becomes very much congested toward the end of the day. We have here an average attendance on the floor and in the galleries of probably 600 every day, and toward the evening, and after a hard day's work, the close, tight air becomes enervating and depressing, and perhaps the beating of the carpets by the pattering of the footsteps up and down stir up the sputum and the dirt and the filth that naturally cling to this carpet, and these germs probably rest on the ledges and hold there from Congress to Congress until some breath of air scatters them through the House.

This could be remedied very readily by fumigation, with very little expense, and it would remove all possibility of danger in the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If that be necessary, the Superintendent of the Capitol has the authority, and this appropriation is all that is needed to meet the obligations that have been incurred. It should not be inserted here.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would add to the other work that would be done during the interim.

Mr. MANN. This room during the recess will be stripped apart, the carpets will be taken up, and the floor will be taken up and made over again. What would you fumigate?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman mean to say the mere taking up of these carpets and bringing them back would remove live germs?

Mr. MANN. The floor will be taken up.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are these carpets to be returned?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; they are not. There are to be new carpets.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if it is contemplated in the rearrangement of the House to put carpets upon the floor as they are now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is; yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Have any steps been taken looking to the matter of providing some different covering for the floor in place of carpet, as we have now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been discussed frequently. It was suggested, for instance, that in the special session it might be desirable to put in matting, but these rises in the floors are circular, and you could not get matting so it would fit. A year or two ago the Superintendent of the Capitol investigated the question of substituting some different floor material, but he was unable to reach the conclusion that it would be a desirable change to make.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me if there is any material different from a carpet, which holds all the dirt, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], it ought to be looked into and we ought to secure that kind of a covering for the room. It is well understood now and every good woman, who has charge of a house, and everyone who is looking after sanitary conditions, believes that with carpets such as this is here, which is necessary to remain on the floor all the time, with the constant walking over them, which stirs up the dust, we are continually breathing the impurities that may be on the floor of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have about three minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] yield for one question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman recall the meeting at which Col. Gorgas spoke here one evening and remember how packed the place was both on the floor and in the galleries, and how there was a constant hacking and coughing throughout the whole evening by men and women, simply because these germ particles had arisen from the carpets and had penetrated their nostrils and their throats?

Mr. FOSTER. There is no question about that, and people walking through the halls coughing may not expectorate on the carpets; but the very fact of them coughing and that some sputum may come from the mouth, which becomes pulverized and dried, and then stirred up by walking, it is likely to be breathed. I am not able to tell how many people may contract tuberculosis in that way, but it is a well-settled fact now that in all cities, where they look after the sanitary conditions, they try to get rid as much as possible of that kind of material where it would harbor any dust that might convey germs.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Of course my colleague is familiar with the House Office Building and with the floors in the rooms there and how they are covered. Does the gentleman know of any room where the Member occupying it is doing without a rug and is using the concrete floor—itself rather artistic, and certainly free from dust?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I will say that there are not so many people in any individual room in the House Office Building as there are in this House.

Mr. MANN. That is true.

Mr. FOSTER. And there is not the trampling in the rooms of the House Office Building that there is here, stirring up the dust; and surely my colleague will agree with me that this carpet is not a good covering to have on the floor if we can secure anything else.

Mr. MANN. Well, when the House Office Building was established I was rather insistent on having floors of concrete placed there and painted, without any other covering, on the ground of health.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The floors there are of concrete, painted, and ready to be scrubbed.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CULLOP). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my colleague have five minutes more. I took some of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks that his colleague [Mr. FOSTER] be permitted to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, every Member of the House desired to have a rug on the floor of his room over there, and usually he had some particular notion as to what the color of the rug should be. When I went into my quarters in a committee room over there some years ago I nearly paralyzed an officer of this House when I asked him to take the carpet off the floor.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my colleague is very sensible on that.

Mr. MANN. And, notwithstanding that, during my service in the House I am growing fat.

Mr. FOSTER. I realize that, and I realize that a man may grow fat on account of some disease that he has contracted. But that does not affect the argument that these carpets may breed disease. If that is not true, then all the sanitary science of the country must be thrown away, and every man must go out and live according to his own notions. My colleague is not in favor of that, I am sure. In the House Office Building we have rugs, it is true, but they are easily removed, and the floor cleaned and the rugs cleaned, so that the situation there is not like what it is in this House of Representatives.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is speaking very interestingly on the subject of sanitation, and he is an authority on that subject.

Mr. FOSTER. No; I do not pretend to be.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; I think he is. I would like to have his opinion about the chances of contamination from the use of the public drinking cups here in this House. There is not a schoolhouse——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not interject that into this discussion.

Mr. WILLIS. Just a moment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am opposed to that.

Mr. WILLIS. There is not a schoolhouse or public place in the country where they pretend to enforce public sanitation but where the public drinking cup, which is an abomination, has not been put out of use. What does the gentleman think of that?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio is a very pertinent one, and if I had my way I would do away with every public drinking cup in this building and supply sanitary drinking cups at the expense of the Government, so that every person visiting this Capitol could secure one.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I suppose the gentleman has noticed that that has been done at the Senate end of the Capitol. How long does the gentleman think it will take the House to catch up with the Senate?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I could not tell.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. What is the motion pending before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The debate on the amendment has expired. The proceedings are now going on by unanimous consent.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] asks for a vote.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose there is a public hall in the United States that is as poorly ventilated as this Hall, provided for the Representatives of the people.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman ever examined the ventilating apparatus of this Hall?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Oh, we have a little ventilation, with impure air coming up from the subway through underground passages.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman evidently has not examined the ventilating apparatus of this House. I venture to say that there is not another building on earth that has as perfect ventilation as this Hall of the House of Representatives.

Mr. LAFFERTY. After the gentleman has served here for many years I find that his megaphone is in very poor condition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Much better than when he came here, I will say.

Mr. LAFFERTY. It must have been in an awful fix when he came, then.

Mr. MANN. Unlike some Members of the House, I do not carry a megaphone. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAFFERTY. Eighteen Members of this House have died during this session, and it is authoritatively stated that many of them died from lung disease.

Mr. MANN. During this session?

Mr. LAFFERTY. During this Congress. This Hall is located inside of other rooms. We have not a single outside window opening into this Hall. No ray of sunlight can penetrate this Hall at any angle. I say that this ancient roof, although it bears the coats of arms of many of the States, should be completely removed and a modern roof put on it, so that it can be raised during the long, hot, summer months, and let the pure air of heaven and the purifying rays of the sunlight come into this old musty Hall and give health and vigor to the men who are sent here [applause]; because I know that there is no place in the United States where men are compelled to work harder than they do as Members of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, many Members of the House who have not served here very long, and who have given very little attention to what is actually around the House, have the impression that the Hall of this House is badly ventilated. No system of ventilation is possible which will keep the air pure in a room filled with a large number of men without creating a draft, which is objectionable to them. Underneath the floor of this Hall is a room that is as clean as clean can be. Into that room air is conducted from a distance from the building on the outside, through a clean conduit, bringing absolutely fresh air from the outside, air as fresh as can be found anywhere near the Capitol. That is brought into the room beneath the floor of this Hall. There the air is warmed. It comes up through the floor of the House. At the top there is a fan which would blow my heavyweight friend from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] out of the building if he should get in front of it; as strong an exhaust as can be had without creating an objectionable draft. Now, the opening of the roof to the outside, instead of aiding the ventilation of the building, would destroy it; because then the exhaust, instead of taking the air from the lower part of the room, would take the pure air from the roof and from the outside, and give no circulation at all.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I understand the cold air comes from below and the hot air from right here on the floor.

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman speaks, that often happens. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I agree with much that the gentleman has said, but there is one thing that I think could be devised that would remedy conditions very much here if, instead of the laborers coming in here and sweeping after adjournment and then sealing up the place and getting out as quickly as they can, they had a modern method of cleaning the floor by suction.

Mr. MANN. Throwing open the windows would not help the ventilation, because the ventilation is going on all the time and taking the air from the bottom, where the foul air is. Gentlemen assume that they want outside windows open. The commission on remodeling the Hall of the House had that under consideration for a long time. I venture to say that no committee appointed by this House to consider the subject would in the end move any wall of this room to the outside.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Can not some arrangement be made to carry off the bad air that occurs in the House by putting it into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. MANN. Much of it is done that way, and the gentleman from New York contributes his share.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of additional rooms at the House Office Building and for each and every purpose connected therewith, to be expended under the commission in control of the House Office Building, $220,370, to continue available until expended.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I notice that this item is quite a large one, over $220,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is to put an extra story on the court side of the House Office Building, providing 49 additional rooms.

Mr. MILLER. I notice the language is "for each and every purpose connected therewith." Will that make available any of this fund for furniture in any of the offices now existing?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; this is not for furniture. This is to enable the Superintendent of the Capitol to employ additional technical service, to do whatever is necessary in the work of construction, without having his accounts held up by the auditor.

Mr. MILLER. It may not be applicable here, but I would like to ask the gentleman, if he can answer, out of what fund are bookcases and things like that purchased?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The item of "Furniture and materials for repair of same," on the top of page 44.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to ask the gentleman if there has been any increase in the amount?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a deficiency of $29,500, $4,500 of which is for new carpet in the Hall of the House and $25,000 on account of typewriters purchased and additional ones which must be purchased at the beginning of the session.

Mr. MILLER. In my humble judgment, there is nothing more seriously needed in the House Office Building than some refurnishing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In what particular?

Mr. MILLER. Some of us have been trying for four years to get a bookcase, but are always informed that there are no funds available, and that one bookcase is all that is allowed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is all that is necessary.

Mr. MILLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it may be for some, but not for others.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We can not have a library in every office.

Mr. MILLER. I do not care to have a library, but a little cheap bookcase is hardly sufficient.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Those bookcases are not cheap.

Mr. MILLER. If they can be made any cheaper, I do not know how.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are mahogany. That is a matter entirely under the direction of the Clerk of the House as to the furniture to be placed in the rooms.

Mr. MILLER. The Clerk of the House always says he would be glad to do it, but he has no appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He is given all he asks for.

Mr. MILLER. Then the matter of the filing cabinets—they are extremely antiquated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A good deal of criticism of the furniture has been made, but the Clerk informed the committee that he was supplying to the best of his ability the modern filing cases for Members.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to know how to secure one.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman should apply to the Clerk.

Mr. MILLER. What words shall I use in order to get one, for I have not been successful so far?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not procured anything for myself, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary at all for the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to tell the gentleman from Minnesota how to get things.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is correct.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have noticed that the gentleman knows, without any suggestions from anybody, how to get anything he wants.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman fails to get anything around here, I do not know anyone who succeeds.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the kindness and the generosity of the gentlemen in their feeling toward me. I am merely bringing this up to call to the attention of the House many things that I think ought to be changed. The gentlemen who are fortunate enough by virtue of their ability and position to occupy chairmanships of committees are not in any of these straights. They have ample quarters, all of the fixtures that they need, and have excellent up-to-date filing cases, but with the average new Member, and some who are not so new, he finds himself confronted with office fixtures and furniture not up to date and not usable in handling business expeditiously.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The particular article of furniture to which the gentleman refers——

Mr. MILLER. There is no filing cabinet originally provided in these rooms that is fit to be used anywhere.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was not on the commission that selected the furniture. It was supposed to be a desirable piece.

Mr. MILLER. It is a beautiful piece of furniture, but it is not usable.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has not turned out to be satisfactory. The Clerk says that he is furnishing, as quickly as possible, the modern flat filing cabinet.

Mr. MILLER. I will ask the gentleman if in his judgment he does not think it wise to appropriate either in this bill or in the legislative bill in the next Congress, a few thousand dollars for extending the up-to-date filing devices to other Members who have not heretofore been successful in getting them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

The Chair would call the attention of the gentleman from New York to what is evidently a misprint. The Chair refers to the word "purposes" in line 16, page 44. The "s" should be stricken out there, leaving the word "purpose," and without objection it will be so amended.

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to get the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. I notice that on page 44, lines 15 to 19, inclusive, there is a provision for $220,370 for the construction of additional office rooms in the office building. What is the proposition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is to raise the attic story of the interior of the building. It gives another story on the court side of the building.

Mr. MADDEN. On the interior?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; on the court side.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not the court side of the building as high as the outside of the building at the present time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not remember, but at any rate, the statement is made that the additional story can not be seen from the outside. The roof is so arranged that it can not be seen from the outside.

Mr. MANN. The court side, of course, as far as the roof is concerned, is the same, but the outside of the building is raised high enough, as far as the front is concerned, to permit of the construction of this extra story without its being seen from the outside.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was the intention in the original structure.

Mr. MADDEN. So that they can carry up the outside wall around the court to the height of the outside wall on the street side and make an additional story?

Mr. MANN. On the inside.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not exactly. It makes an additional story on the interior, but not on the exterior of the building.

Mr. MADDEN. So that there will be five stories on the inside and four stories on the outside?

Mr. MANN. That is right.

Mr. MADDEN. Can that be done without destroying the symmetry of the building as you look upon it from the street?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the statement of the Superintendent of the Capitol.

Mr. MANN. One can not see it at all. That was contemplated when the building was constructed.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has asked the same question that I was going to put. Is it possible to put an additional story around that court without its being observable from this end of the plaza?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the statement I make, for I asked that question myself.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman will remember that for a time they did have something on top there over the elevator shafts. It looked very bad indeed from this end of the plaza.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The original plan of the building contemplated this additional story on the interior of the court.

Mr. MANN. I can say to the gentleman this will not require the raising of the center of the roof at all. The roof there runs down from the center toward the front and toward the court, and the court side can be raised a full story without raising the center of the roof at all.

Mr. MADDEN. That is because of the fact the wall on the outside is so far above the top of the fourth story.

Mr. MANN. There is no trouble at all.

Mr. COOPER. Have Carrere & Hastings, the architects of the building, been consulted about this?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is the plan of Mr. Woods, Superintendent of the Capitol; it is his creature.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. Has the committee taken into consideration any provision for the transportation of Members from the Capitol to the House Office Building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The appropriation for that purpose was made two years ago, and only one bid was submitted; the commission rejected that bid and decided to take no further action.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does not the gentleman think something ought to be done, something like that which the Senate has provided for its convenience?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think so. I was over in that building for several years and——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Of course the gentleman does not feel the necessity as we do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I had my office over there, and it was one of the farthest from this building; I had to come over frequently in response to calls, and I have traveled on the Senate side. The commission went over the matter and decided not to make the expenditures authorized.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will say 20 years ago I would not have minded it as much as I do now. There are quite a number of gentlemen on both sides of the House who feel a great inconvenience in being called upon to walk three or four times a day——

Mr. FITZGERALD. They should not be called upon; the gentlemen should remain here while the House is in session, and then they would not be compelled to come over here three or four times; I do not favor anything that would induce Members to remain over in that building and not stay here when the House is in session. We have enough trouble to keep a quorum now.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. How often does the gentleman go into his committee room?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My committee is practically in session all during the session of the House.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Then the gentleman does his business there——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do no work in my committee room while the House is in session except as a member of the committee. After the House adjourns I then do my work.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I certainly trust, Mr. Chairman, that the committee will take into consideration in the future the necessity of providing transportation to the Members from the Capitol to the House Office Building. I do not care to offer an amendment now.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay South Trimble, Clerk of the House of Representatives, the amount due for services in compiling, arranging for the printer, reading proof, indexing of testimony, stenography and typewriting, supervision of the work, and expenses incurred in the contested elections of the Sixty-second Congress, as authorized by an act entitled "An act relating to contested elections," approved March 2, 1887, the sum of $2,153.90, and an additional sum of $1,400 to such persons as were actually engaged in the work designated by the said South Trimble, and in such proportions as he may deem just for assistance rendered in the work; in all, $3,553.90.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Has this item ever appeared in a deficiency before?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I has appeared every two years.

Mr. MANN. I had the impression it was paid out of the contingent fund.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; we looked that up in committee.

Mr. MANN. Well, I think I am right, just the same. I O. K'd the Clerk's bill for six years on these contested-election cases.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was put in the deficiency bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, I of course accept the word of the gentleman from New York and also the clerk of the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the statement so positively because, as a matter of fact, in the committee there was considerable discussion, and the clerk had to trace it back, and my recollection is it went to 1888.

Mr. MANN. I am quite clear that when I certified these accounts I used to have a quarrel with the clerk about it because I did not allow him as much as he wanted and he did not wish to put it in any bill at all—got it out of the contingent fund without any advertising.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. I think the gentleman is mistaken, at least for the last few years, because this matter was thoroughly investigated in the subcommittee, and we found it was carried in this bill. I will state to the gentleman this is one of the items in the bill which was called to my attention, and it is so much larger than usual we had the matter investigated to see whether or not the item had been carried in other bills. We went into a very thorough investigation.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay A. A. Steele for indexing the Judicial Code for the use of the Committee on the Judiciary, $200.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this item. Why should it be in this bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was put in at the request of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANN. If it is a proper item, why was it not paid out of the contingent fund?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is they went to the Committee on Accounts first and were sent to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand it to be the policy of the present Committee on Appropriations to insert any items in the bill for extra expenses which a committee asks for?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the policy is just the contrary. This seemed to be such an extraordinary case, where somebody had been burglarized, that the committee thought they ought to make this recommendation. The Committee on the Judiciary claims that this man did the work. The Senate has paid some one on the Senate side for doing it.

Mr. MANN. What is the occasion for having two men do the work?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They did not have two men. The House committee contends that Mr. Steele did the work.

Mr. MANN. I apprehend whoever had jurisdiction over the matter did the work. We heard that story once before, that somebody was paid and somebody else did the work, but I notice we are paying just as much now for having the work done as we were then. Of course the item is small, and I am not going to insist on the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], who knew all about it, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON]——

Mr. MANN. Do not the distinguished lawyers on the Committee on the Judiciary know that they had no authority to engage anyone to do this work until they had received permission from the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They understood that, but they were using this judicial code, and it had not been indexed.

Mr. MANN. I know; but they could apply at any time to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is in the nature of a number of matters in this bill, where the officials act in advance and make their claims later.

Mr. MANN. The officials of the Government, many of them, do not know what the law is until they run against a decision of the auditor and the comptroller, and that happens frequently; and my only regret in this matter, for I shall withdraw the point of order, is that the 21 distinguished lawyers on the Committee on the Judiciary had not learned, or some of them had not learned, that they had no authority under the law to incur an expense of this kind which had not been authorized by the House. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After March 4, 1913, those members of the Committee on Ways and Means who are Members elect of the House to the Sixty-third Congress, or a majority of them, until the meeting of the first session of the Sixty-third Congress, and the Committee on Ways and Means during the first session of that Congress, are authorized to employ such expert, clerical, and stenographic services, and to gather such information, through Government agents or otherwise, as to them may seem fit in the preparation of a bill or bills for the revision of the present tariff law; and they are authorized to have such printing and binding done, and to incur such other expenses as may be deemed necessary; all the expenses hereunder, except for printing and binding, not exceeding $10,000, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on the usual vouchers approved as now provided by law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in this paragraph, as well as in the paragraph that follows it on page 46, that provision is made for action by the Committee on Ways and Means and in the other case by the Committee on the District of Columbia, "or a majority of them." Will the gentleman state whether it is customary to use that language "or a majority of them"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is the customary provision inserted prior to a session in which it is understood there is to be a revision of the tariff, and the work in the preparation of the bill is always done by the majority of the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It means the majority of the committee is authorized to go ahead and make expenditures to do the work without regard to the minority?

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A majority of the members, not the majority members of the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In other words, it is written here in the law that the majority of the committee shall rule. That is substantially the situation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. Unless "or a majority of them" is inserted it will require acquiescence of every Member elect who is now on the Committee on Ways and Means to do anything. This authorizes a majority of those who will be in the next House who are now on the Ways and Means Committee to act. Otherwise one cantankerous individual could hold everything back.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am one of those of the minority who believe the majority should rule. I have no objection to the use of this term, except it intends to keep out the minority, which might have some suggestions to make. But it seems to me the use of the term in this particular instance may lead to some embarrassment from a political point of view. That is to say, there is a very serious question which may be determined against the so-called "party in power" now—the Democratic Party—as to what is the real majority in this country and what is the real majority in the House.

A very excellent tabulation of the popular vote has just been made, apparently with authority of the House, by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, by which it appears that Mr. Roosevelt received for President 4,121,036 votes, and that Mr. Taft received 3,485,776 votes, that Mr. Debs received 888,029 votes, and that the Prohibition candidate and "miscellaneous" received 233,929 votes, a total of 8,728,770 votes, while Mr. Wilson, who has been declared elected President of the United States and who is to take his seat on March 4 next, received a total of 6,293,270 votes, or 2,435,500 less than a majority.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But he got enough. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Therefore Mr. Wilson would appear to have been the minority candidate, and it is a grave question whether the other side really represents the sentiment of the majority of the people of the country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We shall take our chances. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Taft and Mr. Roosevelt combined received sufficient votes to overtop Mr. Wilson by 1,313,542. I draw attention to these facts, which are very significant at this time, in order to relieve the Ways and Means Committee and the Committee on the District of Columbia and the eloquent gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and others who defend the Democratic position in this House from any possible embarrassment that may arise hereafter from writing in the law at this time that the majority shall rule, when the popular majority is not on the other side but with the Republicans. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I want to say to the gentleman on the other side [Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania] that Gov. Wilson has back of him a majority of the voters of the country. The Southern States, from Texas on around were solidly Democratic. When the election came on the cotton fields of the South were white. The people of the South were very busy. Nobody thought that there was any danger in any one of those States of a Republican victory. Accordingly thousands of people who would have gone to the polls if it had been necessary did not go, and if they had gone and we had polled our full strength in those solidly Democratic States Mr. Wilson would have a majority now instead of the vote that he did have, and he has back of him the support, the prayers, and good wishes of a majority of the voters of America. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if all of the people in the South who would be entitled to vote under manhood suffrage, which gentlemen on that side of the aisle frequently favor in our foreign possessions, had been given the right to vote and had exercised it in the Southern States Mr. Wilson would not only not have received a majority of the popular vote but he would not have received a majority of the popular vote in many of the Southern States.

Mr. HARDWICK. Who would those fellows have voted for? Teddy?

Mr. MANN. And I doubt whether the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] would be giving us the pleasure of his company. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, we got enough for the present. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After March 4, 1913, those members of the Committee on the District of Columbia who are Members elect of the House to the Sixty-third Congress, or a majority of them, until the meeting of the first session of the Sixty-third Congress, and the Committee on the District of Columbia during the first session of that Congress, are authorized to expend, for the purposes stated, and under the conditions stipulated in the resolutions of the House Nos. 154 and 200, adopted June 6 and 12, respectively, 1912, out of the contingent fund of the House, a sum not exceeding the balance unexpended on March 4, 1913, of the whole amount authorized to be expended under said resolutions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 46, in line 17, strike out the word "and," where it last occurs at the end of the line, and insert the words "five twenty-six," and in line 18, after the word "June," insert the word "first."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUDGMENTS, COURT OF CLAIMS.

For the payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, reported to Congress at its present session in House Document No. 1378, namely:

Under War Department, $11,017.65.
Under Navy Department, $5,113.97.
Under Department of Justice, $230.
In all, $16,361.62.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York, in charge of the bill, a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Very well.

Mr. MILLER. My colleague on the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. BURKE of South Dakota] intended to propound this inquiry, but he temporarily stepped from the room and will be back in a moment. When he comes back he will proceed.

There has been recovered by the United States in favor of the Ute Indians approximately $3,000,000. The usual procedure in cases of this kind is for the amount of the judgment to be incorporated in the general deficiency bill and paid. That judgment was recovered many years ago, but it has not been paid.

Inquiry was made a year ago when this bill was up for consideration as to why it was not incorporated in the bill, and such excuse as the committee had to give was then offered. It did not appear entirely satisfactory to some of us, at least, but the impression we then gained was that this year the matter would receive better treatment.

I notice, Mr. Chairman, that this bill does not contain any provision for paying that judgment. These Indians are in need. The amount of this judgment is approximately their total wealth, exclusive of the lands upon which they reside, and which form a part of their reservation, lands that are not immediately productive, that are arid or semiarid, and at best can yield such scanty sustenance only as can come by the grazing of sheep. The country was shocked a few weeks ago to learn of an armed conflict between portions of these Utes and officials. A Mexican sheep herder was killed, and there was something like an insurrection there because of an effort on the part of the authorities of that locality to apprehend the men who had committed the crime. Those men resisted arrest, because, under their ideas and as they understood the law and their rights, the intruders had no business there, and they took the only means they could use to prevent the taking of their property and their lands. Now, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why it is that this item is not incorporated in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The department submitted its estimate in such form that it was ascertained, upon an examination of the provision, that it would permit the use of part of the principal of this judgment in a manner not now authorized by law.

Mr. MILLER. Do I understand the gentleman to refer to that portion which would go to pay attorneys for their services?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I refer to the use of the principal of the judgment in a way not authorized. The committee ascertained that there was carried in the current law, in the Indian appropriation bill, $100,000, which is reimbursable out of interest on this judgment, and the present Indian bill has $100,000 additional. In view of the situation, the committee found itself unable to reach an understanding and decided to let the matter go over for the present.

Mr. MILLER. Is it the contention of the committee that this item was not incorporated in the bill solely because the estimates submitted by the department were not in proper form?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; that was not the reason.

Mr. MILLER. That was what I understood the gentleman to say.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was something that made it very difficult for the committee to act. It involved the examination of a very considerable number of documents in order to ascertain exactly the form in which it should be placed, and the committee decided that as the Indians would not suffer for the present it could be deferred. The judgment must be paid. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman inform the House how long a time has elapsed since that judgment was rendered?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not recall exactly. I think two years.

Mr. BARTLETT. September, 1911.

Mr. FITZGERALD. About two years.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman think this is a matter that should be quibbled about?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it has not been quibbled about. I think there was a very serious question raised last year as to whether Congress should not compel the Attorney General to take an appeal on behalf of the United States. He wrote to me and, I think, to the gentleman from Illinois and to the gentleman from Massachusetts a very voluminous explanation of the reasons that induced him to believe that it was in the interest of the United States not to appeal rather than to appeal.

Mr. MILLER. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], has now returned to the Chamber. He is very much interested in this item, and I yield the floor to him.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This is an item that was discussed last summer at the time the deficiency appropriation bill was pending in the House. I brought it to the attention of the committee and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and my understanding at the time was that unless some reason which did not then appear should manifest itself at this session of Congress an appropriation to pay the judgment would be made.

The facts of the matter are that under the treaty of 1880 these Indians had a paper credit in the Treasury of $1,250,000, upon which they were paid 4 per cent interest annually, and received every year $50,000. When the jurisdictional act was passed sending the matter to the Court of Claims it provided that in any judgment that might be rendered the $1,250,000 should be merged. A judgment was rendered, and the $1,250,000 was a part of the judgment, and the $50,000 a year which the Indians had been receiving ceased.

So, after some time in 1910, the Indians ceased to receive $50,000, which they had been receiving annually under the treaty made in 1880—since that treaty or agreement was ratified.

In addition to losing the $50,000 there was taken from their money $211,000 and paid to some attorneys in this city who had rendered service in lobbying and obtaining legislation, which was the jurisdictional act, and subsequently taking the case through the Court of Claims.

What I fear is that if this matter is allowed to drag along these same attorneys or lobbyists will show up here with another contract, and that when the appropriation is made for the judgment of the Court of Claims, the time for appeal having expired, they will get $211,000 more. I say that having taken from the Indians the $50,000 they were receiving annually and then taking $211,000 for attorney's fees is a matter that can not be defended and is nothing short of an outrage.

In the last Indian appropriation bill we put in an item in conference because there was a Senate amendment on the appropriation bill of three millions and some odd hundred thousand dollars to pay the judgment. It did not properly belong on the Indian appropriation bill, and in conference the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. CARTER, and myself, in lieu of the Senate amendment, agreed to an item of $100,000, making it reimbursable from an appropriation that may be made at some future time to pay the judgment, so as to give the $50,000 a year to the Indians for two years and providing that it should be spent by the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion for their relief. As I understand it now there is nothing in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand there is $100,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that there is nothing that can be said about that jurisdictional act and how the judgment was obtained that I will not acquiesce in fully, but here is a final judgment from the Court of Claims of three millions and some odd hundred thousand dollars which must be paid. My hope is that it can be and will be paid before a contract is made to pay lobbyists or attorneys a commission amounting to another large sum of over $200,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to say that when the item is finally appropriated it will have a provision that no part of it shall be paid to any attorney. I agree with the gentleman fully as to the character of the fees that were paid.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think that if the gentleman from New York has looked into this matter since the last session—I have looked into it very thoroughly—he will find that while there was some disposition to criticize the Court of Claims the fact is that the Court of Claims was directed by the jurisdictional act in such a way that it was absolutely impossible for the court to do otherwise than it did and render a larger judgment which, in my opinion, was a much greater sum than was owing to the Indians if they had any claim at all except the $1,200,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there were $211,000, out of the $3,000,000 judgment rendered in favor of these Indians, obtained by attorneys. The money had not been appropriated by Congress. The Indians have received nothing from the judgment, but the law was so framed that the attorneys could get their fee at once, and their percentage fee amounted to $211,000. This judgment prevented the Indians from getting the gratuity of $50,000 that had been given to them annually, but this gratuity was merged in the judgment, and they were afterwards prevented from obtaining the annual $50,000 gratuity. The attorneys got the $211,000 that has been paid on that judgment, and the Indians have been damaged to the extent of losing the amount that they were drawing annually before the rendition of the judgment. Last year the Indian appropriation bill carried a provision for the payment of this judgment under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. It was stricken out because it properly belonged to this committee and should have been in this bill. But we find it missing from the bill this year, and it is not in the Indian appropriation bill. We will be compelled to give them a gratuity in lieu of taking the $3,000,000 out of the Treasury that should be paid to them. If the Indian Committee had jurisdiction, we could control the matter, but the jurisdiction being between the two committees there seems to have been no concert of action, and the Indians are the sufferers thereby.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I was somewhat familiar with this situation at the last session of Congress, although I do not say that I was fully familiar with it. I have a habit, which is growing upon me, of forgetting from one year to another the details touching appropriations like this. My recollection is that under the treaty with the Ute Indians this judgment was alleged to have been had. It seems to me, if I recollect right, while I do not desire to mention the name of any attorney or attorneys representing the Indians in securing the legislation under which the judgment was rendered, it was a regular lobbying association for the legislation, and the judgment followed as a matter of course, and this, too, under conditions where the House was deceived as to the effect of the legislation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that these Committees on Expenditures in the Interior Department, which are now termed investigating committees, might have profitably expended some time in going into the details with reference to the legislation which resulted in this large judgment and in the payment of this fee of $211,000.

Mr. CANNON. From my recollection about it I think the statement is justified, providing that it is desirable after a thing has happened to go into an investigation of that kind. I am under the impression, without mentioning any names, that if the facts could be known through an investigation, many eminent gentlemen in the United States who shared in the division of the spoils of the lobby might be called upon to rise and explain.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to state that we find that this appropriation is carried in the bill under the heading of Utah, so that we will have jurisdiction of it.

Mr. CANNON. Here is a large judgment. These Ute Indians have an empire still remaining, to which under treaty they have title. This represents a small part of that magnificent grant that they have. I want to ask the gentleman from South Dakota if this appropriation is made under existing law and treaty whether it will remain in the Treasury, the interest thereon to be paid to these Indians for their subsistence?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will say in response to that that I have just had a conversation with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], in which we mutually agreed that when this appropriation is made the money should be placed in the Treasury subject to further action by Congress and not paid out to the Indians.

Mr. CANNON. I should think it ought to go further than that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, under the agreement the proceeds of the judgment was to be placed to the credit of the Indians and the interest is to be paid to them annually in lieu of the annuities which they heretofore received. The department this year and last year in submitting the estimate submitted it in such form that the entire principal could be expended by the department in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of these Indians, and I am in accord with the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] that when we pay this judgment we should pay it in accordance with the terms of the agreement, and whatever disposition is to be made in the future should be made as the result of legislation which will originate in the Committee on Indian Affairs and be prepared and prescribed with all of the information in their possession.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will permit, that this legislation that resulted in this judgment and the payment of this fee was an amendment placed upon the Indian appropriation bill in another body. The gentleman knows how things go in conference. It became a part of the bill when it became a law. I want to say this, however, that at that time I was not a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs. Neither was I a Member of the House. It happened in the Sixtieth Congress. Therefore, there is no responsibility upon me individually for that legislation.

Mr. CANNON. That I quite understand, and I am only anxious from the standpoint that with these Indians, with an empire yet belonging to them, under the treaty and with this large judgment, in their condition, unless the whole matter is properly husbanded, then in the lifetime of the gentleman these Indians will have lost all of this judgment and all of this property, and will be subsisting by charity through appropriations made by Congress.

If I had full power at this time to write the proper guards to the appropriations upon this bill I would be glad to see it done now, but I trust that while the gentleman from South Dakota is still in Congress and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is still in Congress and at an early session this matter will be buttoned up so they will get the interest.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman can rest assured that when the appropriation is made it will be safeguarded, because I know the chairman of the committee feels as I do about it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel, lights, and water for public buildings, $248.24.09.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 51, at the end of line 2, strike out the figures "09."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask to return to page 43, to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 43, strike out lines 2, 3, 4, and 5, and in line 8 strike out the sum "$33,815.07" and insert in lieu thereof the sum of "$23,815.07."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, at the last session of Congress the House authorized the Committee on Elections to certify expenses for these four gentlemen after the deficiency bill had passed the House, and at my request the Senate inserted them in that bill.

Mr. MANN. And now you propose to strike out something?

Mr. FITZGERALD. To strike out lines 2, 3, 4, and 5. They have been recertified this year.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, these items were in the bill last year and have been placed in this bill. Of course the Committee on Elections ought not to have certified them to the Committee on Appropriations, but I am not at all surprised mistakes are made. Last night the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL], in a discussion which related to an item in this bill, made a statement in reference to a question asked by me that the contestant Prioleau received several thousand votes; and on a further question, and some doubt expressed on my part, stated he knew he received more than 1,000 votes. The gentleman was a member of the committee that had heard the case. I find from the record which was before the committee that the contestant in this matter received 75 votes in the entire district, and hence I am not surprised when a Member comes in and defends an item in the bill, and states it has received full consideration, that he can not differentiate between knowing that the contestant received more than 1,000 and the record, which shows he received only 75 votes in the entire district, and therefore I am not surprised that they make another mistake.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in justice to the gentleman from New Jersey, the gentleman did not certify these items.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not say he did; I do not know who certified them. Gentlemen in discussing items of this sort ought to be pretty careful in making positive statements to the House. Fortunately the House last night did not take the gentleman too seriously upon the subject. The House has had long experience with this contestant. It had had his case before the House many times, and, I think, 75 votes in the district is the most the contestant had ever received notwithstanding the judgment of the gentleman from New Jersey that the contestant had received thousands of votes.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the following paragraph for the one adopted by the committee last night, in lines 14 to 17, page 43. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri was not accurate, and this is to take its place.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 43, by inserting the following as a substitute for lines 14, 15, 16, and 17: "To continue the employment of 7 messengers, at $100 per month each, in the post office of the House of Representatives from April 1 to November 30, inclusive, 1910, $5,600."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the bill is completed, and I wish to make this brief statement. This bill carries $24,235,740.17 as reported from the committee—$15,100,000 is for pensions, $900,000 for the postal service, and about $5,000,000 for the Army and Navy, or a total of $21,000,000 out of $24,000,000 to supply deficiencies for the current fiscal year.

There was no urgent deficiency bill at this session of Congress. For all of the services for which appropriations are made in bills reported from the Committee on Appropriations this bill carries less than $3,000,000 to supply deficiencies in those appropriations. It is the most conclusive refutation of the charge that is sometimes made, that at the last session of Congress the Committee on Appropriations deliberately appropriated insufficient funds for the maintenance of the service for this fiscal year, because of an approaching election, and with the intention of supplying large deficiencies at this session. It is the lowest amount required for deficiencies in these services in any year in my experience in the House.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire of the gentleman relative to the paragraph beginning with line 10, on page 13, or rather the two paragraphs, providing a deficiency appropriation for institutions adjudged to be under sectarian control.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the law the Board of Charities can not send children to any institution which is known as sectarian. As far as possible, they endeavor to send young children to institutions conducted under the auspices of the religious denomination of the parents of the child. The number of children which, at the contract rate, require this support have been sent to such institutions. They are taken into those institutions with the understanding that the limit is fixed and that Congress is under no obligation to make the appropriation to pay them for the services rendered. But it has been the custom of Congress for a number of years, since there is no other institution to which these children may be sent, to enlarge the amount. I think it is chiefly a Catholic orphan asylum to which the children are sent, supported largely by charity.

Mr. RODDENBERY. While they are small items, yet it appears to be just on or over the border line of the general policy of our Government toward contributing to sectarian institutions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is. The policy has always been to put the children in the institution of the same religious faith as their parents.

Mr. RODDENBERY. While I agree with the charitable and benevolent spirit involved, and while the amounts appropriated are small, yet it occurs to me that it is a very dangerous line of departure from a fundamental principle of our Government to engage in. The purpose is the very best.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The trouble is that the Government has no place of its own. The children have to be put some place, and these are the only institutions in which they can be placed.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The Government has institutions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it has no institutions with the accommodations.

Mr. RODDENBERY. You mean to say there are no institutions which have the accommodations for this peculiar class of cases?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are none for any of these.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The gentleman has already stated that Congress is under no obligations to make the appropriation, but that it is a custom of Congress to do so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is. There is no doubt about it at all. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise——

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, before the committee rises, I ask unanimous consent to address it for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman if he can not defer that until a little later on? There is a conference report here that is very necessary to get through. I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], after the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] addresses the committee for 10 minutes, Then what?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nothing; I am going to move to rise.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. We have been waiting here now three days trying to get this conference report through, with the understanding that just after this the report would come up. I shall, at the end of the 10 minutes, Mr. Chairman, if this unanimous consent is given, insist upon the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I was not in the House this morning at the time of the discussion of the expenses incident to various special committees authorized by this House. I see from excerpts from various speeches made here that it has been charged that many hundreds of mail bags bearing the frank of a member of one of these committees have been sent out, and the statement made, as it is, without specifying the document or specifying the Member whose frank was used, carried with it a veiled intimation that some member of one of those committees, for the purposes of personal aggrandizement or personal exploitation, has made misuse of the mails and misuse of the expenditure intended for the public. If I am the gentleman referred to, I will say now that I do not know but that I might say thousands of sacks of mail in the last few years have gone out from this building bearing my frank.

When I was made chairman of the committee that investigated the affairs of the United States Steel Corporation, it is a fact, known to 80 per cent of the Members of this House, that I was flooded with requests for copies of those hearings. There is not a Member from Pennsylvania who did not make requests. My friend, Mr. BURKE, if I am not mistaken, and my good colleague, Mr. MOORE, and my colleague, Mr. OLMSTED, and others——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think I responded to the call of the gentleman from Kentucky, who asked me for some of my copies.

Mr. STANLEY. Yes; and I appreciate it. I am speaking now only of the requests made of me during the investigation. Those requests were for from 10 to 200 copies, to be sent by the Members to their constituents. I replied to each one of those Members, without regard to his party, that I had a force of folders and addressers in my office and that I would be pleased to send those documents to the Member's office or to such persons as he would designate. That report authorized the publication of 10,000 copies of the hearings. Those hearings were sent out as they were published on requests. Ninety per cent of those hearings went to the persons requesting them. I have in my files now over 3,000 separate letters asking for copies of those hearings. Every one of those hearings was addressed and sent to the person requesting them under my frank. If that be treason, they may make the most of it. [Applause.]

It is charged by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that these investigations were instituted upon the suggestion of people who had miserable personal grievances and had no desire to serve the public interest, and that the expenditure carried on and the time wasted constituted a disgrace to an American Congress. He says that some of those investigations started out with a flourish of trumpets and a beating of drums and blaring of bands and then suddenly had quieted down from the roaring of a current or a cyclone to a stillness like that of the voice of a clam, and so on.

If the gentleman means to impute to the chairman of this committee any personal grievance, he has failed to show any evidence of it. I did not personally know any man connected, directly or indirectly, with the United States Steel Corporation. The records of this committee show that with the exception of Mr. Perkins—no; not even with the exception of Mr. Perkins—that every one who was called before that committee thanked the chairman of that committee for courtesies extended to him while he was a witness before it. There is nothing in these hearings to show any desire to gratify a personal ambition or grievance. I have no grievance now against any of the financiers connected with that corporation.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman saw fit to mention the fact that he had accorded to me a courtesy and that I asked to participate in the distribution of the mail. Of course the gentleman does not mean to insinuate that I made any criticism of his committee, because I did not.

Mr. STANLEY. No. I simply referred to the gentleman because I knew he was one of a great number of gentlemen who had requested copies of the hearings.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I did participate in the discussion this morning and made a criticism of the special counsel of another committee.

Mr. STANLEY. It is charged that there is now in the room of a member of this committee a vast number of these hearings, to be sent out for his benefit. There is not in that room a single copy of the hearings of the committee. They have all been exhausted in pursuance of requests. There are several thousand copies of the report. Each Member of this House was allowed 35 copies of that report. A great many of the Members, having no calls for the reports, they have, at my request, turned them over now for distribution. That is done in the case of every eulogy that is printed in this House.

But to return. If the gentlemen mean to claim that this investigation started with any animus or any mean personal motive of revenge or a desire to produce embarrassment, they are entirely mistaken.

That investigation was conducted with the precision of an indictment. The charges were made that certain violations demanded the attention of Congress. In the resolution it was specifically stated wherein and how the United States Steel Corporation was operating in violation of the law, and before that orderly investigation had concluded its work a petition was filed, not by my party but by the party of the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Wyoming, repeating and reiterating the identical charges made in my resolution asking for an investigation of the United States Steel Corporation. Was the Attorney General moved by motives mean and despicable, or by a desire for self-exploitation? In that petition, asking for a dissolution of the United States Steel Corporation, page after page of the hearings were copied bodily. Does the gentleman mean to charge that the ex-Secretary of War, that great and profound jurist, Mr. Dickinson, was moved by mean and despicable motives of self-glorification, self-aggrandizement, or revenge when he filed that petition?

I have here a letter from Mr. Dickinson himself, the ex-Secretary of War, at present the leading counsel of the Government in the case of the United States against The United States Steel Corporation. I have Mr. Dickinson's consent to make public this letter:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE (WASHINGTON),
Nashville, Tenn., September 4, 1912.

Hon. A. O. STANLEY,
Henderson, Ky.

DEAR MR. STANLEY: I received your report and the minority reports on the Steel Trust when I was in the Tennessee mountains, and it has not been convenient for me to write before this. I congratulate you most heartily and sincerely upon the very able and patriotic work that you have performed. Probably no one is in better position than I am to judge of the ability, energy, and courage which have been brought by you to this stupendous task. The country owes you a debt of gratitude which I believe but few fully appreciate. * * *

With best wishes, I am,
Yours, very truly, J. M. DICKINSON.

Why this outcry, this pained, frantic protest against the distribution of a report, every page of which is replete, not with abuse or traduction but with the cold facts of an indisputable proof that the laws of my country are violated by a $2,000,000,000 corporation? [Applause.] There are those who love darkness rather than light. There always were and there always will be. All this report contains is a flood of light upon the deeds of wealthy malefactors. I am not surprised that those who are guilty, that those who are facing sentences of imprisonment, that those who are facing the dissolution of their business, that those who are about to have wrung from their powerful hands the right to exploit the American people should protest, but I am amazed that Members of this House should rise and condemn the action of the chairman of this committee, the action of this House, in taking the American people into their confidence and making public the record of the deeds of the United States Steel Corporation. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move any pro forma amendment that may be necessary.

I made the remark in the House a while ago that a Member of the House has sent out carloads of hearings. I did not name the gentleman from Kentucky. Since he himself has brought the matter to the attention of the House, I desire to make a little statement.

My office is not in the House Office Building, but I am occasionally over there. One day some time ago, during this session of Congress, I was passing through one of the corridors of the House Office Building, and noticed piles of mail sacks in the corridor, and had curiosity to ascertain where they came from. I did not know where the room was that the gentleman from Kentucky has charge of over there—that the documents were in. I noticed that all of the mail sacks that I looked at were addressed to Kentucky, and naturally assumed that some Member, interested in his constituents, was mailing out public documents of some sort. I stepped into a room there and asked in regard to the matter, and ascertained that they were stated to be copies of the Stanley report. I made a request of a gentleman to count the sacks of mail there, all of them large mail sacks, and was informed, I think, that there were 120 or 130 of them in the hall at that time. I was further informed that there had been more than 100 sacks sent out before, all addressed to the State of Kentucky. Now, I do not say that the gentleman sent these surplus documents to the State of Kentucky. I do not know how many went to the State of Kentucky. It somewhat excited my curiosity, because I had not supposed that there was that large number of steel mills in the State of Kentucky, which would excite unusual curiosity on the part of the people of that State concerning the technical investigation of the Steel Trust, but I am quite content with anything that the gentleman from Kentucky has done in reference to the diffusion of information. My sympathy is with the people to whom he sent the documents. [Laughter.]

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, this talk here is about the hearings. As I explained to the gentleman in the beginning of my address, there were several thousand extra copies of the report, not of the hearings, but of the report, a little pamphlet of a couple of hundred pages. Thirty-five copies of that report were given to each Member of this House, just as copies of eulogies are given. I wrote the Members of this House telling them that in the event they had no calls in their district for it, and some of them have no steel interests in their districts, they could transfer the reports to me. Those reports were reports distributed to Members of this House, and by the Members of the House transferred to the chairman of the committee. Is there a Member of the House who has not received eulogies from other Members and distributed them in this way? I ask the gentleman from Illinois if he has not distributed documents presented to him by his colleagues in the same way, and I ask him if he means it to be inferred that there is anything illegal or not ethical in the act?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not inferring anything; I am stating facts. All the reports that were printed could be put in less than 10 mail sacks. I am referring to the sending out of great volumes of hearings to people who did not want them, making, as it seems to me, not only a useless expenditure of money in printing, but worse than a useless expenditure of money in sending them through the mails at the high rates to people in Kentucky and elsewhere.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say that I have already explained the manner in which the hearings were distributed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose, and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ADAIR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 28858) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913 and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with certain amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I make the following motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Georgia opposed to the bill?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I am not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit with instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RODDENBERY moves to recommit the bill H. R. 28858 to the Committee on Appropriations to report back forthwith the bill amended as follows:

Strike out all of lines 10 to 17, both inclusive, on page 13, as follows:

"Authority is hereby granted to pay, in addition to the sum of $1,500 heretofore authorized, a further sum not to exceed $6,000 to institutions adjudged to be under sectarian control, fiscal year 1913.

"Authority is hereby granted to pay, in addition to the sum of $5,500 heretofore authorized, a further sum not to exceed $1,055.61 to institutions adjudged to be under sectarian control, fiscal year 1912."

Mr. FITZGERALD. On that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERY) there were 1 aye and 121 noes.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-eight Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. All those in favor of the motion to recommit will answer "aye," and those opposed will answer "no."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 4, nays 288, answered "present" 8, not voting 81, as follows:

From February 27 to Monday, March 3:

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania with Mr. SLAYDEN.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BORLAND, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 28180, the river and harbor bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RODDENBERY. To make a point of order against the motion of the gentleman from Florida.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The point of order is that on February 25 Mr. SPARKMAN addressed the Speaker and asked unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 28180, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and to ask for a conference. Mr. MANN objected, and the Speaker announced that the gentleman from Illinois objects. Under Rule XXIV, paragraph 2, the bill sought to be called up by unanimous consent having been objected to went under the rule to the committee, and the motion made by the gentleman from Florida at this time is not in form, and therefore not in order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the RECORD may show, but when the gentleman from Florida asked unanimous consent I stated I should have to object to that, and he did not ask that the bill be taken from the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The bill was not referred, and it is on the Speaker's table, answering the point of order of the gentleman from Georgia. The gentleman from Florida moves to take from the Speaker's table the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 28180) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman moves to suspend the rules to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands a second.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Florida has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois 20 minutes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have adopted the course of asking to suspend the rules because it seems to be the shortest way of getting this bill into conference, something that is very necessary, at the very earliest possible moment, if we are to get this bill through at this session of Congress. There are 133 Senate amendments, many of which are unobjectionable, while some are very objectionable from my standpoint, and, I think, from the standpoint of this House. When the bill goes to conference, of course, we will deal with all those items, and we hope to eliminate the objectionable ones before we return to the House with a report.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I realize that at this time in the session, if a river and harbor bill is to be enacted at all, it will need to be sent to conference at an early hour. There are a number of Senate amendments to this bill which I think the House ought to have an opportunity to vote upon before they are agreed to. There is amendment No. 11, carrying what is called the Connecticut River Dam; amendment No. 64, carrying a provision for the erection of a dam by the Municipal Electric Light Co., of Minnesota; amendment No. 77, providing a report relating to the contract system; amendment No. 78, providing for the appointment of a river regulation commission; amendment No. 126, providing for the renting of Government dredges to private parties; amendment No. 133, authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to define and establish anchorage grounds throughout the United States. These amendments are of great importance. The first one, No. 11, intending to establish practically the policy of the United States or of Congress in regard to the construction of dams for power purposes by themselves, in the main, has no relation to a river and harbor bill. They are not river and harbor items. May I ask my distinguished friend from Florida if he is willing to say to the House that these amendments will not be agreed to by the House conferees in conference without the House hereafter having an opportunity to express its opinion upon each of them?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I can say in answer to that, most emphatically, yes. Personally I am opposed to each one of the items to which the gentleman has referred being in this bill, whatever their individual merits may be, and I certainly should not agree to any of those amendments without referring them back to the House and taking the sense and the instructions of the House upon them.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the House is in such disorder that we can not hear the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I say in reference to the question propounded by the gentleman from Illinois as to whether the House would have an opportunity to vote upon the items to which he refers before a final agreement is reached by the conference committee unless they are eliminated in conference. Whatever their individual merits, I do not believe they should appear in this bill.

Mr. MANN. With that statement, so far as I am concerned, I am quite content, and if anyone else desires time in opposition to the motion I am perfectly willing to yield it.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. I want to ask him if he will not include amendment 57 in that request? If he does not, I wish to try to include it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can make the request himself. I have not read amendment No. 57.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I ask that amendment No. 57 be included in that request.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I can make the same answer in reference to that item. Of course, I understand that while some Members here may favor the item, there are others who object to it, and though I might favor it I should not in view of the known hostility to record it here concur without resubmitting the question to this House and obtaining the instructions of the House in the premises.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman kindly tell us what he is talking about now? Is he talking about Senate amendment No. 57?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; relating to the Grand Calumet River.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I would like to know if I can not get three or four minutes' time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. MANN. I yield four minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. The amendment I wish to call to the attention of the House, Mr. Speaker, is No. 57, and the reason I do this is because the Senate last summer passed a bill—in fact, the very same bill—that is included in the river and harbor bill now. Under amendment No. 57 it came to the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and we asked that it be laid over for the purpose of looking into the matter. The steel company never came before the committee, and there never has been any action by the committee since that time. The reason I want to call the attention of the House to this amendment is because it provides for the taking over of the Calumet River, an important navigable river of the United States, after they have filled it in for several miles and have given us instead a ditch. Now, what I desire is that we make certain provisions so far as this ditch is concerned, if you are going to pass this law, so that it can be made a navigable part of this river. There has been no consideration of this project, so far as the Government is concerned.

Mr. MADDEN. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. GALLAGHER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand the United States Steel Corporation at Gary have already built a number of coke ovens on what was originally the bed of the river.

Mr. GALLAGHER. The river at this point on the original map, showing the meander lines, was a thousand feet wide. The river bed has been filled in for several miles. A ditch remains on one side in place of the former river channel.

Mr. MADDEN. And buildings erected——

Mr. GALLAGHER. And buildings and coke ovens and other factory buildings have been placed where the river originally was.

Mr. MADDEN. And there was no provision by any legislative authority for the construction of the buildings?

Mr. GALLAGHER. The steel company never recognized the rights of the Government. I want the House to consider this question before the amendment is included in any bill of this kind and before we are forced to swallow it because the Senate has tacked it on.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague [Mr. MANN] yield to me for a minute or two?

Mr. MANN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I think the Committee on Rivers and Harbors ought not to agree to amendment 57 in this bill. The United States Steel Corporation at the city of Gary, Ind., have presumed to take absolute control over the Grand Calumet River at that point, and have filled it in, constructing buildings upon it, and then, in place of the river itself, have dug a ditch which they propose to turn over to the public in place of the river. There is nobody here who knows whether the quantity of land taken by the steel company is proposed to be given back to the people or not, and surely legislation of this kind ought not to be enacted without some consideration by some committee of this House. They have had plenty of opportunity to appear before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, plenty of chance to have consideration given to this important subject. I believe that such consideration ought to be given to the subject before legislation is enacted upon it. I think it is a piece of presumption on the part of the steel company to take the land of the public and put their buildings on it. This was a navigable stream. They have filled it up, and nobody knows now whether, if this law is enacted, the ditch which they have dug, which is an artificial stream, can be used for navigation in the future.

I sincerely hope that if the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House or the conferees are not able to have this item stricken out, they will bring the bill back to the House, so that the House may have an opportunity to strike it out.

Mr. CRUMPACKER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire about three minutes' time on this question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, the question under discussion is simply the change of the bed of the Grand Calumet River for about 2 miles, to avoid a crook, which, if the Government ever undertakes to improve the river, would have to be cut off. The Grand Calumet River at that point is not navigable, and, as a matter of fact, never has been navigable. It is in a basin, a swampy basin, most insanitary. The United States Steel Corporation, or the Indiana Steel Co., in constructing its works, filled up the marshy bottom and the old stagnant bed of the river and cut a channel 150 feet wide straight across from one bend to the other, and the local engineer at Chicago, after investigating the situation, recommends the enactment of this bill. It is also the recommendation of the War Department.

The bill was introduced in the Senate in 1911 by Senator SHIVELY, of Indiana, and in the Committee on Commerce Senator BURTON, whom all the Members of this House know, investigated the subject and made a report recommending the enactment of this legislation. He said it would save the Government between $95,000 and $100,000 in the way of cost for excavation which the company had already done.

The bill was prepared in the Engineers' Office in the War Department, and it passed the Senate in June, 1911, and was sent to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, and in the early months of 1912 I went personally with Mr. Gilbert, of Chicago, before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and laid the matter before that committee, and demonstrated to its members that the Government was receiving benefits to the amount of about $95,000 and was yielding substantially nothing, and urged its report. The committee never took any action on it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman want any more time?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me have two minutes more.

Mr. MANN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This, Mr. Speaker, is an important local matter, and the only possible objection to it is that the Indiana Steel Co. may desire it. In my judgment, if it were requested on the part of any other company or individual, no man could investigate the facts without reaching the conclusion that the Government should ratify the change.

The report of the engineers stated that this cut would have to be made in any event if the river were ever improved for navigation. The talk about it being a ditch is hardly fair. It is 150 feet wide.

Mr. MADDEN. How wide is the bed or channel of the river?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Before the filling was made it was a tortuous channel running up to a bayou and back.

Mr. MADDEN. It was about 1,000 feet wide, was it not?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, not by any means. It was only about 50 feet wide. It was navigated only by small boats for muskrat and duck hunters. There has not been a pound of commerce on that stream, and the engineer of the War Department, who investigated it, said that if it is ever improved this cut must be made. If the Government refuses to accept this cut, when the time comes for its improvement, the Government must make the cut itself. The Indiana Steel Co. has already made the cut, and simply asks that whatever has been done shall be legalized. When the company filled the swampy basin and old tortuous channel it had no idea that the so-called river was regarded as navigable. It is safe to say that 40 public bridges have been built over the river without authority of law and with no thought it was a navigable stream. I received a letter only yesterday stating that a public bridge was being constructed over the river—never thinking it was navigable—and he requested me to secure the necessary authorization from Congress before next Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules. Shall the rules be suspended, these amendments disagreed to, and a conference asked for?

The question was taken; and (two-thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the motion was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana, and Mr. LAWRENCE.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the Indian appropriation bill, now on the Speaker's table, and to move to suspend the rules, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 26874) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to suspend the rules, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to 20 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been amended in the Senate, and I find 127 amendments placed upon it by that body, embracing claims of every kind and character, and in all instances of changes of amounts I find increases of the amounts allowed by the House.

The full amount of gratuity appropriations passed by the House was $6,302,000. The Senate has increased this amount to $8,801,000.

Glancing through all the other items I find $5,278,593 added in the Senate, carried in these 127 amendments. I have not yet had time to digest all of these amendments, but as far as I have gone with them I am satisfied that the House has allowed all that was necessary in this bill, and I think this $5,000,000 and over added in the Senate is unjustified and should not have been added. I therefore hope that this House will disagree to all of the Senate amendments and that the bill be sent to conference at once.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. RODDENBERY. How much was your bill below the estimate as it passed the House?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Nearly $2,000,000.

Mr. RODDENBERY. What was the amount of the bill as it passed the House, in comparison with the amount carried in the bill for the current year?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was a few hundred thousand dollars less.

Mr. RODDENBERY. And as it comes back from the Senate, how much is it increased?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is increased $5,278,000.

Mr. RODDENBERY. And in these increases you wish to nonconcur?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. To nonconcur, and send the whole matter to conference.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Is the gentleman of the opinion that we could have separate votes on these different items?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that a great many of these Senate items probably can be agreed upon by the conferees. Some of them may be necessary. Evidence may have come to the Senate committee that was not possessed by our committee. Of course we will take these matters into consideration and do what we think is best and right and just to the Indians and to all parties concerned. We want to go into conference unhampered, so as to make the best bill that we possibly can.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as one examines this Indian appropriation bill, with the Senate amendments, one would think that the House bill was like the skeleton of a fat man, with the Senate amendments adding all the flesh and sinew. Most of the bill now consists of Senate amendments. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] says he has not had time to digest the Senate amendments. No one has had time to digest them, and no one will have time between now and the end of this session. So far as that is concerned, I do not know that there is anything to be done except to send the bill to conference.

When this bill was under consideration in the House I made a point of order against an item providing an appropriation, as a gift, of $300,000 for the public schools in Oklahoma. The Chair sustained the point of order. Through the inadvertence of the clerks at the desk, when the copy of the bill was sent to the engrossing room it was not shown that that item was stricken out on a point of order. That might easily happen, and did happen. The bill went to the Senate. It was subsequently discovered that this item was in the engrossed copy of the bill sent to the Senate, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, offered in the House a concurrent resolution with a view to having that corrected in some way. It frequently happens between the two bodies that one House or the other makes some mistake or error in connection with a bill during its passage or engrossment, and it is the usual practice to request its correction, either by a return of the bill or by concurrent action of the two bodies.

I never have known an instance before in the history of Congress when either the House or the Senate declined to permit the other body, where an error had been committed, to have it corrected. But in this case, with what seems to me to be gross discourtesy on the part of the Senate, no action has been taken by that body on the resolution which was sent by the House to the Senate for the purpose of making a correction in the copy of a bill which had been passed by the House and erroneously engrossed and sent improperly, so far as its contents were concerned, to the Senate.

In my judgment, what the House ought to do is to return this bill to the Senate and insist that the Senate take action upon the resolution which the House sent to the Senate. It is true that the Senate has, by amendment, stricken out that language and then reinserted it. But the striking out of the language was dependent upon a vote of the Senators and in no way preserved the integrity of the proceedings between the two bodies. If they make an error in a bill which they send to us and ask to have it corrected, it goes as a matter of course that it is corrected.

I remember on one occasion when the House was exceedingly anxious to agree to a proposition in a bill sent to us from the Senate, the Senate asked its return, and there was no objection made to the return, because Members of the House considered that that would be a violation of the necessary courtesies between the two bodies constituting the Congress. It has remained for the Senate to refuse to permit the correction of an engrossed copy of a House bill where everyone admits that a plain error was made, and the Senate ought not to throw that in the face of the House.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman believe that the striking out of the matter by the Senate and putting it in as an amendment would put the matter into conference, so that the conferees would have jurisdiction to make such changes as they deem proper, and would it not be proper to have a vote in the House before any disposition of this item is made?

Mr. MANN. It would not, when matter was included in the bill which did not pass the House. The conferees have nothing to do with it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from Illinois is aware of the fact that he took advantage of the parliamentary situation and cut out the provision he mentions and that had been carried in the bill for years.

Mr. MANN. I am not aware of the fact; it had not been carried in the bill for years. The gentleman from Texas is defending the action of the Senate. Perhaps it was done on his advice.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was not done on my advice, and the gentleman knows that it was not when he attributes it to me. I offered the resolution to correct it.

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman did, but he is now defending the action of the Senate.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Not at all. The gentleman from Illinois knows that he took advantage of the parliamentary situation to have it stricken out of the House bill on the floor on a point of order, so that the House could not pass upon it.

Mr. MANN. The Senate has a right to add an amendment. Nobody complains about that; but the Senate has no right to insist on retaining control of a bill sent by the House that does not represent the bill passed by the House.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As I understand it, the language on page 42, which was stricken out of the bill, went out of the bill in the House on a point of order.

Mr. MANN. The Chair sustained the point of order, but it did not go out of the bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And the chairman of the committee undertook by resolution to correct it. Does not the fact that the Senate did strike it out by amendment 88 substantially comply with the requirements of the resolution?

Mr. MANN. Plainly it does not.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It went out when they struck it out.

Mr. MANN. It is not out of the bill; it is still in the bill. The Senate has an amendment to strike it out, which you propose to send to conference.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They put in the same item again.

Mr. MANN. That makes no difference. Suppose they had not stricken it out, what then would happen? Suppose the Senate, instead of striking out the item and reinserting the same thing, had refused to strike it out? The House has never passed on that item and it has no place in the bill. The House has asked the Senate and the Senate has refused to permit the House to correct the engrossed bill. The Senate has no right in morals or decency to take the position it has.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does the gentleman think, in view of the way that $300,000 appears in the bill, that the House should express itself by simple nonconcurrence, or does not the gentleman think before it goes to conference, it being in the bill, that the House should have the right to vote specifically upon it and express its will?

Mr. MANN. No; I think the House ought to return the bill to the Senate without action, with a resolution calling the attention of the Senate to the fact that the bill sent by the House to the Senate was not properly engrossed, did not represent what passed the House, and insist upon having the bill corrected, and not leave it to the will of Senators or conferees as to whether we preserve the integrity of the proceedings which do take place in the House.

Mr. RODDENBERY. If that could be done, would it not then be well and also within the province of the House to take a vote on this proposition before it goes to conference?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think if the House accepts a return of the papers which it has asked to have corrected without correction, this item is just like any other amendment in the bill.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. It seems to me in looking over the bill that in amendment No. 88 the Senate practically complied with the request of the House by striking it out entirely.

Mr. MANN. But suppose the Senate had not stricken it out?

Mr. OLMSTED. But they did.

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference, so far as their amendment is concerned. They struck it out, but suppose they had not struck it out. We have a right to have correct copies of our bills sent to the Senate, and if we make an error in sending them, we have a right to demand that that error be corrected before the Senate acts on the bill. There is no other way of preserving the integrity of the proceedings.

Mr. OLMSTED. They have struck it out, and reinserted it as a new amendment, amendment No. 90.

Mr. MANN. I believe they should have been more courteous and have returned the bill, but the effect is the same.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, the clear intent of the Senate in amendment No. 88 was to comply with the resolution which had been adopted by the House and messaged to the Senate, because that amendment with reference to the schools for Oklahoma, as the House requested, has been stricken out. At a subsequent time the Senate reinserted the same matter verbatim as amendment No. 90. If it struck out the Oklahoma school proposition as contemplated by the resolution adopted by the House, in response to that resolution, and not as original action on the part of the Senate and had not reincorporated it, there would be nothing to go to conference on that question.

Mr. MANN. Then if the Senate should pass a bill and send it to us, and some Senator should ask to have it reconsidered and brought back to the Senate so that he could make a change in it, I suppose the gentleman thinks that if we made the change over here that would comply with the request.

Mr. KENDALL. I do not think that follows at all.

Mr. MANN. I do not, either; but they are both alike.

Mr. KENDALL. But in this case the House adopted a resolution informing the Senate that an error had occurred in the engrossing clerk's office by including this item in the bill. The Senate, in response to that resolution, struck the item out, and, then, at a subsequent time, after what we are charitable enough to say more mature deliberation, they reinserted the item as a Senate amendment. I think it legitimately belongs to conference.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. If the Senate conferees were willing to recede on amendment No. 88, and did recede, what then would happen?

Mr. KENDALL. The gentleman is assuming that this is an amendment made independently by the Senate.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. But here is the amendment—amendment No. 88. It is the Senate amendment. Suppose the Senate recedes?

Mr. KENDALL. I think there is no logical interpretation of this action of the Senate except to say that that provision was stricken from the House bill in response to the resolution and to preserve the comity between the Houses.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think the gentleman is probably correct in that.

Mr. MANN. That is not what the resolution was.

Mr. KENDALL. It was on account of the resolution, but perhaps not in response to it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, as has been stated, this bill has been, as is usually the case with the Indian appropriation bill after it leaves this body, loaded up with all kinds of amendments, increases in appropriations, and new appropriations not authorized by law.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, I direct the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this amendment is one that was authorized by the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which the gentleman himself is a member.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I am not discussing the amendment to which the gentleman refers. I am speaking generally to call attention to what happens to the Indian appropriation bill in every session of Congress after it leaves this House. The bill has been increased, I understand, by $5,000,000, in round numbers, an amount almost equal to what the bill carried when it left the House.

From my previous experiences on conferences on the Indian appropriation bill I have no doubt when the conferees finally submit a report that the increases that are now in the bill will be very materially eliminated and decreased and that we will have a reasonable Indian appropriation bill. This bill, I have to state, carries a number of items of general legislation, and, among others, one that refers to the White Earth Indians in Minnesota. I am not going to discuss the merits of this amendment, except to say that I think everyone who knows anything about the situation in the White Earth Reservation of Minnesota will admit that there ought to be some legislation. Generally I do not like to tack legislation upon appropriation bills. There are occasions when it is desirable, and this might be one of them. I do not say such is the case, but what I want to call attention to in connection with this matter is this: When Congress authorizes an investigation of a subject, that investigation ought to be conducted by the committee that has jurisdiction over the subject matter of the investigation.

Recently there has been an alleged investigation of conditions on the White Earth Reservation by a subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department. That investigation was conducted, or most of it, in the field by two members of the majority of that committee. There was no minority member of the committee who attended many hearings. The report which has been made by the committee is the report of the subcommittee consisting of two members, so that we have here, in fact, a report on the subject of conditions on the White Earth Reservation made by two Members of the House, neither of whom is a member of a committee that has jurisdiction over the subject matter. To that report made by the majority I dissented, so did the gentleman from Wyoming, and we filed minority views. I did so because I could not from any standpoint concur in the report of the majority members of the committee, which was full of conclusions not supported by the testimony that was taken. It was filled with many inaccuracies and some misstatements, and, among others, it referred disparagingly to one man in the Indian Service whom I have known personally for many years, and it is with reference to that part of the report that I want to speak.

The report seeks to discredit Inspector James McLaughlin, a man of the highest reputation and probity of character, who has been in the Indian Service more than 40 years and is generally known throughout the country as "the Indian's friend" more than any man now living; a man who has negotiated more agreements and more treaties with Indian tribes than any other man in the whole history of the country; is an author of note, as well as a practical man of Indian affairs; and now, in the evening of his life, he is contemptuously referred to in police-court parlance as "one James McLaughlin, who was and is still said to be," and so forth, and is assailed in a partisan report made by two members of a committee of this House having no jurisdiction over the subject matter which was "investigated."

This distinguished citizen, with a magnificent record in the public service, needs no defense from me or anyone else. The stigma which for partisan purposes—although Maj. McLaughlin is singularly free from partisan bias—it is sought now to attach to his reputation will have no effect upon persons even moderately well informed in the history of our Indian affairs, except, perchance, to react upon those who seek to detract from his well-earned brilliant career.

> Who steals my purse steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
> 'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
> But he that filches from me my good name
> Robs me of that which not enriches him,
> And makes me poor indeed.

While, as I have already said, Maj. McLaughlin needs no defense from the attack made upon him in a partisan report, it is not surprising that this modest gentleman of the old school should be sensitive to the intended reproach. In his own characteristic manner he has taken notice of the undeserved criticism, and I ask that a letter addressed by him to the Secretary of the Interior be read by the Clerk. With this, I will leave his detractors to such consolation as they may be able to extract from the situation.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 19, 1913.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: Report No. 1336, House of Representatives, Sixty-second Congress, third session, in the matter of the investigation of the White Earth Indian Reservation, contains allegations reflecting on me as an official of the Department of the Interior, and I, therefore, desire to place in the files of the department this statement.

The report, in so far as it relates to me, is so incorrect and absurdly ridiculous that I would let it pass unnoticed were it not that it is a report of a congressional committee, which, apart from having been made to Congress and now a part of the House records, has been given more than ordinary publicity in the newspapers throughout the country, which fact has influenced me to submit this statement with reference thereto for the files of the department with which I have been officially connected for the past 41 years.

The committee alleges (p. 8 of the report) that my instructions were—

"To hold a council of the Indians, with as large an attendance as can be procured, and obtain from them an individual expression of their desires and views, and to adopt such other measures as may be necessary to ascertain the views of a majority of the adult Indians."

A copy of my instructions was undoubtedly in the possession of Mr. M. C. Burch, attorney in charge of White Earth matters for the Department of Justice, but I have been unable to find that it was introduced as evidence before the committee. The quotation made above seems to have been extracted from a letter dated September 6, 1905, from F. E. Leupp, then Indian Commissioner, to the Secretary of the Interior, and may be found on pages 118 and 119 of Pamphlet No. 10 of the hearings before the subcommittee, marked "Burch's Exhibit No. 33."

My instructions came from the Secretary of the Interior and bore date of September 7, 1905, a fact the committee must have been fully aware of as a photographic copy of my report was introduced in evidence and reference to my instructions was made therein. (See Pamphlet No. 10 of hearings before the subcommittee, p. 120, Burch's Exhibit 34.)

I had been at the Round Valley Agency, Cal., and upon returning to San Francisco therefrom received a telegram from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, September 7, 1905.

MCLAUGHLIN,
Inspector, 23 Washington Street, San Francisco, Cal.:

Proceed to White Earth Agency, Minn., where instructions will meet you. Have superintendent warehouse forward other instructions to White Earth mailed yesterday to you in his care.

THOS. RYAN, Acting Secretary.

Upon receipt of this telegram I proceeded to White Earth Agency, Minn., arriving there on September 17, 1905, where I received the letter of instructions referred to in said telegram, which instructions were as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, September 7, 1905.

JAMES MCLAUGHLIN,
United States Indian Inspector, White Earth Agency, White Earth, Minn.

SIR: Referring to telegram sent you this morning directing you to proceed to the White Earth Agency, Minn, you are advised that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under date of 6th instant, reports that there is great dissatisfaction among the Indians of the White Earth Reservation on account of the allotments made to them by Agent Michelet, under the Steenerson Act, and he desires that you ascertain the wishes of a majority of the Indians in the matter of these allotments—that is, whether a majority prefer that the allotments as made by Agent Michelet shall stand, or whether they prefer to "draw" for the order of selections under a system similar to drawing for homesteads by whites where Indian lands are to be opened to settlement, the allotments in the order of the selections to be made either by a special agent of the Indian Office, or by a special agent and Agent Michelet jointly.

You will, therefore, promptly call a council of the Indians, with as large an attendance as can be secured, and obtain from them an expression of their wishes; and you are instructed to adopt any other measures you may deem necessary to ascertain the views and wishes of the majority of the adult Indians in the premises.

You are authorized to employ such clerical and other assistance as you may find necessary, such as stenographer, typewriter, interpreter, etc.; and you should use great caution in selecting an interpreter who is not only competent, but who can also be trusted to interpret honestly all that may be said at the council.

After completion of this duty you will proceed to the Colville Agency, as directed in department letter of the 6th instant, unless otherwise ordered in the meantime.

Very respectfully,

THOS. RYAN,
Acting Secretary.

It will be observed from the wording of my instructions that the quotation on page 8 of the committee's report does not state them correctly. The words, "individual expression of their wishes and views," as therein stated is incorrect and misleading; the correct wording of said sentence being "promptly call a council of the Indians, with as large an attendance as can be secured, and obtain from them an expression of their wishes," and the proceedings of the council convened by me with the White Earth Indians under said instructions were strictly carried out in accordance therewith.

My instructions were to hold a council to ascertain the wishes of a majority of the Indians in the matter of their additional allotments—that is, whether the majority preferred that the allotments as made by Agent Michelet should stand or whether they preferred to "draw" for the order of selections, and, in addition to holding a council for that purpose, I was instructed to adopt any other measures that I deemed necessary to ascertain the views and wishes of the majority of the adult Indians, meaning, as a matter of course, the male adults.

It would seem that the premise of the committee's statement should at least be accurate to warrant confidence in its findings. It also seems strange that after having received in evidence a photographic copy of my report, dated October 6, 1905 (pamphlet No. 10, p. 121), there was no reference to the minutes of the council, the basis of my said report, and they did not appear as having been introduced in the hearings; and, stranger still, several years after the council proceedings this stenographic record evidence, the existence of which the committee must certainly have had knowledge, should be discredited by the oral testimony of one member of the council, Rev. Charles Wright, who was present and took part in the proceedings, and the evidence of the Rev. Duane F. Porter, who did not attend the council, knew nothing of it, so he testified, until after it was over, although he resided within 30 miles of White Earth Agency and was at that time, as stated by him, constantly circulating among 300 acquaintances on the reservation.

The testimony of said Mr. Porter (hearing No. 11, p. 143) is so ridiculously absurd that I deem it unnecessary to comment upon. He admitted that he did not attend the McLaughlin council, yet gives testimony as though he knew all about it, which is disproven by the minutes of the council. The entire testimony of this man Porter appears to have been drawn out of him by Mr. Burch's leading questions.

The testimony of George Walters (pamphlet No. 11, pp. 174–183), who was evidently intended by attorneys Burch and O'Brien, as next to Mr. Wright, their star witness concerning me, must have been a disappointment to the prosecutors, notwithstanding the persistency of Mr. Burch in pressing the witness with the leading questions.

There is nothing in the printed reports of the hearings before the committee that challenges the integrity of the minutes of the council I held with the Indians of the White Earth Reservation at that time, and I submit that this record evidence can not be overcome by the unsupported testimony of one or two witnesses, even though, as the committee alleges, one of them—Rev. Charles Wright—is recognized by the Indians as chief of all the Chippewas, while it is a well-known fact by persons acquainted with the Minnesota Indians that the said Rev. Charles Wright is not recognized as a chief by more than 1 per cent of the Chippewas of the Mississippi.

As I stated in my report of October 6, 1905, I arrived at White Earth Agency on Sunday, September 17, 1905, and the following morning mailed to each chief and leading Indian of those interested—also for posting in the post offices at which Indians receive their mail—the following notice:

NOTICE.

WHITE EARTH AGENCY, MINN.,
September 18, 1905.

The undersigned desires to meet the Mississippi and Otter Tail Chippewa Indians of the White Earth Reservation, Minn., in council on Monday, September 25, 1905, at the hour of 1 o'clock p. m., at the White Earth Agency. All Indians interested in additional allotments of land under the Steenerson Act are requested to be present and participate in the council.

JAMES MCLAUGHLIN,
United States Indian Inspector.

It was not required of me to serve a notice on each individual Indian, nor to go out and canvass the reservation, nor bring the Indians into the agency. I issued the above-quoted notice and sent copies of it to all parts of the reservation that the Indians interested in additional allotments under the Steenerson Act might be advised of the council thus called and I am quite confident that every Indian then on the reservation had ample notice to be present at the council if they so desired.

Said notices were sent out from the agency on September 18, 1905, and the council was not convened until September 25, 1905, thus giving the Indians an entire week's notice, and that I did not hurry them in their deliberations is borne out by the duly certified minutes of the council, which show that three days were consumed in discussing the matter before the question was put to a vote of the 154 male adult Indians present, the result of which was 130 for the allotments, as made by the agent Michelet, to stand, with only 5 for reallotment and 19 declining to vote, which decisive vote clearly indicated the sentiment prevailing among the Indians with reference thereto, and the question was thus determined as reported by me under date of October 6, 1905.

The following appears in the committee's report (p. 8):

"This is what McLaughlin did: He held at White Earth Agency a so-called council, which he claims was attended by only 154 Indians, although there were at that time 2,800 entitled to allotment; he held them in conference about two days, and then, although there was nothing in his alleged notices hinting of such a purpose, he put to a vote the question as to whether the allotments should stand. He refused to allow the surprised full bloods present to send out runners to bring in the people from the reservation, and then and there forced the question to an issue; he falsely reported that 54 full bloods were present and voted in favor of allowing the Michelet allotments to stand, when the fact seems to be there were only five or six full bloods present and they refused to vote; he falsely reported that several mixed bloods whom he named were prominent full-blood chiefs; in anticipation of further objection from the chief, Rev. Charles Wright, he made vicious and unwarranted attacks on the birth and character of this faithful Indian leader and devout missionary, and recommended the fraudulent allotment be reinstated."

With reference to the above-quoted paragraph, based largely upon the allegations of said Rev. Charles Wright, together with the testimony of George Walters, I respectfully invite attention to the minutes of the council held by me with the White Earth Indians from September 25 to September 27, 1905, inclusive, which show that these two men, together with Peen-de-gay-ge-shig, who was Rev. Charles Wright's chief spokesman on that occasion, were the only persons expressing themselves as opposed to the allotments as made by Agent Michelet.

I desire to here state that I have officially conducted negotiations with nearly every tribe of Indians in the United States and have never before been accused of being unfair to the Indians; on the contrary, the only criticism of me in my negotiations as a representative of the Government with Indian tribes having been that I was inclined to be too generous and considerate of the wishes of the Indians, and in all of my negotiations with the Indians I have been unbiased, impartial, and fair in presenting the questions submitted to them by me, and my council with the White Earth Indians in said additional allotment matter was conducted strictly along those lines.

In this connection I desire to state that in my numerous councils with the Indians I have sometimes met individual members of tribes of similar character to said Rev. Charles Wright, who had selfish objects in view and who to gain recognition for their contentions opposed the will of the majority. I have always listened patiently to what such chronic objectors might have to say, but was never influenced by their attitude in arriving at my conclusion when so unreasonably selfish as Mr. Wright was in this instance; and, after a full discussion and clear understanding of the White Earth additional allotments matter, I arrived at the conclusion as stated in my report with reference thereto.

There was not the slightest doubt in my mind at the time, nor is there now, but that all Indians of the White Earth Reservation had due notice of the said council and that all desiring to attend were present at its sessions, and that Rev. Charles Wright, who is so frequently mentioned in the committee's report, had his entire following present with him in the council, he having come from Cass Lake, much farther than any of the other beneficiaries had to travel to the agency headquarters, while his two principal henchmen, Peen-de-gay-ge-shig and George Walters, lived in widely separated parts of the reservation, Peen-de-gay-ge-shig living about 20 miles northeast of the agency, and George Walters about 2 miles north of the agency, and all Indians attending said council came into the agency for that purpose upon the invitation contained in the notices sent out by me to the several districts of the reservation.

The committee's report appears to make much of what should be regarded a council of Indians, and speaks of the council I held with the White Earth Indians (Sept. 25 to Sept. 27, 1905, inclusive) as a "so-called council." With reference to same and with due respect to the members of that committee, I assert most emphatically that the said council was a large representative assemblage of the interested Indians of the White Earth Reservation. There were 154 male adult Indians present when the vote was taken, as shown by the minutes of the council, and my report thereon, which figures remain undisputed. There were at least 400 beneficiaries of the reservation—men, women, and children—in attendance at that council, but my dealings were with the male adults only.

After my many years' negotiations with the Indians I should be able to judge what a reasonable representative gathering of Indians of a reservation would be and I assert, without fear of honest contradiction, that a decision on any tribal question by 25 of the leading men of any of the northwestern reservations would be accepted as the act of an entire tribe. Therefore the 154 male adults of the White Earth Reservation who participated in the council of September 25 to 27, 1905, inclusive, voiced the sentiment prevailing among the Indians on the reservation and was, as regarded by me, or by any person with a fair knowledge of non-English speaking Indians, a greater representation than usual. Many Indians are indifferent in such matters, leaving their so-called chiefs and headmen to represent the tribe and decide upon the question under consideration, and my council with the White Earth Indians at the time referred to was with the full knowledge that the entire adult male population of the reservation was not present, but that all were notified and might have attended had they so desired, and that those in attendance represented the entire Indians of the reservation in this tribal council.

On March 10, 1912, I received a communication dated March 8, 1912, from the chairman of the committee, reading as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, March 8, 1912.

Mr. JAMES MCLAUGHLIN,
National Hotel, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In the investigation which our committee has been making of the White Earth (Minn.) Indian Reservation, your name has frequently been mentioned during the production of the evidence, and under circumstances which may lead you to think you should appear before the committee. I send you to-day a copy of the evidence printed up to this time and will send you the rest of the evidence as soon as it is printed, and the committee will give you an opportunity to be heard, if you so desire.

Very truly, yours,
JAMES M. GRAHAM.
Chairman Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

To the foregoing communication I made reply, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 13, 1912.

Hon. JAMES M. GRAHAM,
Chairman Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 8th instant, relative to the investigation which your committee is making of the White Earth (Minn.) Indian Reservation, has been received. In reply thereto I beg to state that I do not deem it necessary to appear before your committee, on my own account, inasmuch as I stand firmly on my reports on this matter.

However, if my evidence can be of any material assistance to your honorable committee, I waive subpœna and am ready to appear upon request.

Very respectfully,
JAMES MCLAUGHLIN,
Inspector, Department of the Interior.

I did not receive any reply to my letter, above quoted, and not having been subpœnaed nor further requested to appear before the committee, and, as stated in my letter to the chairman, standing firmly on my reports in the premises, based on the minutes of the several sessions of the council, I concluded that the matter was ended in so far as it concerned me, and was therefore greatly surprised to see it stated on page 9 of the committee's report that—

"McLaughlin was duly notified by your committee that his conduct as an official had been called in question, and was given an opportunity to be present at its sessions at Washington, but failed to appear."

I reiterate, as stated in my letter to Chairman GRAHAM, dated March 13, 1912, that I stand firmly on my report of October 6, 1905, in this matter, a copy of which report, together with copy of the minutes of the council upon which it was based, are transmitted herewith, the originals of which are on file in the department, and the reading of which by any fair-minded and unbiased person can not but regard the proceedings and report thereon as a complete refutation of the conclusions adopted by a majority of the committee in their report dated January 16, 1913, in so far as it relates to me in connection with White Earth Reservation matters.

In reference to the said council held by me with the White Earth Indians, referred to in the committee's report as "really a Nichols-Chisholm council," which insinuation of me having been unduly influenced is too absurd for me to comment upon other than to state that I had never heard of the Nichols-Chisholm Lumber Co. until reference to White Earth timber matters began to appear in the Minnesota newspapers some years after my said council—probably about the year 1909—also that I have never met any member of said lumber company nor any of their representatives so far as I am aware of; that no lumbermen or any white men other than those belonging on the White Earth Reservation attended said council, and I challenge any man to produce evidence that I have ever been in a business way associated or connected with any lumber company in the United States.

With reference to the Mille Lac matter, referred to by the committee, and which has no direct bearing upon White Earth matters, I desire to submit that this entire transaction, so far as my connection with it is concerned, is a matter of record not only in the Department of the Interior but also in the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice, the same having come up incidentally in the Court of Claims in case No. 30447, decided May 6, 1912, known as the "Mille Lac Band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota v. The United States."

The joint report of Agent Michelet and myself, dated September 30, 1902, transmitting the agreement entered into by us with the said Mille Lac Indians under the act of May 27, 1902, together with the accompanying papers, gives printed in full in No. 30447, Court of Claims, evidence for defendants in said case, and the findings of fact of said court fully upholds our construction of the said act of Congress, the provisions of which we strictly adhered to in our negotiations with the Indians, and the agreement which we entered into with them, including the disposition of the funds after the Indians in tribal council had declared how they wished the money disbursed. The said act provides:

"That this appropriation shall be paid only after said Indians shall, by proper council proceedings, have accepted the provisions hereof and declared the manner in which they wish the money disbursed."

Judge Booth, of the Court of Claims, who delivered the opinion of the court, said in reference to this:

"The act of May 27, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 268), appropriated $40,000 to pay the Mille Lacs for the improvements made upon their reservation. It can not affect this controversy, and was at the most a tardy and almost inconsequential recompense to secure their removal from a reservation from which they had already been excluded by being divested of their Indian title, and upon which they had remained because of the failure to extend to them the benefits of the act of 1889. All the treaties with the Mille Lacs provided payment of expense of removal to their new reservation. The Congress by the terms of this act recognized their possession of the reservation as a tribe by authorizing the amount appropriated to be paid in accordance with tribal law adopted in council proceedings."

And Judge Howry of said court said that—

"The improvements at the time the appraisement was made were practically of no value, and were assessed at what they had been, the object being to secure the removal of the Indians to the White Earth Reservation."

I cite these facts to show that there was no foundation whatever for the reference to this Mille Lac case in the committee's report, as the facts as herein stated should have been known to Attorneys Burch and O'Brien, of the Department of Justice, who presented this case to the committee in pamphlet No. 7 of the hearings, wherein Attorney Burch, under the caption "A two-edged fraud—Mille Lac case," stated:

"Michelet and this same McLaughlin went over for the Government to investigate and appraise the improvements and found practically none—nothing but the charred remains of some Indian tepees; but to eat up—that is, to cover the entire $40,000—these charred remains were appraised at the original cost of the tepee, and items were inserted in the list of improvements, such as the profit an Indian would make gathering wild rice for a year, for gathering wild honey for a like period, and other like items."

This statement of Mr. Burch is a misrepresentation of facts, as there was no items of rice or wild honey in our schedule of appraisement, and the baseless allegation as presented by Attorney Burch being, in substance, accepted and adopted by the committee, should tend to discredit the entire report.

The wild rice and wild honey referred to in Mr. Burch's statement in Hearing No. 7, as to what he was going to prove before the committee, was doubtless found by him in an appraisement filed in the department of losses aggregating about $76,000 sustained by Mille Lac Indians forwarded by Mr. D. H. Robbins, of Vineland, Mille Lac County, Minn., to the Secretary of the Interior about two years previous to our negotiations with the Mille Lac Indians under the act of May 27, 1902, which appraisement list was never acted upon by the department and had no connection whatever with the appraisement made by Agent Michelet and myself. I mention this to show the extremes to which Attorneys Burch and O'Brien resorted (neither of whom I have ever met) in their efforts to besmirch character with the evident hope of thus aggrandizing themselves.

The committee's report, on first page thereof, states that—

"This subcommittee, through its chairman, had requested of the representative of the Department of Justice (M. C. Burch) a complete statement of the matter to be presented to your subcommittee in its further sessions. This was furnished with reasonable promptitude and constitutes No. 7 of the series. It served as a guide to the subcommittee during our subsequent proceedings."

As pertinent to the foregoing, I respectfully invite attention to the striking similarity of the phraseology employed in said Hearing No. 7 (being Attorney Burch's statement) and in the report of the committee, which, as regarded by me, makes it unnecessary for me to comment further upon this phase of the proceedings, other than that it clearly shows that the report is based upon a statement of what was to be presented, instead of the actual facts.

Very respectfully,
JAMES MCLAUGHLIN,
Inspector Interior Department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe it is necessary to make any further statement, and I will ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules, taking this bill from the Speaker's table, disagreeing to the Senate amendments, and asking for a conference.

The question was taken; and (in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the motion to send the bill to conference was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, Mr. CARTER, and Mr. BURKE of South Dakota.

INDIGENT PERSONS OTHER THAN NATIVES IN THE DISTRICT OF ALASKA.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill S. 267, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 267) providing for assisting indigent persons, other than natives, in the District of Alaska.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1578).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 267) providing for assisting indigent persons, other than natives, in the District of Alaska, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same with an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, as follows:

"That section 1 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes,' approved January 27, 1905, as amended by an act approved May 14, 1906, and as further amended by an act approved February 6, 1909, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"'SECTION 1. That all moneys derived from and collected for liquor licenses, occupation or trade licenses, outside of the incorporated towns in the Territory of Alaska, shall be deposited in the Treasury Department of the United States, there to remain as a separate and distinct fund, to be known as the 'Alaska fund,' and to be wholly devoted to the purposes hereinafter stated in the Territory of Alaska. Twenty-five per cent of said fund, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be devoted to the establishment and maintenance of public schools in said Territory; 10 per cent of said fund shall be, and is hereby, appropriated and authorized to be expended for the relief of persons in Alaska who are indigent and incapacitated through nonage, old age, sickness, or accident; and all the residue of said fund shall be devoted to the construction and maintenance of wagon roads, bridges, and trails in said Territory: Provided, That the clerk of the court of each judicial division of said Territory is authorized, and he is hereby directed, whenever considered necessary, to call upon the United States marshal of said judicial division to aid in the collection of said license moneys by designating regular or special deputies of his office to act as temporary license inspectors, and it shall be the duty of said United States marshal to render such aid; and the said regular or special deputies while actually engaged in the performance of this duty shall receive the same fees and allowances and be paid in the same manner as when performing their regular duties.

"'That at the end of each fiscal quarter the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States shall divide the amount of said 10 per cent of said fund so received during the quarter just ended into four equal parts, and transmit to each of the four United States district judges in Alaska one of said equal amounts.

"'That each of said judges is hereby authorized to expend so much of the money received by him under this act as may, in his discretion, be required for the relief of those persons in his division who are incapacitated through nonage, old age, sickness, or accident, and who are indigent and unable to assist and protect themselves: Provided, That each judge shall quarterly submit to the Secretary of the Treasury an itemized statement, with proper vouchers, of all expenditures made by him under this act, and he shall at the time transmit a copy of said statement to the governor of the Territory: Provided further, That any unexpended balance remaining in the hands of any judge at the end of any quarter shall be returned to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and by him deposited in the said "Alaska fund," and the said sum shall be subsequently devoted, first, to meeting any actual requirements for the care and relief of such persons as are provided for in this act in any other division in said Territory wherein the amount allotted for that purpose has proved insufficient; and, second, if there shall be any remainder thereof, said remainder shall be devoted to the construction and maintenance of wagon roads, bridges, and trails in said Territory.'"

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide assistance to persons in Alaska who are indigent and incapacitated through nonage, old age, sickness, or accident, and for other purposes."

And the House agree to the same.

RUFUS HARDY,
J. N. LANGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

KNUTE NELSON,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House submit the following statement of the agreement of the conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill S. 267: The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, with an amendment which changes the bill as it passed the House by striking out, in line 21, page 2, the word "thirty" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "twenty-five"; and by striking out, in line 17, page 3, the words "section 2"; and by striking out, in line 21, page 3, the word "marshals" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "district judges"; and by striking out, in line 23, page 3, the words "section 3"; and by striking out, in the same line, the word "marshals" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "judges"; and by striking out, in line 4, page 4, the words "marshal with his quarterly report" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "judge"; and in the same line by inserting, after the word "shall," the word "quarterly," and, after the word "submit," inserting the words "to the Secretary of the Treasury"; and, in line 9, page 4, by striking out the word "marshal" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "judge"; and by striking out, in line 10, page 4, the word "Treasurer" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of the Treasury."

RUFUS HARDY,
J. N. LANGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 28607), the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 28607) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The statement was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1585).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28607) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, and 6, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28607) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report on each of the said amendments:

Amendment No. 1: Appropriates $100,000 for marking the boundary line between Alaska and Canada and the United States and Canada, instead of $105,000, as proposed by the Senate. One hundred thousand dollars is the appropriation proposed by the House. The Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 2: Strikes out the appropriation of $2,000 for the share of the United States of expenses that may be incurred in carrying out the convention between the United States and Great Britain concerning the fisheries in waters contiguous to the United States and Dominion of Canada, and the expenses of the commission on the part of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendments Nos. 3 and 4: Change the phraseology making appropriations for International Joint Commission on Boundary Waters under treaty between the United States and Great Britain. The House recedes from its disagreement to these two amendments.

Amendment No. 5: Appropriates $20,000 to enable the United States to contribute to the adornment of the Palace of Peace at The Hague by sending some object of art of national production, instead of no appropriation as proposed by the House and $30,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 6: Appropriates $5,000 for an international conference for the purpose of drawing up international rules and regulations for the assignment of load lines to merchant ships, as proposed by the Senate, instead of no appropriation for this purpose as proposed by the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill S. 8275, an act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the statement.

The statement was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1586).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 8275) granting pensions and increase of pension to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16.

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 5, and agree to the same.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. J. MCCUMBER,
B. F. SHIVELY,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1 is the case of John W. Slaughter (S. 199): The Senate passed this item at $20 per month. The House reduced the amount to $12, in accordance with the recommendation of the board of examiners. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 2, the case of Louisa A. Thatcher (S. 824), widow of a soldier and dependent mother of an officer in the Navy who was killed by an explosion of a gun on the battleship Georgia: This case is a little unusual. The Senate passed the case at $24 per month and the House struck the item from the bill. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 3 is the case of Charles W. Camp (S. 1766): The Senate passed this at $20 per month. The House reduced the amount to $16 per month. The soldier is now drawing $14 per month for disabilities incurred in the service, and giving him the benefit of the doubt the additional amount allowed by the Senate is permissible and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 4, Charles M. Baughman (S. 3845): The Senate passed this at $30 per month. The soldier is suffering from disabilities due largely to accident received after his service, and it is not shown that he incurred any serious disability by reason of service. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 5, Elizabeth S. Lewerenz (S. 3943): The Senate passed this at $40 per month. The House struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the widow's financial condition did not justify the increase. It appears, however, that a part of the funds which the widow has is set aside for the use of her child, and the case is permissible in accordance with precedent. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 6, the case of Minnie Wadsworth Wood (S. 5751): It does not appear that officer's death was due to service. The House struck the item from the bill, and the Senate recedes from its disagreement to that amendment.

Amendment No. 7, Barbara B. Haws (S. 6969): The House struck this item from the bill on the grounds that the soldier's actual service was considerably less than the 30 days required, although it does appear that he was with his company for about 27 days. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendment No. 8, Charles L. Stevens (S. 7088): The House struck this item from the bill on the grounds that the evidence of incurrence of disability in the service was not sufficient to justify the allowance of the claim. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment.

Amendment No. 9, James McMahon (S. 7228): The House struck this item from the bill on the grounds that the evidence of incurence of disability in the service is rather remote, and if his disability has increased he could obtain relief at the bureau, where he has not applied for increase for more than five years. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendments Nos. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16 are all items which the House struck out, which items proposed to increase the pensions of soldiers who served in the Indian wars, all of whom will receive a greater increase under a law recently passed. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to all of these amendments.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS BILL.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 28766, the omnibus public buildings bill, and ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves the right to object to what?

Mr. HARDWICK (continuing). To unanimous consent. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] be willing to give us opportunity now, or to assure us that we can at a later time have an opportunity, for a separate vote on Senate amendment No. 196, which relates to the general policy and endeavors to put a limit on how these buildings shall be constructed?

Mr. MANN. Which amendment?

Mr. HARDWICK. Senate amendment No. 196.

Mr. BURNETT. I have no authority, Mr. Speaker, to give any assurances whatever. As to the general policy of that amendment, with some variations I think I should favor it myself, perhaps, and I can give no assurance as to what the conference committee will do.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will it give us an opportunity to express ourselves on this question?

Mr. BURNETT. I do not know about that.

Mr. HARDWICK. Unless the gentleman modifies his request so as to let us have a separate vote now, or give us some assurance that the chairman of the conferees, and we know that he will be chairman on the part of the House, will allow us an opportunity at a later time to vote on that proposition, I shall be compelled to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] moves to suspend the rules and take the bill H. R. 28766 from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 28766. An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, the extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HARDWICK. I demand a second.

Mr. BORLAND. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] demands a second.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. HARDWICK. Is the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] opposed to the amendment?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] to 20 minutes. Which one of the gentlemen desires to proceed?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire merely to state that there are a number of Senate amendments; that there are some of them perhaps that are good and many of them that, no doubt, are bad; and I think the conferees can be trusted to determine what, in their opinion, is good and what is bad and report it to the House. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The amendment that is objected to creates a commission by legislation?

Mr. BURNETT. No, sir. The amendment which is objected to by gentlemen is that while there may be a site or a building authorized, yet there can be no appropriation for it until it reaches the limit of $10,000 in receipts.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 28180) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. NELSON, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, and Mr. SIMMONS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used three minutes. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] desire to use any of his time? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, this bill to provide public buildings passed the other body at 4 o'clock this morning. It has been impossible for Members of this House to see a printed copy of it as passed, let alone to give the amendments any consideration. But from the newspaper reports it is indicated that about $19,000,000 has been added since the bill left this House. The bill as reported in the other legislative body carried not only the items that left the House, but it also carried some $9,700,000 in addition for expenditures in the District of Columbia, and some eleven or twelve million dollars for expenditures outside of the District of Columbia.

My information is that of the $9,000,000 for the District of Columbia the only item that failed to pass the other legislative body is that for the building for the loyal women of the Civil War. Just exactly why that item failed I am unable to understand. The bill carried, when reported, an item of $5,000,000 for the Memorial Bridge, $1,750,000 for an armory, $2,300,000 to move the Botanic Garden into the bed of Rock Creek, and some other items which I do not now recall. I understand that the $5,000,000 project of the Memorial Bridge was reduced to $1,500,000, but it may be, as it has heretofore happened that that will only be the starter for the $5,000,000 project, so that the amount finally chargeable to the Treasury may be the total of $5,000,000.

I want to say this to the Members of the House: That when this bill left the House it was subjected to some criticism here and elsewhere on the ground that a great many of the items were not authorized by the needs of the public service; that many of the proposed buildings were in towns too small to justify the expenditure of public money for such a purpose; that there were items of fifty or sixty thousand and even of one hundred thousand dollars in towns where the postal receipts were not sufficient to justify such buildings.

I say to you, gentlemen, that I have no knowledge of what those items are. I hope and believe they were very few in number compared with the many good projects in the bill. It may be that some items of that kind are in the bill, and that these charges that have been hurled against the House, and particularly the Democratic Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of preparing a pork-barrel measure may be based on some honest, and not purely malicious criticism. But to make up that $9,000,000 hogshead of pork for the District of Columbia it would take at least 200 items of that fifty or sixty thousand dollar size; it would take that many items to make that hogshead of pork that is rolled in here from the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

From all over this country, where the great business of the American people is being transacted, where these public buildings are to be placed, Members come here to show the needs of their districts and get the consent of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that certain items shall go in, based, to my knowledge, in nearly every case, on a concrete showing of the necessity; and yet we are asked here to pass a bill that contains perhaps less than a score of items that can be attacked on any ground of just criticism out in the country, but containing a nearly $10,000,000 hogshead of pork for the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

We are compelled to submit to this unjust criticism from one end of this country to the other, of having prepared a pork-barrel bill, when there is not a Member of this House that has got more than a slice of side meat compared with this hogshead of pork that is rolled in here in the last days of the session. I am disgusted with this high-handed attempt to not only get the lion's share of the pork, but to load all the odium upon the House of Representatives.

I was fighting a battle here to keep that $2,000,000 for the Lincoln Memorial from being swallowed up by the real estate ring of the District of Columbia and used for this Greek temple down on the Mall. I told you then that it would be but the beginning of a raid on the Treasury; that it would take $2,300,000 to move the Botanic Gardens into Rock Creek, and other enormous expenses to beautify the site of that temple. But they have put not only that into this bill, but the bridge also, and $1,750,000 for an armory, which is to be built upon land belonging to the United States, and not to the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. I understood the Memorial Bridge item was put in at $1,500,000. I understood the gentleman to say it was $5,000,000.

Mr. BORLAND. I said while it was reduced to a million and a half, it might be increased eventually to the original $5,000,000 when the camel once got his head through the canvas of the tent.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that $5,000,000 was recommended for the Memorial Bridge.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not think the House was misled. I referred to the fact that the item carried $1,500,000, and I stated my opinion that in the end this amount would be increased to the $5,000,000 necessary to cover it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this House wants to brand itself and to submit to the charge of passing pork-barrel bills, it can agree to send this bill to conference. I do not say that that will result in a pork-barrel bill, but I say that the proper way to fight the charge of having brought in a pork-barrel bill will be for the House to take possession of these amendments that have been sent from the other body, eliminate the items that are not defensible, and put the bill in a shape where any Member of this House can stand and justify the bill, both here and elsewhere. [Applause.]

That is the proper course to be taken with these bills, and the time to meet the pork-barrel charge is now, before the bill is passed, while it is in this House, while the amendments proposed are before this House, and we should not put that burden upon the conferees exclusively.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used seven minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understood the gentleman from Missouri to say he would eliminate these Senate amendments. In what manner would he eliminate them, except by disagreeing to them?

Mr. BORLAND. The rules of this House provide that if this motion is voted down, the bill must go to the committee. When it comes back from the committee it must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, because it involves a charge upon the American people, and when it goes before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, then the House has full control of the bill, Senate amendments and all. We can then send the bill to the Senate in whatever shape we desire.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. But the most that we can do with any Senate amendment is to disagree to it.

Mr. BORLAND. That would eliminate that particular amendment, and there would be nothing for the conferees to act upon.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman is mistaken. The most the House can do is to disagree to the Senate amendments.

Mr. MANN. It is true that if this motion is voted down, then the bill will be on the waste heap, will it not?

Mr. BORLAND. If this motion is voted down, the bill will then be referred under the rule.

Mr. MANN. That is the same thing.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to suggest to the gentleman that if this motion is voted down and the bill goes to the committee and then back to the House, and is then referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when we consider each item, all that the Committee of the Whole House can do is to disagree to the several amendments of the Senate and then ask for a conference. Does not this motion accomplish the same thing, and is not that what this motion is?

Mr. LANGLEY. And is not this the more expeditious method?

Mr. NORRIS. And is it not true that if a man is opposed to the Senate amendments he ought to be in favor of this motion?

Mr. BORLAND. No. The gentleman from Nebraska understands——

Mr. NORRIS. When the gentleman gets his bill back into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the memorial bridge amendment, for instance, will come up for action. What action can the Committee of the Whole take?

Mr. BORLAND. The Committee of the Whole can vote that amendment out of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Why, no; they can not do that. The gentleman must understand that all they could do would be to disagree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. That would vote it out of the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Not unless the Senate receded from its amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. No; disagreeing to it would not vote it out of the bill, because it is a Senate amendment, which would still be in disagreement between the two Houses and a subject for the action of the conferees. Its condition as to each amendment will be the same as if this motion is agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. And would not a failure to agree to this motion practically result in the defeat of the bill?

Mr. KENDALL. All the House can do is to send it back with the Senate amendment disagreed to, and with an instruction to the conferees not to agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. LANGLEY. Would not the procedure which the gentleman has detailed necessarily result in the defeat of any public-building bill at all at this session in view of the short time remaining between now and adjournment?

Mr. BORLAND. Not necessarily.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think it would.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is it not also true that the House may agree to some of these amendments?

Mr. NORRIS. That is very true.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. And that would produce a different result.

Mr. LANGLEY. And more complications and delay, greatly endangering the bill itself.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Georgia suggests an amendment that the House may very well agree to in Committee of the Whole, and that would take it out of the realm of the conference.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. As I recollect the rule, if this motion to suspend the rules and disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference is adopted, the only way the gentleman can get any expression from the House is, before the conferees are appointed, the gentleman may move an expression of opinion on the part of the House, or to instruct the conferees not to agree to that amendment and report a disagreement, so as to give the House an opportunity to voice its opinion as to what ought to be done. I see no other way for the gentleman to get at the matter except to defeat this motion, and then it would go to the committee; and when the committee reports back, the only way then would be to get an expression on this Senate amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman, it is true the conference report is not subject to amendment in detail, and for that reason this House adopted Rule XX, that when the Senate amendments were matters that would properly come before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, if they originated in a House committee, they should be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and a point of order lie against them. That is attempted to be avoided in this case by moving to suspend the rules. It is true the thing to do now is to vote down the motion to suspend the rules and then the ordinary rules of the House will take ample care of the bill and it will be referred under the rule to the proper committee, and when amendments come in, if it involves a charge on the people, they will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and we may agree to some and disagree to others.

Mr. CANNON. That is all true; but these are the closing days of the session, and if the course that the gentleman lines out is adopted it seems to me that it brings failure to the bill. I suggest to the gentleman that if he wants an expression of the House as to this particular amendment, or any other, before the Speaker announces the conferees, in the event the rules are suspended, he can move a resolution expressing the opinion of the House or to instruct the committee as to these matters that they must report a disagreement, so as to give the House later on an opportunity to express its will.

Mr. BORLAND. So much the worse that it comes in the closing days of the session. It involves $45,000,000 of public buildings, when there is not one in ten that can be begun within the elected term or reelected term of any Member present, and it is doubtful if one can be begun between now and March, 1915.

Mr. AUSTIN. Could not we spend the million dollars in which the gentleman's building is involved?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I doubt very much whether you could spend that money. It is not $1,000,000, but $150,000; but I am as much interested in this as is the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman is interested in his own proposition.

Mr. BORLAND. I am just as much interested in my proposition as the gentleman from Tennessee is interested in his. When I take this position I take it at as much personal sacrifice as would the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, the gentleman from Missouri does not lose anything.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I think I agree with what I think is the gentleman's main purpose. I did not vote for the bill when it passed the House, and would not vote for it with all the Senate amendments, but it seemed to me, in the light I have, that the proper thing to do was to disagree to the Senate amendments and on this motion to suspend the rules accomplish the very thing that the gentleman seeks to accomplish. If it comes back in the shape of a conference report containing all the items, some of which I think ought to be excluded, I shall vote against it.

Mr. BORLAND. We would have to vote them all down, which I think ordinarily would not be possible. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to oppose the bill going to conference, but I do think the conferees ought to have some knowledge of the methods proposed by one amendment. That old crooked black snake proposition that has been before the House so often and always fails on its own merits to beautify Rock Creek Valley from Massachusetts Avenue causeway that crosses it to the Potomac River was sneaked in here. It was defeated by a very large vote in this House as a part of what was then denominated the Judson plan, when only three Democrats voted for it and mighty few of any other sort voted for it. Before voting for it go down there and look at that crooked stream. For years and years the purpose has been to fill up Rock Creek Valley, providing a large sewer underneath it. But now it must be bought at an immense price and dug out so as to have an immense automobile drive on both sides. Under the general law we now have when property of that sort is purchased for such a purpose one-third of the value of that property is to be assessed against the abutting property owners. If this amendment goes through in this way then the general law will not apply, and the millions and millions of dollars worth of property in that portion of Washington will be improved by Government expenditure, with not one cent levied as benefits upon the abutting property.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I judge from what the gentleman says that the proposition is here in the shape of an amendment to purchase that real estate there, which amendment went out on two different occasions before.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly. It amounts to $2,300,000.

Mr. NORRIS. I am just as much opposed to that as the gentleman is. I am the Member who demanded a second on the fight when we defeated that bill.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. But this is a disagreement to it. I have faith that our conferees will never consent to that. If there is any way to instruct them or to get a vote upon it, I will be very glad to get it. I will never support the bill with that in it.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; and I want the conferees now to state here to this House that before they will accept that amendment, avoiding the assessment of benefits on adjoining property, they will bring the bill back here for further instructions from this House. That is all I want to say. I know this way of disagreeing to Senate amendments is simply formal. It does not emphasize anything. This is one item which we do want to disagree to in an emphatic way, because we do not want the Senate in the last days of a dying Congess to undertake to cram it down our throats simply because of the fact that we are getting a little bit of pork out of the barrel.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, why should the Members of this House single out the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and attempt to muzzle them, and virtually say, "We have no confidence in you, and your case is different and deserves different treatment and action on the part of the House"? Why should we attempt here to discredit our colleagues who will be the conferees on the part of the House? What have they done to merit such a course or such a policy? These other appropriation bills have come here yesterday, the day before, and this morning, and the membership of this House has disagreed in every instance to the Senate amendments and trusted to the wisdom, honor, and fidelity of the conferees on every one of those committees. But now we must say to Mr. BURNETT, of Alabama, to Mr. CLARK, of Florida, to Mr. ANDRUS, of New York, "You are separate and apart; you are in a class all by yourselves." It is not fair treatment to them, and it is not just to ourselves.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to ask the gentleman if his argument is not far-fetched. Everybody has confidence in the gentlemen he has named. It is not from lack of confidence, but it is because of a feeling of distrust that, with the success of this bill so dear to the heart of us, we may be tempted with important Senate amendments, in order to get what we want ourselves, to swallow a few elephants, some lions, or a tiger or two. [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, in the last analysis of this proposition as presented to this House it is nothing more nor less than a statement that we can not intrust this matter to the care and keeping of these three worthy and honorable Members of the House. I hope we will mete out the same treatment to the conferees on this bill that has been extended to every other conference committee.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the membership of the House will not misunderstand the situation. I think no one can regard it as it now stands without realizing that to refuse to send this bill to conference means that no public-building bill will be passed at this session. I think there can be no question but that that will be the result, whatever they may think it would be best to do under different circumstances. I am a new Member of the House and a new member of this committee, and hence, when I heard that the only possible motives that could actuate a committee in the formation of this bill were bad, mercenary, pork-barrel motives, I felt as though it was some reflection upon my service and the service of those who had labored with me.

I had seen the members of this committee at their work. I knew how, day after day, they had carefully examined into the various items that make up this bill. I have seen the Democratic majority and the Republican minority working together to agree, first, on fair rules, and, second, upon an adjustment of them to the circumstances as nearly as they could.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I must decline to yield; I have not the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TOWNER. I have seen the members of this committee trying to do as near justice as it was possible in all of these items, to deal fairly with the different Members of this House, to deal fairly with different sections of this country, to make a fair adjustment between the District of Columbia and the other sections of the United States. I have seen all this, and I have thought that they had done well in bringing in this bill, and I still think so, Mr. Speaker. I believe it to be as fair and as reasonable a bill as was ever reported to this House by a Buildings and Grounds Committee. [Applause.] It is three years since a buildings bill of any kind was reported. It is ordinarily the practice to report one every two years. It is expected we will expend $12,000,000 a year on these public buildings throughout the United States. It is expected that in order to meet these provisions $25,000,000 will be included in the authorization that this committee makes every two years. It was not done last year for the reason that gentlemen who had the responsibility thought it best not to do so. I am not here now to criticize that action. But I do desire to say that now, after three years have passed, this House must either abandon the proposition that public buildings are to be fairly apportioned throughout this country, or we ought to send this bill to conference under suspension of the rules.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I believe we have no more remarks to make, and I therefore move the previous question——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not move the previous question. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended, this bill taken from the Speaker's table, the Senate amendments disagreed to, and a conference asked for? [After the question was put.] Two-thirds having voted therefor——

Mr. HARDWICK. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia rise?

Mr. HARDWICK. I demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 164, noes 26.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is a quorum present. [Applause.] Two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules are suspended and the motion is agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to instruct the conferees.

Mr. BURNETT. Is not the announcement of the conferees the next thing in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this motion, if it is going to be made, ought to be made before the conferees are appointed. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the conferees be instructed to agree to Senate amendment 196.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Clerk to read the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Would it be in order to move to lay the motion on the table?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman did he would lay the bill on the table, too.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not care to make the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment 196, page 34, line 20, after $5,000 insert, "Provided, That no contract authorized by any section of this act for the erection of buildings to be used exclusively as post offices, or for the purchase of sites for such buildings, shall be entered into, nor shall any public moneys be expended for such purpose until the receipts of such post office for which any such building or site is intended shall amount to more than $10,000 per annum."

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, the House will remember that when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] was recognized to make this motion that he first asked unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments en bloc. I then requested the gentleman from Alabama to give to the House an opportunity to vote separately on this one Senate amendment. The gentleman being unwilling to do that at that moment, I asked him to give to the House——

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask if I have not the right to control the time on this motion?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has a right to control the time.

Mr. BURNETT. I thought the one in charge of the bill had the right to control the time.

Mr. HARWICK. Not on this motion, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the gentleman in control of the bill had a right to control it. This is an independent motion.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has been recognized, and hence is entitled to the time, but if he had not been recognized the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] was entitled to recognition, and while the motion is preferential it does not take the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama did not demand to be recognized.

Mr. MANN. That is true.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has an hour if he wants to consume it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say in the beginning to the House that I am not filibustering on this proposition, and will not consume the hour, because I am not making any captious objection. When the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] made a request to send this bill to conference by disagreeing to the Senate amendments en bloc, I asked him to let us have a vote then on this one Senate amendment. The amendment, I believe, would be supported by a majority on this floor if acted on independently. The gentleman was unwilling to make that concession, unwilling to give this House an opportunity to express its will in this matter. He went even further—and, of course, my criticism of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is entirely impersonal—he went even further in this matter, and would not give this House any assurance that either now or later, or at any time, a majority of this House could have its will, whatever that will might be, about this one matter. In other words, he proposed to keep this question tied up in the bill, supported by every proposition that is in it, with the cohesive force of every favored Member behind the proposition, and is not willing to give us a separate vote on this question because he did not know what would become of it, if such separate vote were had.

Now, gentlemen, what is this question? Before I go into a brief discussion of it I want to say that, personally, there is no Member of this House who would be more disadvantageously affected by agreeing to the Senate amendment than myself. I have two items in this bill, one put in by the House committee in a place where the postal receipts are $7,600 a year—my own home town. The bill was introduced, as I formerly stated, in this House by myself under a misapprehension as to what the postal receipts were. I did not expect the item to be in the bill. But it was there, and when I reported to the committee about the matter they said fairly and truthfully to me that there were many other items in the bill lower than that, and, therefore, the item ought to stay. In addition to that the Senate has put in another item in my district, where the postal receipts are about $7,900 a year. So, if the amendment of the Senate were agreed to, these two towns in my own district would probably have to wait for years before they came up to this rule and got this appropriation, if they ever got it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. About how much authorization in this bill will be eliminated if this Senate provision is carried?

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will not answer that now, but in just a moment I will answer it in another part of my argument. For years I have been at least under the impression, an impression I have not hesitated to voice openly and publicly at home, that we were held down in this committee to something like $10,000 of receipts. Have not you all thought so? Has any gentleman on this floor told his people otherwise?

Mr. LANGLEY. I have, and we frequently have gone below that figure.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will yield to all of them in a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not yield to all of them at once.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, I will not yield now.

Let us see what this is. We have in this bill, as it passed, three propositions for villages of less than 1,000 population. We have half a dozen propositions where the receipts are $2,000 or $3,000 a year. We have many propositions for towns and villages with a population of 1,500 or less and with postal receipts of $4,000 or less.

Gentlemen, I say it is a dangerous proposition—dangerous to the Public Treasury in the years to come and dangerous to the individual Members of this House. What are you going to say to the people of towns of similar size and of similar postal receipts in your own districts when they demand that you join in another and far greater raid upon the Public Treasury? We ought to have a rule about this, and we ought to live up to it religiously on both sides of this Chamber.

Mr. AUSTIN. Now will it interrupt the gentleman to answer a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. It will not now.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to ask the gentleman from Georgia if he did not introduce a bill to establish a post-office building at Sandersville, in the State of Georgia, carrying an appropriation of $60,000, where the postal receipts were only $7,666?

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly; and if the gentleman from Tennessee had been in the Chamber, attending to his duties, he would have heard my statement on that subject.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to say that I am here oftener than the gentleman is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee must not interrupt the gentleman without his consent.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman from Tennessee had heard what had preceded in my statement, he would not have asked the question. Undoubtedly I did. I thought that that town had about $10,000 postal receipts when I introduced the bill, but before your bill was passed, before it was reported, I gave information to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to the effect that I had been misinformed as to the facts, and I was informed by my colleague [Mr. RODDENBERY] on the committee that there was no reason for taking this item out of the bill, because, as he said and said truly, there were many other items in the bill for buildings in towns having postal receipts far below it.

I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I would not have introduced the bill in the first place, as I have written to my people at my home, if I had not been under the impression that the receipts of the post office at that town were above the limit that has been prescribed.

Mr. AUSTIN. You could have got the information from your people immediately if you had wanted to.

Mr. HARDWICK. I did; and as soon as I got the information I gave the committee the benefit of my information. The gentleman from Tennessee can lay no charge of inconsistency at my door—not truly, at least.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The gentleman is entirely correct in his statement that he came to me and told me that if his item was not within the rule he did not want it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; I do think I said exactly that.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I say the gentleman from Georgia, my colleague, came to me after the bill was reported to the House by the committee. Immediately upon the bill being reported I went to him and interrupted him and my other colleague from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS], as they were both sitting here, with a memorandum of what the House bill as reported contained for their districts. That was on the Saturday just before the House repaired to the Senate to attend the exercises in memory of the late Vice President Sherman. But the gentleman did then and there come to me, within a few moments——

Mr. HARDWICK. Exactly——

Mr. RODDENBERY. And advised me that there was going to be some kick, as he understood, on these small items, and I told him that he need not worry, because the committee had adopted a number of other items that were for as small cities as his.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. I think I stated the facts fairly enough. Of course the formal report may have been made, but my colleague's notice was the first I had. I do not think my colleague has taken issue with my statement.

Mr. RODDENBERY. No; I do not take issue with my colleague.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. My colleague [Mr. RODDENBERY] stated, and stated truly, that if this item went out of the bill there were other items that would go out, if any rule of fairness were to be applied.

Gentlemen, how can we afford to do things of this kind without expecting that our chickens will come home to roost in the years that are to follow? Are we to go naked and without defense or excuse to our constituents when requests come to us in the future for buildings for these small places?

What am I to say to my people when they point to a town in some other State or district with less than 1,000 population and less than $2,500 postal receipts and demand of me that I make an effort for them? Gentlemen, I say we must have a rule, and we must maintain it. It is not the amount of money involved in this proposition. That is not great. But the real question is not the amount involved in this bill, but it is what it will cost in all the future. It is what it will cost when the precedents are applied; it is what it will cost when this policy is carried out to which I object. Now, so far as I am concerned, I am of the opinion that for years this House has rested under the belief, on both sides of the Chamber, that you must have somewhere very close to $10,000 postal receipts before you could get a bill, and I did not know until the very day the committee reported this bill that there was to be in it any deviation from the former course.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not very well posted on public building bills. Is the gentleman able to tell me whether if this amendment prevails, it will prevent the construction of a public building at the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln?

Mr. HARDWICK. I should not have expected that question from the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. It is a sincere question.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is a question based on impracticable reasons, based on no argument whatever, and based, I will say—I have no desire to offend——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman does not wish to answer the question, he can say so.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have given it the only answer it merits.

Mr. MANN. My questions are fully as sensible as the gentleman's answers.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, that is a matter of opinion.

Mr. MANN. I will take the sense of the House on it.

Mr. HARDWICK. This is a very safe matter for you to take it on.

Mr. DIES. I wish to ask the gentleman if the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds did not send out a circular to the Members of the House at the time of the making up of this bill, and the one of two years ago, in which they advised the membership of the House that they would not consider any bill unless the postal receipts at the town were $10,000? And did not many of the Members rely upon that and refrain from introducing bills for that reason?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know certain, but I am informed that that is the fact.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. I can not yield at present. Now, Mr. Speaker, let this committee live up to its own rule. Let us stand where it has stood in the past. In all conscience that limit was low enough then. In the interest of the public service and of the people of the United States, and of the Public Treasury that some of these gentlemen are so accustomed to refer to and are so loud-mouthed in defending, it is time to call a halt on this thing.

Now, I want to say that the Senate amendment is nothing but what, according to my friend from Texas, the committee notified us we could expect at their hands. The Senate amendment is nothing but what, according to common understanding in this House, has been the rule for many years. The Senate amendment is nothing but right and justice to the people of every district in the United States and to the people of the whole United States and to the Public Treasury.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to stay bought any longer. I voted for this bill when it went through the House the other day, and I am afraid my motive was that it carried an appropriation for Newburyport, Mass. I did not know until I read the RECORD the next morning how thoroughly bad this bill is. Until then I did not know how much has been done that never before has been done in this House, so far as I know. Why, the RECORD shows a list of 24 towns in which post office sites are to be bought where the receipts do not begin to approach $10,000.

Mr. Speaker, I am serving my eleventh year in this House. Never in that time has my district received in any single public-building bill more than a single site or else a single building to be erected on a site already acquired. In fact, I had always supposed that it was contrary to the rules of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report more than a single site or a single building at a time for any one congressional district. I never secured more than that—either a site or else a building to put on a site already obtained. But I find that in this bill a member of this committee has got, not one site or one building, but two sites and two buildings. That is what a member of the committee has in this bill. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's two buildings will not be affected by the Senate amendment. The building in my district will not be affected.

When I spoke a little while ago I had in mind to do the very thing which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has done—that is, to move to instruct these conferees to agree to this Senate amendment. If the conferees throw out the amendment, every Member of this House who represents a small town will speedily find himself in trouble. Every small town in his constituency is going to show him this list of favored small towns, which can be found in the RECORD. With the provisions of this bill as a precedent, towns which have no need of a public building will not hesitate to claim one.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 26874) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. CLAPP, and Mr. STONE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS BILL.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the motion, and I want to make one practical suggestion to the membership in reference to it. Laying aside for the moment the question of the merits, it is my deliberate judgment, and I believe it must be the judgment of every other Member of this House who reflects upon it, that unless the motion be adopted this public building bill, with so many meritorious projects in it, will never be spread upon the statute books at all at this session. Now, the merits, whatever they may be, of these buildings in cities having less than $10,000 postal receipts a year may be doubtful enough, I submit, to jeopardize and, in fact, in my opinion, destroy the many projects whose merit is beyond question.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there can be no hardship, there can be no unfairness, in adopting this motion, because, as has been repeatedly said, the committee has made the general rule that no buildings will be considered where the receipts are less than $10,000, and, therefore, although there may be some meritorious projects having less receipts, every Member of this House was given to understand in the first instance that he could not secure a building for his district unless the receipts exceeded that amount.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, it is strange if the gentleman really wants the fair thing in this proposition when he comes in and undertakes to cut off the country towns with little projects, and never lifts his voice one minute against the $9,000,000 of this proposition that is involved in this city here. Not a word does he say in regard to that.

Now, gentlemen, I have only $18,000 in this bill. If it is defeated, so far as I am personally concerned my people would suffer little. But I have worked month after month, day and night, for the purpose of taking care of the interest of gentlemen whose bills were involved, and now I ask you not to pass a vote of disapproval of the men who are to serve on the conference committee. [Applause.]

If the bill is defeated, I suffer but little. It was in our hands for six or eight or nine months, and we believed we fairly protected your interests then. There are no propositions in it where the receipts are under $10,000, except in some cases where there are places that have not reached quite so large an amount, but they are growing towns. We believe that the conferees can work out some kind of a proposition that will prevent the committee ever having any trouble in the future, and at the same time do justice to the men who have propositions in this bill; and I ask you to vote down this unjust and unfair motion made by the gentleman a few moments ago. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART].

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I want to offer you the suggestion that the men who will act as conferees from this committee are men whom I believe you can trust to secure a disposition of the Senate amendments to this bill that will be satisfactory to the House. If not, if this can not be done, it seems to me that it will then be time enough for the House to defeat the entire proposition.

As a member of the committee I will agree to say to you that if the conferees can get nothing better from the Senate than what they have offered in this bill, I will vote "No."

The rule that we sent out to the Members of the House provided, if you will look at it again, not that there would be no buildings of any kind considered that had postal receipts of less than $10,000, but the committee did provide that no city with less than $10,000 postal receipts should have a building authorized. There are buildings authorized in this bill where they have mine rescue stations of great importance to public welfare. Some cities of considerable population are not nearly so needful of a public building as much smaller ones, and some projects both small and large are in this bill which ought not to be there, but population and postal receipts are no safe criterions of need of Government buildings in all instances.

There are buildings authorized here in the amount of $90,000 in cities where they have Federal courts, where they have revenue offices and land offices, but where the population is limited. Some of them are of very much importance and some of them are in places where it is practically impossible to rent suitable buildings. The great objection to this bill does not come from the men on the floor of this House who represent small cities and deserving localities in the United States, but it comes from men in the big cities like New York and Chicago and Philadelphia, who have their Government buildings already. They are the ones who are holding up their hands in holy protest that the people outside the big cities shall not have the benefit of any of the revenues they have been paying in for all of these years. [Applause.] I agree with the general aim of the Senate amendment directing that no city with less than $10,000 postal receipts shall have a Government building, but it will do it no harm to refer the entire bill to a conference and then adopt or reject the conference report when it comes back to us.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I have had the honor to be connected with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for a long number of years, and I have had to make up four different public building bills; a record, if I do say it myself, that has not been equaled in the history of the country. Therefore, I speak not only with some degree of experience but, being no longer a member of the committee, also in a spirit of absolute impartiality. I know what it means to make up a public building bill. I know what the pressure is from the membership and all sections of the country, and while during our administration we have enforced the rule not to give a public building to any town with less than $10,000 postal receipts, there were very frequently arguments made the justice of which would appeal to the committee and which induced them to deviate from that rule. If you make a hard and fast rule, the result will be that there will be a discrimination in favor of certain sections of the country as against one other section of the country. It was shown to me while I was chairman of the committee that if you make that kind of a rule the South will surely not get a fair share of the public-building appropriations, for the simple reason that they have not the number of towns at the present time which could be recognized under such rule. Yet the committee always wishes to be fair and recognize all sections equally, if possible, and that accounts for the few exceptions which always creep into such a bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the last apportionment put a new county into my district. When I went over to that county making a canvass last fall, there was pointed out to me a hole in the ground at the corner of a street in the village of Waterloo. This history of it was given to me. It was said that five years ago Mr. Fassett, who represented that district, obtained an authorization to purchase a site for a public building in Waterloo, in the county of Seneca. When they came to purchase the site the authorization was found not to be sufficient to cover it. In the next public building bill three years ago the authorization was increased sufficiently to purchase the site. The Government has owned that site for over two years. A fire one day destroyed the building that was on it and there was left an unsightly corner in the middle of the town. When I reached the town last fall my attention was called to it, and when I addressed my constituents some gentleman asked me what about the public building for that town. I told them that I had noticed that hole in the ground at the corner of the street, and that I thought that if there was to be a public building bill at this session of Congress I would be able to get an appropriation to fill up the hole, whether they elected me to Congress or not. If this motion be adopted, I am quite sure that I would fail in getting any appropriation, for I think the receipts would not amount to quite $10,000 a year. There are about 5,000 inhabitants. It is a flourishing manufacturing town. To adopt the amendment of the Senate might cut those poor people out of the public building that they have been waiting for for years and they would have to wait several years longer. The hard and fast rule which my friend from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] asks in this case would cut those people out. This shows that the Building Committee has been authorizing sites in towns where the receipts were less than $10,000 a year. They have been holding out this hope to these people, and they ought not to be disappointed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the resolution offered by my distinguished colleague, Mr. HARDWICK. Personally, I have for him and his ability the highest regard. I think he is sincere in his position. If this amendment be adopted it will cast a reflection upon the representatives of this committee who are to be the conferees of the House. I believe that in all these matters the gentlemen who are to represent this body as conferees can be trusted, and I think it has come to a pretty pass in the history of the House of Representatives if we can not trust the Members of this House as conferees.

The trouble with this whole matter is that the great amount of money authorized in this bill is not taken up by the small towns, the towns under $10,000 postal receipts, which would be affected by this proposed amendment. But the great bulk of this money goes to the large cities of the country. It is for towns under $10,000 of postal receipts in whose behalf I raise my voice to-day. There are several towns in the State of Georgia that would be materially affected and would be denied the right of having public buildings if this goes into effect, while millions go in the bill for the large cities. The District of Columbia receives something like $8,000,000 in this bill and the city of New York something like $3,000,000 for a site alone. I tell you it would be hard to explain to the people of this country and to our constituents in the various growing towns in our districts why we have permitted this amendment to be passed fixing the amount at $10,000 before a public building will be allowed. In the district I represent there are several towns the postal receipts of which are near to the $10,000 mark. We can not explain to the people in such towns why it is that we have folded our hands and consented that this amendment pass the House cutting them out when millions of dollars are going to the larger cities of the country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to admit that the chief reason why I am opposed to this resolution is that the amendment which it seeks to force the House conferees to accede to would deprive my district of the recognition which

I think it deserves and which it received in the House bill—a district which has not a single public building in it, although it is one of the richest in resources that we have in Kentucky, and will soon have many cities with more than $10,000 annual postal receipts. But there is another reason. There is a provision in it for Hodgenville. It has less than that amount of receipts, and it would be cut out if this resolution is adopted. Hodgenville was the birthplace of the immortal Lincoln. [Applause.] When my colleague, Mr. CANTRILL, called attention to that fact the other day and gave that as a reason for including it in the bill, he was greeted with enthusiastic applause, showing that the House approved what he said. Mr. Speaker, we revere the memory of Lincoln in Kentucky, and aside from any selfish interest I have as the Representative of my district in this bill as it passed the House, I, as a Kentuckian, protest against the adoption of the resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the rest of my time to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 14 minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, we have heard a great deal in the last few weeks about economy, and there has been a great deal said by certain alleged economists and certain yellow journals in this country about what they are pleased to term "the pork-barrel bill." Mr. Speaker, it is just as necessary for the conduct of the business of the country that the Government should construct post offices, courthouses, and customhouses as it is that the Government should have officials to transact its business. It is just as necessary, just as essential, to rural communities that post offices and customhouses be constructed as it is essential to the beautification of the city of Washington that great marble palaces should be erected here. It seems to me that some gentlemen here have suddenly grown virtuous upon this question, and they speak of this bill and some few items contained in it as though it were something new under the sun in public-building bill legislation. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that if gentlemen who were Members of this House in 1910 voted for the public-buildings bill in that year, they voted for an item of $50,000 for Uvalde, Tex., where there were less than $10,000 of receipts. They voted for one at Springfield, Tenn., for $45,000, where the receipts were a little over $7,000 a year.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I merely want to say, in justice to the House committee, that those items were inserted on the Senate side.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, does the gentleman mean to say all were inserted on the Senate side?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. As the bill passed here we had no items for less than $10,000 receipts.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. But the House voted for the bill afterwards with those items in it. And if gentlemen will examine the bill which was passed in 1908 they will find that they voted for a $60,000 appropriation for the construction of a building at Bardstown, Ky., where the receipts were a little over $5,000 a year, and if they will examine the bills for 1906 and for 1904, I think, or 1902, they will find like items of a similar kind running all the way through them and it is no new departure as far as the drafting of public building bills is concerned.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. For a question, yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is it not a fact that this committee instructed the Members of the House at the beginning of this Congress that no building would be granted for any town where the receipts did not amount to approximately $10,000, and that no more than one building would be granted to any single person?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the committee sent out any such instructions. I think it was the general understanding, and it was the rule adopted by the committee, that so far as public buildings for post offices only were concerned, we would hold authorizations down to those having $10,000 of postal receipts or more, this rule not applying to places where there were some other Government offices, such as courthouses or internal-revenue offices or customhouses or something of that character.

But that was not a hard-and-fast rule, and the committee operated upon this line of thought, Mr. Speaker, in the drafting of this bill. We would frequently find a town where the receipts were approximating $10,000 at the end of the last fiscal year. We frequently, where the town showed evidences of growing, got the postal receipts for the last two quarters, and if they demonstrated that the town was growing at such a rate and the postal receipts were increasing at such a rate as that in all human probability before this money could become available they would have reached the limit, in a number of cases of that kind the committee approved the item.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield? Do those remarks of the gentleman apply to Newcastle, Wyo., whose population is 975 and whose postal receipts are $3,973?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Now, Mr. Speaker, when that matter was before this House recently I referred particularly to Newcastle, Wyo., and I made the statement that we had authentic information, which the committee accepted as true, the same being the statement of the Member from Wyoming, that the population of that town at this time approached 1,900 people and the postal receipts had vastly increased, and, in addition to the post office, they had a land office at Newcastle. And upon these grounds we put the item in the bill. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield once more?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not now; I have not the time. If the gentleman has any quarrel as to Newcastle let him confer with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. I am willing to take his word here or before the committee or elsewhere.

It is proposed by this amendment to do what? I want to address myself to that for a moment or two. It is proposed to send the conferees into conference with their hands in a measure tied. I do not believe there is a single member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in this House but that is in favor of a conservative line being drawn somewhere, but, Mr. Speaker, if you send us to the conference committee with this item agreed to, our hands will be tied so far as that is concerned, and we will be powerless to concede something in exchange for some concession on the part of the Senate conferees. The conferees of this House ought to go into that conference absolutely free to meet these gentlemen in such conference and to talk over these matters of difference and see if some line can not be found, or some plane, upon which our minds can meet, and bring back into this House and into the Senate a bill that will meet the judgment of this House and of the Senate.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to direct the attention of the gentleman from Florida to the indefiniteness of the amendment proposed by the Senate. It says:

Provided, That no contract authorized by any section of this act for the erection of buildings to be used exclusively as post offices, or for the purchase of sites for such buildings, shall be entered into, nor shall any public moneys be expended for such purpose until the receipts of such post office for which any such building or site is intended shall amount to more than $10,000 per annum.

Now, suppose the receipts of a post office for the last fiscal year were $10,100, would that entitle that town to the erection of a building if the receipts fell for the next fiscal year to $9,995?

Mr. LANGLEY. Which frequently happens.

Mr. JAMES. Which frequently happens.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Surely, they vary; there is no question about that.

Mr. JAMES. And heretofore, I will say to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], these bills have been predicated upon what the receipts were for the last fiscal year, and this amendment puts the whole proposition up in the air. No man can be certain as to what its intent or purpose is, as to whether it applies to the receipts for the last fiscal year or whether it shall apply to the receipts for the next fiscal year or to the fiscal year when the appropriation is made.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think the gentleman states the situation exactly. And I want to add to that: Who is to determine whether the receipts are over $10,000 or not, and upon whose motion is the machinery to be put in action to get a building? Are you to leave it to the Secretary of the Treasury, and whenever the reports of the post office show that the receipts are over $10,000, then is he to have the power to order the construction of a building? How are you going to get at it?

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I can not yield for a speech.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not wish the gentleman to yield for a speech. Will he yield for a question?

Mr. CULLOP. The gentleman says the building in Wyoming is to be used as a land office as well as a post office, and this amendment does not apply to that at all. It is excluded by the language.

Mr. LANGLEY. Just one question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Just one question.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is it not a fact that under that construction of this proposed amendment, which my colleague [Mr. JAMES] has pointed out, if a site should be purchased after the receipts become more than $10,000, and the receipts should then fall below that figure, the Government could not go ahead with the building, but the site would be there, owned by the Government, without a building on it, and with the Government's money tied up in it, serving no useful purpose?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is undoubtedly correct. Now, I want to say this, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion. This bill was drawn with the utmost care after the most painstaking labor on the part of all the members of this committee.

I think the committee has done its duty as well as it could under the circumstances, and if our conferees can go into this conference unhampered and untied I believe we shall be able to bring a report back here which will commend itself to the judgment of this House and will meet its approval. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to instruct the conferees.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HARDWICK. A division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] demands a division, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] raises the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twelve gentlemen are present—a quorum. The noes have it, and the motion to instruct——

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a division. I was on my feet.

The SPEAKER. That is true. Those in favor of the motion will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] withdraws his demand for a division and demands the yeas and nays. The Chair will count. Those in favor of taking the vote by the yeas and nays will rise in their places and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Forty-three gentlemen have risen.

Mr. JAMES. The other side, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The other side is demanded. Those opposed will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-nine gentlemen in the negative. Forty-three are enough to order the yeas and nays. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the Hardwick instruction will vote "yea" and those opposed will vote "nay" when their names are called.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 86, nays 190, answered "present" 4, not voting 101, as follows:

Mr. BURLESON with Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. BURGESS with Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. BRANTLEY with Mr. AMES.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. STEVENS, vote?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. ADAMSON. I should like to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "no."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening when his name was called?

Mr. LAMB. I was not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. LAMB. I was in the cloakroom.

The SPEAKER. That does not count.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded, and the Speaker announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BURNETT, Mr. CLARK of Florida, and Mr. ANDRUS.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 27148, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 27148) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table the Post Office appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MURDOCK. I demand a second.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas demands a second, and the gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to discuss this motion now. I shall be glad to hear gentlemen who have objections to it. I reserve my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves his time. The gentleman from Kansas is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to get, if I can, a separate vote on two Senate amendments to this bill. These two amendments increase the pay of the railroads for carrying the mails between $12,000,000 and $13,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. What are the numbers of the amendments?

Mr. MURDOCK. I have not the numbers, because I have not the latest print. I will describe the amendments, however. One provides for a special weighing of the mails. From estimates submitted to the Senate that will result in an increase in the railway mail pay of $9,857,000.

Mr. MANN. That is amendment 26.

Mr. MURDOCK. The second amendment authorizes the Postmaster General to rent quarters at terminal stations and to pay rental for post-office cars standing at terminal stations. This is an absolute departure in the system of railway mail pay. No one can say precisely how much the second item will ultimately increase the total expenditure, but probably from $2,000,000 to $4,000,000. The two items together involve an increased expenditure of about $12,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Will my colleague on the committee yield to me?

Mr. MURDOCK. No; I will not yield at present. It is estimated that the natural increase in the weight of regular mail, shown by a special weighing, will result in an increased expenditure of $3,861,000; that the increase of weight by reason of the parcel post, which will be shown in this special weighing, will result in an increased annual expenditure of $4,011,000; and that by reason of a feature of the amendment which abandons what is known as the blue-tag system, whereby second-class mail is now sent by freight instead of regular mail service, there will be an increased expenditure of $1,485,000, and that the special weighing itself will cost an additional $500,000, making a total net increase in expenditure through this item annually of $9,857,000.

The second amendment by the Senate is particularly vicious because it does this one thing, to wit, it begins the payment of rent for the full railway post-office cars; that is, cars devoted wholly to the distribution of mail while the cars are standing at terminals. The Government at the present time pays for the carriage of the mails, first on the average daily weight of the mail carried. In addition it pays for the cars wherever the mail is transported in cars devoted wholly to the transportation of mail, that is, when 40 feet or more of space in a car is devoted to the mail.

Now, this proposition is to pay also for the use of the car when it is standing at the terminal station and before it has started out on the route. It has long been a question whether the Government ought to pay for the use of cars after paying for the transportation of the mail on the basis of weight of mail transported, but here is a third proposition, to pay for rental when the cars are standing at the terminal.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman will allow me, were the amendments recommended by the Senate committee?

Mr. MURDOCK. My recollection is that they came out of the Senate committee and were passed yesterday by the Senate.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I realize the embarrassment of this situation, because this is near the end of the legislative session. The rights of every individual in this body are secured if the legislative process through which a bill passes is carried out completely. A bill is introduced, goes to the standing committee, is reported by the committee to the House, and is referred to the Committee of the Whole House, where there is complete discussion. If an amendment is included in the bill in the Committee of the Whole, there is a right for a separate vote on the amendment when the Committee of the Whole has reported the bill and amendment to the House. The bill then goes to the Senate, is referred to the standing committee in the Senate, is reported out to the Senate with amendments, and there is a chance for Senators to have a separate vote on the amendments. Then, if the integrity of legislative process is maintained and preserved, a bill which returns to this House carrying Senate amendments should go to the standing committee of the House, be discussed there, reported back to this House, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and by the Committee of the Whole House reported again to the House, where a separate vote may be had on new matter and the individual may record his vote separately upon each one of the added Senate amendments. But in the last six days there may be, and there is in this instance, a suspension of the rules under which there is a break in the legislative process. The gentleman from Tennessee, chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, has a right to move to suspend the rules and send this bill into conference with a disagreement.

Now, the thing that I am seeking to get is a chance for the Members here to have a vote upon these two propositions. Both of them are of magnitude in proposed expenditure and both of them are of great importance.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. What two propositions are they? I have been unable to hear anything that the gentleman has said.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have done my best.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I know the gentleman has, but there was so much confusion I could not hear.

Mr. MURDOCK. The amendment which provides for a special weighing of the mails, and included with that is a provision for abandoning the blue-tag system.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman is opposed to both amendments?

Mr. MURDOCK. I am.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I take it that the House is, too.

Mr. MURDOCK. And then there is a further amendment which permits the Postmaster General to pay rental for the post-office cars at terminals.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman what he wants to do?

Mr. MURDOCK. I would like to defeat these propositions, and I think I have a right to have a separate vote upon them. That is my desire, and I think it is legitimate.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Is not the gentleman willing to trust the conferees?

Mr. MURDOCK. I have every confidence in the conferees, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Do you prefer that the bill should go to the committee?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; I would; I believe, if pushed to that point, I would like to see the bill go to the committee.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Then, the gentleman knows that it is not coming back to the House.

Mr. MURDOCK. If the gentleman will let me say this——

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I want to suggest that if it goes to the committee, it will not come back to the House.

Mr. MURDOCK. My proposition is this: I am not trying to be unfair or delay the business of the House, but if this bill now goes to conference under the gentleman's motion, then at this late day in the session when the bill comes back from conference to this House, whatever agreement on these two items are included in the conference report, the gentleman knows that I can not get a separate vote on the propositions at that stage, and my only hope at this time is that I may persuade the House to vote down the amendments.

To answer the gentleman directly, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] says that if the Post Office bill goes to the standing committee, that will end the bill for this session. I am prepared to say that rather than to see this item of railway mail pay increased twelve or thirteen million dollars, I would prefer to see this great appropriation bill fail. The gentleman from Tennessee and the Members of the House know that this matter of railway-mail pay, which has been in controversy for some 35 years, is at present under consideration by a special commission appointed by Congress, a commission which has been directed to go into the matter and find the truth about it, if the truth is findable. This is not a seasonable hour to bring in a new provision and new practice in the system which will increase the expenditure to this enormous total.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Would it not be possible to receive the assurance of the gentleman from Tennessee, if this goes to conference, that before a complete report is agreed upon he will come back to the House for further instruction on these two articles?

Mr. MURDOCK. If I could have a separate vote on the proposition at that time, that would, of course, be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Kansas through?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman takes his seat I would like to ask him a question respecting the item of paying for cars while they are standing in terminals. Has the gentleman any means of calculating the increase that item alone would add to this bill?

Mr. MURDOCK. Not accurately, certainly. It would be enormous, inasmuch as the present expenditures for railway post-office service is some $5,000,000 a year. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee, inasmuch as the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN], on a former bill, went into such an agreement to expedite matters, if he will not enter into an agreement to give this House a separate vote on these matters?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman mean a separate vote, or a statement that the gentleman from Tennessee will not agree to the Senate amendment without giving the House a chance to consider it?

Mr. MURDOCK. That is exactly what I mean. I thank the gentleman for making the suggestion. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he will not enter into that agreement. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that the gentleman from Florida, on a former bill, did precisely that thing, as I understand it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] ought to know, and I know he does if he will reflect a moment, that we ought not to enter into any arrangement or agreement here which will leave the Senate conferees under the impression that they are not having a free and full conference with the House upon the question. I think it is well enough for the House to trust to its conferees. Speaking for myself, I would not serve this House as a conferee with the imputation that I would not stand by the will of the House on the question here involved.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman understands that I do not intend to impute that sort of thing to him, but the gentleman must know that we must have some way of determining the will of the House.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I understand that, but the gentleman from Kansas knows that I am not going to say anything determining the position I may take, if I were appointed a conferee, and he generally knows—he must know, as a member of that committee—that I have had as much opposition to the very things he is now speaking of as he or any other person ever had. I am not willing to go into conference with the members of the Senate upon this question with an instruction, because if the conferees are to be instructed about the matter I want somebody else to be a conferee. I am not going to attempt to carry on a conference with an instruction. On a question of this importance, one involving so much that is in entire opposition to every view that I have ever held on the question, if the position of the Senate were insisted upon, I would of necessity do one of two things, knowing the views of the House, and in honor to and to the credit of the House, would be compelled to, namely, either come back with an explanation and ask for an instruction upon the matter or assume that the judgment of the House was still what it was and not yield at all upon the matter to the Senate conferees. Yet I am not going to enter into any agreement on this question. I am not going to put myself in a position of saying any more than to express my opinion on a public question of this sort and to say to the gentleman from Kansas that if I go into that conference at all I want it to be a full and a free conference, and I want the House to trust the conferees. If the attitude of the conferees heretofore upon that question, if the position that this House has occupied heretofore is not sufficient guaranty that the conferees will do what is to the interest of the House and to the country, then I think this bill would better be sent to the committee, where the committee may consider these questions, and then let it come back into the House and the House take up the amendments and pass its own judgment upon the amendments, which would mean, of course, that there would be no bill this session.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] says in regard to my knowledge of his attitude upon the question is perfectly true, and yet I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee in taking the attitude that he does he gives me no opportunity as a Member of this House to have a separate vote upon those propositions. It is not an unusual request, it is not an imputation upon the motives of the gentleman from Tennessee, or a lack of confidence in the conferees, but it is an attempt upon the part of a Member of this House to get a separate vote upon a proposition which otherwise he can not get.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Well, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas, I have said what I have said and I do not propose to make any promises about it one way or the other, and the House can vote down this proposition for all I care.

Mr. MURDOCK. My understanding of what the gentleman from Tennessee says is he can not assure us that he shall disagree to the Senate amendments and return to the House for further instructions.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman understands what I have said heretofore, does he not?

Mr. MURDOCK. No; I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If the gentleman was listening he would have understood me to say this: That I had as much opposition to these propositions as the gentleman has and that I believe the House has opposition to them, and that the conferees will either force the Senate to yield or bring the question to the House.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. That is fair.

Mr. DYER. I do not see how he can go any further than that.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, when the Post Office appropriation was under discussion in the House I called attention to an item for the maintenance of star routes, and I gave it as my opinion, from a careful study of the matter, that the appropriation was too small by about from $300,000 to $350,000. I endeavored to secure an increase. I was unable to do so. A few days after the bill passed the House I was informed by the Post Office Department that it had communicated with the chairmen of the House and Senate committees and asked for an additional appropriation of $295,000. Thereupon I took the matter up with the Senate committee by letter, knowing that the department had communicated with the committee; it was my understanding that they would provide the increase. That was not done, and unfortunately no change was made in that item in the Senate. I believe it is now beyond the power of the conferees to increase this item. In a conversation over the phone with the postal officials a short time ago they told me that without this additional appropriation they could not adequately provide for the star routes for the coming fiscal year. It means, as I said to the House at the time, that we are to be denied needed star routes, particularly in a country where star routes are practically the only country routes we have. I very greatly regret that the committee did not see fit to accept the increase then. I find it difficult to understand why the item was not increased in the Senate at the request of the department, and I do hope that the conferees will take the matter under consideration, with a view, if it is possible—I hardly see how it is possible—of granting this increased amount for these routes. It is certainly needed. The department now recognizes that the service can not be provided for without this increase, and the probability is that they will need not only the $295,000, but at least $150,000 more.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, for the first time in the last 10 minutes I have seen the amendments which the Senate proposed. I am not an expert. I used to think I was, 30 years ago, or 32 years ago, about post-office matters. It is a long time since I have had service upon that committee. The gentleman from Kansas objected to amendment No. 26, because it provides for a reweighing of the mails, as follows:

That on account of the increased weight of mails from the establishment of the parcel post the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to weigh the mails on railroad routes for not less than 30 successive working days, and to readjust compensation from the date of commencement of said weighing at not exceeding the rate provided by law.

And then that the provision of the blue-tag system, if I understand what that is, be discontinued, and instead of going upon the fast freight trains a certain class of matter, second class, I suppose, should go upon the regular mail train. Now, then, I want to say that I hold no brief for the railroads as they transport the mails, but I am just as anxious that the railroads should receive proper compensation growing out of recent legislation as I am that the Government should be protected.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I fully agree with the gentleman that the railroad companies and everybody else that performs services for the Government should be fully compensated, but there are now two commissions appointed to consider this and kindred questions, and we had thought that it was unwise to have the weighing until the parcel-post proposition had a little further developed and these reports had been made by this commission.

And, further, if, inasmuch as the blue-tag proposition is saving about $300,000 to the Government now, it ought not to be abolished until there was legislation looking to increase of that class of matter and to compensate the Government for carrying it. Those are the reasons that I had.

Mr. CANNON. It may be the gentleman is correct about that, and it may be it is to the interest of the railways as well as to the interests of the Government to wait until further ascertainment is had as to how much the parcel-post law will take of the express companies' business.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CANNON. I will yield in one moment. I want to say again, we can not afford to do injustice to the railways in their service to the Government. If the post-office cars are used as terminals, and they become terminals rather than post-office cars, that is a matter to take into consideration as well. And I want to say—and I will yield to my friend in a moment—there are hundreds of thousands of railway employees.

There is the keeping in repair of one-half of the railways of the world. There is an absolute necessity, from the growth of commercial business and other business, that there should be a wonderful expense for enlarged terminals. And if you cut the pay of the railways improperly, you render it impossible for them to furnish sufficient facilities for transportation of all commercial business, and you will render it impossible, if you do that, for them to maintain a just wage for the hundreds of thousands of employees upon the railways. So that the gentleman, being more of an expert than I am, and inasmuch as I know of nobody more intelligent and with greater integrity, I am willing to take his opinion about it. But I could not sit still until I had voiced my opinion that everybody—railroad employees, farmers, manufacturers, day laborers, and everybody are interested in seeing, with this oncoming influx of matter to be handled, that the railroads should not receive more than they are entitled to; and we are all interested from every standpoint in seeing that the railroads receive all they are entitled to.

Now I will yield to my friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know as there is anything left to say.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, has my time expired?

The SPEAKER. Yes; all of it.

Mr. MURDOCK. I ask unanimous consent for a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and my hope to have separate votes on this proposition in the coming remaining days of the session, I trust the House will suspend the rules and send the bill to conference.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules, take the bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will announce the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MOON of Tennessee, Mr. FINLEY, and Mr. WEEKS.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill S. 8178 and agree to the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 8178) to grant pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the statement in lieu of the report.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, may I inquire as to the possibilities of how long the House is likely to remain in session to-night?

Mr. RUSSELL. As far as I know, it will not take more than 10 minutes to dispose of these three Senate bills.

Mr. MANN. I think it would not take any more time to-morrow morning, and probably there would not be anything else then to do.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am afraid something else would be rushed upon the House to-morrow morning—a report upon appropriation bills, or something.

Mr. MANN. There are no conference reports on appropriation bills ready, I think.

Mr. RUSSELL. It would not take more than 10 minutes to dispose of these bills.

Mr. MANN. I was trying to ascertain for the convenience of the Members.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that I understand the Speaker has on his table a proposition, outside of this, as far as I am informed, the bill to create the Department of Labor, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] intends to move to concur in the Senate amendments. If that bill is to be passed I think it ought to be passed right away and sent to the President, so that if it becomes a law the deficiency bill can be amended in the Senate so as to take care of the new department. I hope that can be attended to to-night. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], I think, proposes to call up the bill for the physical valuation of railroads.

Mr. MANN. Is it not the intention of the gentleman from Georgia to move to agree to the Senate amendments?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it is.

Mr. MANN. Then that would not need to be disposed of to-night.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Appropriations would be needed to carry that into effect.

Mr. MANN. They have sufficient funds in the Interstate Commerce to carry on that work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have sufficient funds now, but they might need a deficiency in December.

Mr. MANN. That is in a different situation at this time from the new Department of Labor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; it is in a different situation from the Department of Labor.

Mr. MANN. I understand there are no conference reports and appropriation bills ready for to-morrow morning.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are none that I know of.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to see what is in these amendments to this Department of Labor bill. I would like to see them in print.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It adds the Children's Bureau to it.

Mr. MANN. The principal change in the Department of Labor bill is an amendment that takes the Children's Bureau out of the Department of Commerce and Labor and makes a separate bureau of the Children's Bureau and the Bureau of Naturalization and Immigration.

Mr. CANNON. I think it would keep the Bureau of Naturalization and Immigration busy to justify one bureau.

Mr. MANN. It is a change of title.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is hardly any excuse for dividing those bureaus, in my opinion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to say that if the House is willing, unless the Speaker has some other business on the table, I would like to have an opportunity to pass the physical valuation bill and this bill to-night. I do not think they will be contested, and then I think we can adjourn, if the gentlemen will not agree to let the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] proceed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] has had a matter up for about 18 months, waiting to get a chance to suspend the rules, and last Monday, when there was an opportunity, he got started, but——

Mr. MANN. I think we could get along with that to-morrow without difficulty, if the gentleman from North Carolina will take it up then.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, under the suggestion that there is no quorum present, I do not wish to ask for recognition at this time.

Mr. MANN. I did not intend to make such a suggestion, but I will do it if it will help the gentleman out. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMALL. I have been waiting, as the Speaker has stated, for 18 months past to get an opportunity to call up this bill.

Mr. MANN. I think we shall have time to-morrow to take up matters on the Unanimous Consent Calendar and the suspension business besides.

Mr. SMALL. In view of the suggestions made, Mr. Speaker, I am willing that my bill shall go over until to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the House to act upon these other two bills to-night, if it will.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON].

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 22913) to create a department of labor and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to concur in the Senate amendments. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CANDLER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for two days, on account of illness.

PHYSICAL VALUATION OF RAILROADS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 22593) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof by providing for physical valuation of the property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks and bonds and boards of directors, with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. ADAMSON. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I take this brief opportunity to observe that the changes in public opinion and in political conduct in this Republic are sometimes very wonderful. In 1908—only four years ago—in the Republican national convention at Chicago, I presented a platform containing, among other things, a plank calling for the physical valuation of railroads. On this plank I demanded and secured a separate vote. The plank met with shouts of "Take it to Denver," "Socialist," and other evidences of disfavor, and received less than 30 votes out of a total of about 1,000. And yet we have just seen a bill calling for the physical valuation of railroads pass this House by a unanimous vote. [Applause.]

ADULTERATED AND MISBRANDED GOODS.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to the conference report last night on the bill (H. R. 22526) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded and poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COVINGTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 28607. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 6176. An act for the relief of Gibbes Lykes; and

S. 7385. An act to relinquish the claim of the United States against the grantees, their legal representatives and assigns, for timber cut on Petaca land grant.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 27827. An act to amend section 70 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 28, 1913, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Salem River, N. J. (H. Doc. No 1436); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Postmaster General submitting deficiency estimate of an appropriation for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914 (H. Doc. No. 1438); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Big Marco Pass and Harbor at Marco, Fla. (H. Doc. No. 1437); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. REDFIELD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted a report (No. 1581) of the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia, together with the views of the minority, appointed under House resolution 756, to investigate the Commercial Fire Insurance Co. et al., which reports were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted a report (No. 1580) of the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia relative to interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia, which was referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 8536) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River in Beltrami County, in the State of Minnesota, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1583), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 8439) restricting the issuance of interlocutory injunctions to suspend the enforcement of the statute of a State or of an order made by an administrative board or commission created by and acting under the statute of a State, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1584), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, submitted a report (No. 1582) on the files and papers described in the report of the Secretary of the Interior in House Document No. 1307, and in the report of the Secretary of War in House Document No. 1335, and in the report of the Acting Secretary of Commerce and Labor in House Document No. 1337.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 406) stopping traffic and preventing interference with the suffrage procession; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia: Resolution (H. Res. 871) authorizing the payment of a certain sum of money to Drusilla Garden, executrix of A. P. Garden; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the board of estimate and apportionment of the city of New York, favoring the passage of Senate bill 4978, providing for the extension to the time for the construction of the proposed bridge over the Hudson River from the State of New Jersey to the city of New York; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ANDERSON: Petition of citizens of Rushford, Minn., favoring the passage of legislation compelling concerns selling goods direct to the consumer by mail to contribute their portion of the fund for the development of the local community, county, and State; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BATES: Petition of the Henry Shenk Co., the Manufacturers' Association of Erie, the Ball Engine Co., the Reid Manufacturing Co., the Dunn Brick Works, the Griffin Manufacturing Co., the Modern Tool Co., and the Griswold Manufacturing Co., all of Erie, Pa., protesting against the passage of the Hamill amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill making an appropriation for the enforcement of the antitrust laws, and providing that it shall not be used against individual or combinations striking for higher wages, etc.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of the P. Minnig Co., Jacob Haller, and C. A. Curtze, Erie, Pa., favoring the passage of the Gould bill on weights and measures without the Senate amendments; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin: Petition of Mrs. F. D. Bentley and 25 other members of the Golden Gossip Club, Portage, Wis., favoring the passage of Senate bill 6497, granting Federal protection to all migratory birds; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 28, 1913.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. GALLINGER took the chair as President pro tempore, under the previous order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. MCCUMBER and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28766) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. CULBERSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 27475) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. BURTON. I gave notice that I would call up the so-called seaman's bill this morning.

Mr. McCUMBER. I gave notice that I would call up this bill immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. PERCY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bourne	Cullom	Jones	Percy
Brandegee	Curtis	La Follette	Poindexter
Bristow	Dillingham	McCumber	Sheppard
Bryan	du Pont	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Burnham	Fall	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Burton	Foster	Nelson	Sutherland
Clapp	Gallinger	Oliver	Townsend
Crawford	Gardner	Overman	Webb
Culberson	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Works

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-six Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum. The roll of absentees will be called.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. KAVANAUGH, Mr. PITTMAN, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina answered to their names.

Mr. O'GORMAN, Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. ASHURST, and Mr. BANKHEAD entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. GORE, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. McLEAN, Mr. JACKSON, and Mr. BRADLEY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the roll 49 Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. Without objection, further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Under the rule certain routine morning business is to be transacted, and it can not be set aside unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. McCUMBER. I gave notice yesterday that I would call up the pension bill immediately after the reading of the Journal to-day.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have two resolutions that can be disposed of in a minute.

Mr. McCUMBER. As soon as I get up the bill I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That will dispense with morning business, and it will be impossible to get it up again. It will take but a few minutes to dispose of the resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from Washington. The motion of the Senator from North Dakota can not be entertained until 11 o'clock. Petitions and memorials are in order.

LISTS OF CLAIMS (S. DOC. NO. 1114).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 27th instant, lists of claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury amounting to $39,351.13, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Little Rock, February 21, 1913.

Hon. W. M. KAVANAUGH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: At the request of the Pulaski County Cooperative Marketing Bureau I am inclosing herewith resolutions adopted at the meeting held on February 1. The resolutions are self-explanatory and were unanimously adopted.

Yours, very truly,
CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
C. C. KIRKPATRICK, Secretary.

A resolution passed by a conference of the business men and farmers of Pulaski County, February 1, 1913.

Be it resolved, That it is the wish of the 100 business men and farmers assembled in the audience room of the Chamber of Commerce in Little Rock, Ark., February 1, 1913, for the purpose of organizing a Pulaski County Cooperative Marketing Union, that our Representatives and Senators urge upon Congress the immediate need of legislation having in view the reform of our monetary system.

We are firmly convinced that our present banking system is inadequate to the needs of modern industry and business and that because of this inadequacy business is constantly unsettled and the possibilities of financial panics always in view.

We believe that there is no logical reason why our present Congress should not deal with this problem and give to our people monetary legislation, that would place the finances of our country beyond the constant menace of panics and give stability to our credit equal to the most enlightened and advanced countries of Europe.

To this end we, individually and collectively, urge our Senators and Representatives to immediate action.

GORDON C. PENN, President.
JNO. C. SMALL, Secretary.

Mr. KAVANAUGH. I present a communication from the secretary of the Traffic Bureau of Knoxville, Tenn., transmitting resolutions adopted by the Board of Commerce, the Commercial Club, Manufacturers' and Producers' Association, and the Traffic Bureau of that city, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the papers were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRAFFIC BUREAU OF KNOXVILLE, TENN.,
Knoxville, Tenn., February 24, 1913.

Hon. WILLIAM M. KAVANAUGH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I send you herewith some resolutions adopted by the Board of Commerce, the Commercial Club, the Manufacturers' and Producers' Association, and the Traffic Bureau, all commercial organizations of the city of Knoxville, and acting in joint session. These joint bodies appointed a committee to inquire into the relative cost of the production of aluminum in this country compared with the most favorable foreign countries, and they have set forth these facts and their reasons for believing that the present duty of 7 cents a pound on aluminum ought not to be disturbed or lessened at least.

The South has the only deposits of bauxite, from which aluminum is made, and vast deposits of coal, which is an essential agency in the manufacture of aluminum, and vast undeveloped water powers capable of generating electricity, which is also an essential agency in the manufacture of aluminum. While the South has all of these, it has no aluminum industry, and we beg of you in the exercise of your power as a lawmaker to give these questions your careful consideration, so that your final action in the premises may tend to build up and utilize our own resources rather than encourage the production of aluminum in foreign countries.

With very great respect, I am,
Yours, truly,
CHAS. KIMMICH,
Secretary Joint Session.

Resolution adopted at a special joint session of the boards of directors of the Board of Commerce, Commercial Club, Manufacturers' and Producers' Association, and Traffic Bureau of Knoxville, Tenn.

Whereas the aluminum industry of the United States, being fostered and stimulated by patents on the process of manufacture and by a duty of 7 cents per pound on foreign aluminum, has during the last 20 years grown from practically nothing to an output of 40,000,000 pounds per annum, while the price to the consumer has fallen from $4 per pound to 18 cents per pound; and

Whereas said patents have now expired, leaving nothing but the tariff of 7 cents per pound to secure to the American manufacturer the home market; and

Whereas it is far more expensive to produce aluminum in this country than in France and other foreign countries because of the fact that foreign bauxite is richer than that found in America, and because in foreign countries bauxite, coal deposits, and water power for generating electricity are found in close proximity to each other, while in this country they are found far apart, and because it is far more costly to develop the water powers in this than in foreign countries, and because the American manufacturer must pay much higher wages to labor than his foreign competitor; and

Whereas there are thousands of American citizens dependent upon the aluminum industries for support and millions of American capital invested in the business, both of which would suffer if the American market should be turned over to the foreign producer of aluminum; and

Whereas bauxite, from which aluminum is made, is found only in the Southern States, and there are also found in the South vast coal deposits and undeveloped water-power possibilities, both of which are essential in the production of aluminum; and

Whereas these advantages have attracted the manufacturers of aluminum in this country and abroad to such an extent that the Aluminum Co. of America and the Southern Aluminum Co. have each recently secured extensive water powers in the South, with a view to their immediate development for use in the manufacture of aluminum, which development would, in the opinion of this body, be retarded and delayed, if not entirely prevented, by any tariff legislation which would make it easier for foreign producers to sell their goods in this market and harder for the American manufacturer to obtain reasonable returns on the capital invested in the aluminum business; and

Whereas we believe that there is no demand coming from the consumers of aluminum goods for a lower duty, but that the cry for a lower tariff on aluminum comes solely from the manufacturers in their own interest and is not made in the interest of the consumers: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Board of Commerce, Commercial Club, Manufacturers' and Producers' Association, and Traffic Bureau of Knoxville, Tenn., That we deem it prejudicial to the best interest of the South to reduce the tariff on aluminum below 7 cents per pound, and we therefore urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their influence to prevent such reduction.

J. W. BROWNLEE,
President Board of Commerce, Knoxville, Tenn.
G. E. BRADFORD,
President Commercial Club, Knoxville, Tenn.
W. A. MOBERLY,
President Manufacturers' and Producers' Association, Knoxville, Tenn.
JESSE THOMAS,
President Traffic Bureau, Knoxville, Tenn.
CHAS. KIMMICH,
Secretary Joint Meeting.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., February 6, 1913.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented memorials of sundry citizens of the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of members of the Division of Home Economics of the Michigan Agricultural College, East Lansing, Mich., praying for the passage of the so-called Page vocational education bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Resolved, That the Chief Clerk be authorized to bring down to the close of the Sixty-second Congress the digest of the precedents and decisions on points of order in the parliamentary practice in the Senate, with a full index, and that 1,000 copies be printed and bound for the use of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move to reconsider the votes by which the sundry civil appropriation bill was ordered to a third reading and passed, for the purpose of adding an amendment, by instruction of the Committee on Appropriations.

I wish to state that I protested against an item in the sundry civil bill because I thought it was too much. I said I would undertake to contract to do the work for $25,000, when $45,000 was asked. I saw the Secretary of the Treasury, and he still insists that $45,000 will be necessary; but I have an amendment to offer by direction of the committee, striking out $45,000 and inserting $25,000. I am instructed by the committee to state that they will accept this amendment. I therefore move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed. I could not be here last night.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to state to the Senator that if the bill is reconsidered it will be only reconsidered for this one item. The item was passed upon by the committee, as the Senator has stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina moves to reconsider the votes whereby the bill (H. R. 28775) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, in lieu of the matter contained in lines 16 and 17 and line 18, down to and including "$6,000," insert the following:

Section 7 of the omnibus public building act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of the United States post office and courthouse at Charlotte, N. C., at a limit of cost of not to exceed $250,000, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize in lieu thereof the demolition of the present building and the construction of a new building for the use and accommodation of the post office and United States courts at Charlotte, N. C., including fireproof vaults and heating and ventilating apparatus and approaches, complete, within said limit of cost hereby fixed of not to exceed $250,000; the materials of which the old building is composed to be utilized, so far as they may be found suitable, in the construction of the new building. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the construction of said building within the said limit of cost hereinbefore fixed.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the present assay office building in Charlotte, N. C., to be so altered, rearranged, improved, and equipped, including fireproof vaults and heating and ventilating apparatus, as to afford temporary quarters, pending the construction of said new post office and court house, for such of the Federal officials at Charlotte as can be accommodated therein, and so as to furnish suitable permanent quarters for such Federal officials as can not be properly accommodated, upon its completion, in said new post office and courthouse, at a cost not exceeding $25,000.

And the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to rent temporary quarters for such Federal officials as can not be so accommodated in the permanently altered and rearranged assay office, and to pay the rent for such temporary quarters and all moving expenses out of the limit of cost hereinbefore fixed for permanently altering and rearranging said assay office building, said rent to be for such period as may be permitted by the balance remaining of the last-mentioned limit of cost after such permanent alteration and rearrangement of said assay office has been provided for, not exceeding an aggregate rental of $6,500 for the first year; estimates for any further rents to be submitted annually.

That all appropriations heretofore made for the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of the post office and courthouse at Charlotte, N. C., or which may be contained in appropriation acts now pending for said purposes, be, and the same are hereby, reappropriated and made available for the construction of said new post office and courthouse and for said permanent alterations, remodeling, etc., of the assay office and for said rental of temporary quarters and moving expenses of the Federal officials to be quartered therein.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PROTECTION OF AMERICANS IN MEXICO.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask that it be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 484), as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to transmit to the Senate a statement of what, if any, measures, diplomatic or otherwise, have been taken by this Government for the protection of citizens of the United States from violence in the disorders in Mexico.

Mr. BURTON. I ask that the resolution be again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that——

Mr. POINDEXTER. In regard to the resolution I should like to suggest before——

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, on the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia, which I am willing to accept, to strike out the word "directed" in the resolution, and to insert in place of it the word "requested." I ask that the resolution lie over one day under the rule.

I will say, in a sentence, in explanation of the resolution, that it simply calls, I think, for what the Congress is entitled to, namely, the advice of the Executive about a matter which has come to be one of vital importance to the country and upon which the Senate and House of Representatives have not, as yet, been advised by the President.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the resolution ought to be referred, and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On that motion I should like to say that, if in order at this time, in view of the condition that is existing before the close of this Congress, the reference of the resolution to a committee would probably defeat its consideration. I think the resolution ought to come up for consideration in the Senate in regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FALL. I give notice that immediately after the morning business to-morrow morning I shall address the Senate upon the subject embraced in the resolution just submitted by the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

DEPOSIT OF PUBLIC MONEYS IN NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I call up and ask the action of the Senate upon Senate resolution 479, which I introduced on yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 479) submitted by Mr. POINDEXTER on yesterday, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report the list of securities which he has authorized to be accepted as security for Government deposits in national-bank depositaries, and what has actually been accepted as such security; and further, that he be directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all letters, telegrams, or other communications to or from Government officials relating to the recent Treasury Circular No. 5.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not yield for the consideration of separate matters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the resolution just read. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it, and the resolution is not agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for a division upon that question. The resolution simply calls for information about Treasury Circular No. 5, as to which a resolution was heretofore introduced and passed; but the report by the Secretary in response to the resolution did not contain the most essential information for which the Senate called. There is nothing unusual about the resolution at all, and in the ordinary course such resolutions are adopted. I ask for a division.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 16, noes 8; no quorum voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll call can not be interrupted.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the calling of the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Kavanaugh	Poindexter
Bankhead	Curtis	Lea	Pomerene
Bourne	Dillingham	McCumber	Richardson
Brandegee	Dixon	McLean	Sheppard
Briggs	du Pont	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Bristow	Fall	Martine, N. J.	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Fletcher	O'Gorman	Smoot
Burnham	Foster	Oliver	Stephenson
Burton	Gallinger	Overman	Sutherland
Crane	Gardner	Owen	Thomas
Crawford	Jackson	Page	Townsend
Culberson	Johnston, Ala.	Percy	Webb
Cullom	Jones	Pittman	Works

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the roll 52 Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for a division on the adoption of the resolution. That motion is still pending.

Mr. OLIVER. If it is in order, I would suggest that the question be again put on a viva voce vote.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say that I see no objection to the pending resolution. Such information as the resolution asks for is published almost daily by the Treasury Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington ask unanimous consent to withdraw his request for a division?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent to withdraw the demand for a division. The Chair hears no objection. The Chair will again put the question on the adoption of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Washington, which has been read.

The resolution was agreed to.

IMPORTATION OF TEAS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for the consideration of a resolution of a similar nature which I submitted on yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day.

The resolution (S. Res. 480) submitted by Mr. POINDEXTER on the 27th instant was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence, rulings, reports, and orders to or from officials of the Treasury Department during the years 1911 and 1912 relative to the importation into this country of green teas or colored teas and all documents and papers relating thereto in the possession of or under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, together with a statement showing the importation of green teas into this country during the years 1911 and 1912, by whom imported, and the amount so imported.

MESSAGE OF HON. JAMES M. COX.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have a copy of the message of Hon. James M. Cox, governor of Ohio, to the general assembly of that State, which covers the present-day legislative problems which are engrossing the attention of the public. The message presents his views in such a clear and comprehensive manner that I should like to have it incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The message is as follows:

FIRST MESSAGE OF GOV. COX TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

To the members of the senate and house of representatives:

I congratulate you upon your membership in the general assembly at one of the most auspicious moments in the history of our State; at a time when public intelligence is awakened as never before to the real importance of the relation of government to our social and economic life, and when it is responsive to the organic changes which our developing civilization clearly suggests.

The new order of things puts to the severest test the theory of governmental control over the diversified affairs of the race, but we are strengthened in the face of uncommon responsibilities by the reflection that every crisis has been met with successful achievement so long as the principle of exact justice to all remained the controlling consideration.

Within the last year the constitution of the State has been changed in many important particulars. A convention whose delegates were elected by the people without regard to partisanship framed 42 amendments. Of these 34 were adopted at the special election held September 3, 1912. A part of them go automatically into effect. Others grant the legislature discretionary authority, while a third class are mandatory in nature and are by common acceptance regarded as a command from the people. There can be no justification for any departure from the intent of these amendments in the detail of legislative compliance. Much has been said for and against the constitutional changes, but no unprejudiced person fails to recognize that their adoption is a distinct symptom of social and economic conditions. If the active forces which opposed several of the so-called major amendments had directed like energy in cooperation with the constitutional convention, the situation would have been improved, at least with respect to a fuller measure of confidence in the conditions to be developed by the departures we are taking from the beaten paths. This observation prompts the further thought that if every interest exhibits a patriotic cooperation in the legislative task ahead of you compliance with changed conditions and public sentiment will be greatly facilitated and the State will enjoy an era of social and industrial peace, unknown in the last two decades at least.

Progressive government, so called, which means in its correct understanding constructive work along the lines pointed out by the lamps of experience and the higher moral vision of advanced civilization, is now on trial in our State. Every constitutional facility has been provided for an upward step, and Ohio, because of the useful part it has played in the affairs of the country, is at this hour in the eye of the Nation. The State has the resources, human and material, to make a thorough test of the principle of an enlarged social justice through government, and the results of our labors will extend beyond State borders. A thorough appreciation, therefore, of the stupendous responsibility before you and full recognition of the probable insidious resistance to be encountered will add immeasurably to your equipment to meet the emergency. If I sense with any degree of accuracy the state of public mind, I am correct in the belief that a vast preponderance of the people of all classes have faith both in the wisdom and the certain results of a constructive progressive program of government. Let us, in full understanding of the consequences of our acts, maintain this measure of public confidence and encourage the faith of those who are honestly skeptical because of the apprehension generated in their minds by a third class, which may be unconsciously prompted by sordid impulses developed by unbroken preferences of government. No fair-minded person will dispute the logic nor question the equity of any plan which contemplates legislative action entirely within the limitations of suffrage indorsement. If the legislature, in the passage of a single law, runs counter to public desire or interest, the people, through the referendum, have the means to undo it. No greater safeguard can be devised by the genius of man, and to question either the moral or practical phase of this arrangement is to admit unsoundness in the theory of a republic. In other days changes in government such as are made necessary everywhere by our industrial and social conditions would have been wrought by riot and revolution. Now they are accomplished through peaceful evolution. He must be indeed a man of unfortunate temperamental qualities who does not find in this a circumstance that thrills every patriotic fiber of his being.

Even students of government in their research find surprising historic analogies to the conditions through which we are passing, the only difference being the scene and the displacement of violence by the arbitrament of reason. Civilization develops along the same lines, substantially. The first task is the necessity of food and raiment compelled by nature, and then common interest through society creates government. With this development comes also the economic organization growing out of social interdependence. If man as a social unit submits himself to regulation by government, then property can not be above the same restrictions. This is so fundamental in justice that its acceptance as a sound principle is a compliment to the ruling thought of the day, rather than an indication that we are taking a dangerous step. This enforces, however, the problem of ascertaining just how far governmental regulation of business should go and not trespass upon the rights of the individual. My observation leads me to the firm conviction that this is in considerable degree a personal equation, in administration at least. It matters not how sound a law is in theory if in practice its enforcement is delegated to incompetent hands; then government becomes a travesty and the cause of progress is injured. Business in Wisconsin, after several years' resistance of regulation, now accepts it in good grace, and frankly admits the widespread benefits that have accrued. But this result has been achieved only by the highest standard of personnel on the administrative boards. This must be an important consideration in our State. A policy of appointments induced largely by spoils or friendship will prevent the accomplishment of what our people now demand. At the same time prudence suggests that the controlling policy of these administrative organizations is safest in the hands of those who recognize and respect the responsibility placed upon the party in power. The success of administering government under our board or commission plan rests in large measure upon the heads selected by the executive. Each board has its peculiar requirements. Experience in fact teaches that the exactions of the personnel are as rigid as in the professions, and appointments should be made with this understanding. Every employee of the State should feel that, regardless of what circumstances bring his appointment about, he must meet the highest requirements in integrity and capacity. Our State government, in an administrative sense, to be successful as a State unit and through the vigilant eye of its police power assist the communities, must be maintained on a base having in view these considerations, namely:

First. The placing of experts in theory and practice on the State boards of administration and regulation.

Second. The orderly and systematic combination of departments which deal with the same subjects and problems and which are duplicating and in some instances triplicating both labor and expense.

Third. The fullest legitimate and wholesome exercise of the police power of the State in matters of human welfare, health conservation, and food regulation, where the local authority is remiss.

Fourth. The enforcement of the same requirements as to economy, system, and efficiency that join to private enterprises.

With these observations the executive department would, in the exercise of its constitutional prerogative, submit sundry recommendations:

Conditions not only justify but demand a drastic antilobby law. Any person interesting himself in legislation will not, if his motive and cause be just, object to registering his name, residence, and the matters he is espousing with the secretary of state or some other authority designated by your body. If his activities be of such nature that he does not care to reveal them in the manner indicated, then the public interest is obviously endangered. It is no more than a prudent safeguard to have it known what influences are at work with respect to legislation. There ought to be no temporizing with this situation. Lobbying without registration should be an offense punishable by imprisonment.

The platform adopted by the Democratic Party in convention at Toledo, June 4–5, 1912, is the contract made between the people on the one hand and the State officers and majority members of the legislature on the other. Every instinct of common honesty demands that it be carried out in good faith without interference from other legislation. The specifications in this covenant are:

First. "A short ballot in the selection of administrative officers as a means for insuring greater scrutiny in the selection of public officials and for fixing and centralizing responsibility."

The purpose of this is to simplify voting. The suffrage responsibility is so vital that confusion at the polls should be reduced to the nearest possible minimum. The ballot should be shortened by abolishing as elective the less important offices. The amendments to the constitution which abolish the positions of commissioner of common schools and the board of public works and places these departments under the control of the governor through appointment by him of the administrative heads indicate the trend of thought on this subject. In keeping with the intent of the short-ballot provision, the legislature should abolish as elective the offices of dairy and food commissioner and clerk of the supreme court; both of which are of legislative origin, making the former position appointive by the governor and the latter by the members of the supreme court. An amendment to the constitution should be initiated making the positions of secretary of state, attorney general, treasurer, and auditor executive departments, to be filled through appointment by the governor. This would leave only the governor, lieutenant governor, and judges of the supreme court to be elected. The result would insure harmony of action in the State departments and center responsibility in the executive. The several executive department heads could then act in an advisory capacity with the governor as his cabinet. This is identical with the Federal plan, which is conceded to be efficient.

Second. "Separate ballots for State and national officers."

This is induced by the desire to separate two distinct issues at the election booth, and the wisdom of the suggestion is obvious.

Third. "Home rule for cities."

This principle is now a part of our constitution. The home-rule amendment, in addition to authorizing cities to form their own charters, grants the general assembly the right to pass alternative or optional laws which cities may adopt without going through the expense and burden of calling charter conventions and enacting charters for themselves. The whole question of municipal organization is now in a ferment throughout the country, several plans being tried out. Up to this time there is nothing approaching a universality of opinion with respect to the most efficient scheme. I would therefore recommend to the legislature the adoption of such laws as will enable cities, with the minimum of expense and trouble, to make such selection as their respective needs might suggest, either the so-called business-manager plan, the commission plan, or the short-ballot Federal plan. The last named is obtained by a simple revision of the existing municipal code. It is proper in this connection to call your attention to the fact that the Ohio League of Municipalities, which drafted the home-rule amendment to the constitution, represents so much of the best-informed opinion of the cities of the State that its recommendations, to be made to you, might profitably be seriously considered in your deliberations on this subject.

Fourth. "The immediate valuation of property, tangible and intangible, of all public utilities."

The State regulation of public utilities has been of such benefit to every interest concerned that every possible legislative facility should be extended to this administrative branch of the government. Regulation is beginning to shed its real meaning in this State as elsewhere. While business interests at first regarded the operation as an unwarranted trespass upon property rights, they have, by experience, found in the State a cooperative aid just so soon as the main objective of satisfactory service and reasonable rates was attained. It is also regarded as more than a coincidence that wherever supervision is had over the issuance of securities the market yields better prices and readier demand. Public confidence is naturally stimulated in our State utilities by official certification to the legitimacy of the project.

There is no department of our service, however, where public station calls for a higher order of efficiency than this. Constructive progress in government consists in large degree in determining the limitation of control over the great industrialism of the day, and this must be approached in fairness and intelligence. Whenever regulation is not the highest expression of human intelligence then government becomes a travesty and public opinion is very apt to swing back in favor of the old order. If, however, a regulatory commission balances evenly the elements of successful practical experience, profound and correct theory, and a courageous adherence to fairness both to the State and to business, the result is so self-evidently just that public confidence is enduring and the plea for the old days of inequitable preference by government is useless. The existing law gives to the commission the right to make a physical valuation. This should be made mandatory. The utility and tax commissions have made considerable headway in working out the detail of valuation. But their labors in this particular have been confined almost, if not entirely, to cases which came to their notice by requests for increased capitalization or complaints with respect to taxation values. There can be no permanent nor logical base for the successful operation of these departments without a physical valuation of utilities. After considerable investigation, which has taken in the experience of other States, I am convinced that a State engineer of utilities should be employed under the direction of the utilities commission. His operations would prevent much duplication in work, because his findings would be available to the tax commission also. For taxation purposes the inquiry often of necessity proceeds along different lines, but every valuation made by the State engineer would serve as a base for both commissions. The State is educating at public expense several hundred engineers in the university. These students need practical work in connection with their classroom studies. The State can use their services, so that the reciprocal situation suggested is so logical that one need not wonder at the splendid results achieved in Wisconsin by coordinating the government and the university. Under supervisory aid from the engineer's office these students would render tremendous service to the State and at a minimum of cost. Sufficient provision is made for the utilities commission, through fees and appropriations, to set this work in motion, and the legislature should render the earliest possible cooperation. The utilities commission, so called, was created as a railroad commission, and many laws relating to it were made with special regard to the specific subject of railroad supervision. Since then a general utilities law has been passed and the administrative work, tremendous in volume and detail, has been consigned to the original commission. I would strongly recommend such changes in the laws as the experience of the commission clearly suggests. The home-rule amendment gives the municipality the right to own and operate utilities. Because of this the utilities commission should have the right to enforce the same system of uniform accounting on municipalities operating utilities as are now imposed upon private enterprises, otherwise the public would have no means of knowing whether the municipal plants were conducted along the lines of efficiency and economy. It would be a simple matter to charge certain operating expenses to betterments and an apparently profitable operation by the municipality might, in fact, be a losing one. There must be the greatest possible safeguard established or there can be no accurate test of municipal ownership. Besides, plain fairness suggests that in the operation of utilities both private and public ownership must be subject to the same standards of ethics and government.

One development of the railroad and utilities laws which has been very unfair to the State should be corrected. Under present practice the commission establishes or revises a rate. The utilities company, if it desires, makes objection and is given a hearing, which is exhaustive and extensive. The commission then neither amends or retains the rate previously fixed, whereupon, the corporation, in many instances, goes into court, asks for and receives an injunction. The delays of the law are well known and the issue remains unsettled for a year or more. The law should be so changed that the court can not issue an injunction in these rate matters without an investigation. This is the practice elsewhere and should be adopted in Ohio.

Fifth. "Home rule in taxation."

This requires constitutional changes and nothing can be done save the adoption of a resolution in behalf of an amendment to the State charter.

Sixth. "The adoption of the initiative and referendum amendment."

This was merely a recommendatory plank. The initiative and referendum, so called, is now a part of the constitution, but some action by your body remains to set it in motion. The intent of this amendment is to give to the people the right to redress a wrong through the referendum, and through the initiative to procure a right that has been denied. The legislative action should be in exact harmony with the spirit of the provision. Something should be done to prevent the professional practice of procuring signatures for pay, but at the same time there must be the utmost vigilance exercised; otherwise under the guise of an attempt to refine the law, it might be made unworkable.

Seventh. "Further reduction in the hours of labor for women, and further restriction on the right to employ children in factories."

The inspector of workshops and factories strongly urges raising the school-grade qualification for children between the ages of 14 and 16, and joins in the opinion shared by industrial commissions in other States, that the most wholesome results can be obtained by giving to the department the right to determine the hours of labor for women and children where the present nine-hour law seems insufficient. This is not only regarded as the easiest method of reaching a solution of this question, but it would quickly result in the betterment of shop conditions, improvement in sanitation and surroundings being a factor in determining the hours of labor. In this connection it should be stated that the governmental experts in Wisconsin regard the success in that State to be due in considerable part to the discretionary powers lodged with the administration officers.

Eighth. "The reaffirmation of the proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution providing for the popular election of United States Senators."

This has already been done by the legislature, but a legal question has arisen out of the issue created by the rendered opinion of the governor of Georgia. It is suggested that your body take such action as the successful outcome of the just and popular movement demands. No harm can come from the adoption of another joint resolution on the subject.

Ninth. "Legislation looking to the improvement of the roads and highways of the State."

Some hold to the opinion that the defeat of the good roads bond issue amendment to the constitution disposes of that question, so far as State activity is concerned. I do not subscribe to that view. Observation in all parts of the State leads to the belief that the amendment failed to receive indorsement for the reason that a majority of the counties have good gravel roads, and they objected to a State levy until such time as the counties, less advantageously equipped, both in roads and construction material, had made the progress of other counties under existing laws. The Federal Government is working out splendid development in the science of construction, drainage, and maintenance, and it would seem an incongruous circumstance if the State did not exhibit the same degree of interest and convey the benefits which the general scheme of government logically extracts from that unit. Nothing makes for civilization more than good roads. An emphasized community life, improved facilities for school attendance, and better means of traffic in foodstuffs, are considerations which join to the general welfare of the State. I know of no internal improvement which so widely distributes its benefits. It touches vitally producers and consumers of the farm and the city as well. The road laws of the State are archaic and conflicting, and the movement toward better highways is seriously hampered in consequence. These laws should be recodified. My information is that the preliminary labors of this task, not an inconsiderable one by any means, have been performed without public cost by the good-roads organizations. Iowa has profited by the law compelling the use of the split-log drag, and it is strongly recommended to you for adoption. Under existing law we are taxing automobiles by machine unit. As this is purely a police regulation, the expense should be imposed in a more equitable way. Admittedly the best automobile law is the New York measure.

The tax is levied on the unit of horsepower. It is not fair to make the owner of a machine of small horsepower and low speed pay to the State for the purpose of maintaining the cost of police control as much as is assessed against the proprietor of a big machine of high speed and large horsepower. The revenues to the State from this source are showing heavy increases, so that the highway commission, in consequence, may be enabled, without State levy, to work out an extensive improvement plan in the State. It is highly important that there be given the greatest possible cooperation by legislative enactment to the improvement associations, so called, that have been organized in some of the counties. Portage County, Ohio, is probably the most notable instance in this country. Nothing in discouragement should be done by the State. On the other hand good-roads students are agreed in the opinion that they are entitled to such cooperation as will facilitate this important county function. I unhesitatingly subscribe to this view. The old national road, running almost midway through the State, east and west, should be improved from our eastern border to our western line, as the first State-wide highway. But the condition precedent should be such cooperation on the part of the counties through which it passes as will reflect an adequate appreciation of the local benefits to accrue.

Tenth. "Continuation of the reform in the conduct of the State's penal institutions, which has been inaugurated, and the abandonment of the present prison system," etc.

The commendation of the board of administration plan is fully justified by results obtained, but there is much yet to be done. In fact, every commission created during the last few years finds its function of wider benefit to the public interest than the authors of the legislation doubtless contemplated, and yet the administrative heads find many changes needed in the laws. This is not surprising since our laws can only properly be refined by experience. The public must not gain from the recurrent difficulties in the State institutions an impression that the board of administration plan is wrong in theory. The troubles encountered in the institutions of correction are more fundamental. The wisest management the mind can devise and the most human policy the heart can inspire can not correct the basic defect of improper commitment. Your honorable body will find this a fruitful field of inquiry. Local officials in some sections of our State commit persons to the wrong institutions, and no matter how obvious the mistake, nor how serious its consequences to the management, the board of administration has no authority to make the simple transfer that would remove an otherwise insurmountable difficulty. It is unfair to the institution to send to a girls' home, for instance, young women of hardened depravity. Their influence over others, whose misfortune has been that of environment and who can, under proper conditions, be benefited, can not but be harmful. At Lancaster, where the State is supposed to render service in improvement of morals, boys are committed who are feeble-minded. A few such charges can upset plans and policies of management that otherwise would work out along orderly and beneficial lines. The board of administration should be clothed with the power to review all commitments, and thus establish a base of homogeneity at least. A few counties by careless assignments from the courts can disorganize the whole machinery of the institutions and produce a seemingly impossible problem for the whole State. The board should also have the right to sit as a lunacy body over State charges and make transfers from one institution to another. Other States have found this a logical and practical arrangement. It will simplify administration and also work as an implied qualification for the members, because there should be on this body at all times at least one officer who knows by professional experience the problems of this peculiarly exacting relation.

I direct your especial attention to the declaration in behalf of a "new penitentiary built and conducted upon plans drawn in accordance with the modern thought on this subject." This project needs no defense because it was a part of the contract made with the people, and no opposition to it was voiced during the campaign when the issue was under discussion. This platform pledge was not made without considerable understanding of the whole prison situation in Ohio, nor did the people of the State give their indorsement without knowing both the purpose and necessity of the change. The facts justify the statement that no subject has taken greater hold on public interest, in years, than that of prison reform. The best thought on the subject is opposed to the Ohio policy, and every condition wrought through an appreciation of the human welfare phase of the problem makes our prison system stand out as an institution of the past, unchanged by either its tragedies or by a civilization that has laid hold on every other human agency.

Our whole system is a plain travesty on human intelligence. It is as much of an outrage to sentence an habitual criminal to three years in the penitentiary as it would be to consign a hopeless lunatic to an asylum for three years. It is as much a crime against society to release from prison gates a known criminal as it would be to turn loose a maniac. At the expiration of a prisoner's term some constituted authority should pass on the propriety and safety of turning him loose. No lesson will be more helpful to him than self-restraint, and liberty should be given only when it is earned and deserved. But the hopeless criminal is in the minority in our prison. During the year 1911 there were received 702 prisoners at the Ohio penitentiary. Of this number 95, or 13 per cent, had served one or more previous terms. Ten had been out of prison only 6 months, when they were returned; 11 of them between 6 months and 1 year; 11 between 1 year and 18 months; and 13 between 18 months and 2 years. The remaining 50 were out more than two years, but some of them had, while away, served in other prisons. Common sense easily differentiates as between this class of prisoners and those who can be benefited by humane methods. The problem of prison reform involves considerations quite apart from erecting a building, a railroad switch, new cells, a dining hall, a power plant, a sewerage system, and higher inclosing wall. The underlying desire is betterment of the rate, the reform of as many prisoners as possible, aid to their families, earned by the men confined, and a contribution to the next generation of fewer human shipwrecks. The mention to the details of physical equipment is made necessary because objection has within a few days been made to the legislature against the prison reform plan, one of the chief reasons being past expenditure of vast sums of money for physical improvements in furtherance of the policy of continuing the old methods and the old institutions. I regret the necessity of dissenting from the view of my distinguished and able predecessor, and yet the question is so vital that I can not in conscience withhold expression of firm conviction on the subject. Over 600 prisoners in the penitentiary are idle. Their time is doubtless spent in reflection over their own disgrace and the plight of their families back home. The present method offers no apparent relief from this unspeakable condition. If employment can be afforded for the physical, mental, and moral benefit of these prisoners in such manner as will yield reimbursement to the State for their keep, and an accruing profit to be sent to families deprived of their support, then this humanitarian consideration must outweight every thought of continuing the present abominable system simply because a considerable amount of money has been spent at the old prison. I would much prefer the task of defending the new project to that of attempting to justify the enormous disbursements of money in maintaining the old one. I can not subscribe to the view expressed that in providing by law for imprisonment of offenders "the primary purpose is punishment." The spirit of the provision seems to suggest that an example be made of the offender by banishment, which in itself is not insevere, and that the agency of the State should then be directed to the reformation of the prisoner, if it develops there is a moral base to build on. Otherwise he is an habitual criminal, and his liberty is a distinct menace to society.

My recommendation would be that the legislature ascertain whether sufficient land is now owned by the State for the purpose of supplying adequate food products for the several institutions. If not, the expense of buying more land will be abundantly justified by the results. More live stock should be kept on these farms, for the double purpose of adding to the food supply and increasing the fertility of the soil. On the State farm we should begin at once the erection of at least one building unit for the shelter of prisoners and the building operation should continue under such scope as the fiscal condition of the State justifies. The extensive operations of the State departments of agriculture call for much manual labor.

The highways can be worked by convicts by a simple change in the laws, and legislative revision will also make possible the employment of prisoners on State buildings. These operations, added to the work in the stone quarries, will doubtless call for enough men to cover the honor list, because the privilege of working out of doors should be earned by good behavior. Those who can not in measurable safety be occupied in the methods described must of necessity be confined. They can be retained to carry on the manufacturing work in the prison, where clothing and other necessities are being made for the inmates of the State institutions. Our better instincts resist the thought of the State making any money off the labor of prisoners. During good behavior they should be given credit for a day's labor in such sum as measures their contribution to the State. From this the cost of their keep should be taken, and what remains, certainly in all fairness and right, belongs to their families. This plan will in short time reduce the prisoners who must be kept in close confinement in such numbers that the maintenance of the old prison plant on ground now possessing great commercial value will be most impracticable. The equipment in the old penitentiary used for lighting the State buildings can be set up in any one of the other State institutions at the capital and operated there with equal efficiency and economy. I therefore strongly recommend such legislative action as will work the changes suggested in the State institutions.

Eleventh. "The licensing of the liquor traffic."

The indorsement of this plan was followed by suffrage ratification of the constitutional amendment on the subject by a majority vote sufficiently large to form a safe index to the state of public opinion. It therefore becomes the duty of the legislature now to carry into practical operation the new scheme of regulating the liquor traffic. For years this question in Ohio has been the football of politics. Not only has the so-called wet and dry question been the means of disquieting community life, but it has formed divisions in the legislature and occasioned confusion in such measure as to seriously interfere with the proper settlement of strictly economic questions. The action of the constitutional convention was a positive reflection of the public desire to approach and dispose of this subject on the base of common sense, having high regard for the public welfare. The question has been so interwoven with the politics of communities that expediency generated for years evasion on the part of many public officials. The whole thing seemed to hang in the balance, and it is my judgment that the constitutional convention acted wisely and well, not only in adopting a license proposal but in so prescribing the constitutional limitations as to keep within the hands of the people the power at all times to deal effectively with this problem. The constitutional amendment provides that the liquor traffic shall be licensed where the saloon now exists. Conditions are in nowise changed where the people have by suffrage expression removed the saloon. No person not a citizen of the United States nor of good moral character can procure a license. The most extensive investigation has been made with respect to the experience of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Canada, and this leads me to recommend this basic feature of the law, namely, that a license commission, consisting of not less than three persons, shall be appointed by the governor, and that this body shall, with the consent of the governor, select the commissions in the so-called wet counties. The success of this law and its operation in harmony with public desire depend not only upon the highest possible personnel in administration, but responsibility must be so centered that the whole machinery of regulation can be kept efficient. The suggestion that the local commissions be elected in the counties is to me unthinkable. The whole underlying purpose of this license arrangement is to lift the liquor question from community politics. The State plan in some degree keeps it in politics, but on a better base. It can be safely assumed that the people of this State will give closer attention to the election of a governor than to that of a county license commission. There will be no serious suffrage neglect in the election of a governor. There might be in the election of a county license commission, and this would develop a travesty out of a scheme of administrative government the details of which have been worked out up to this time with a most painstaking care. If the license plan is correct in theory, it is entitled to test under the most advantageous auspices. It is a matter of such concern to the State that authority must not be scattered.

The law should assess against the traffic the cost of all administration, in addition to the present tax. The proposal in expressed terms says that the license and regulation plan in no way "shall be construed as to repeal, modify, or suspend any such prohibitory or regulatory laws now in force." The Toledo platform indorsed the license plank, and this should in good faith be the only liquor law passed at this session. Otherwise a distinct wet and dry issue will be obtruded to interfere with the adoption of an effective license code. It may also by divisions created seriously embarrass our legislative program on other subjects. Precaution is urged against "sleepers," so called, which might conflict with the intent of the amendment very broadly and plainly expressed, and thus throw the whole question into the courts. The State is entitled to something approaching, at least, a final settlement of this matter.

No one disputes the propriety of the mandatory amendments, so called, being recognized as a direct command to the legislature to pass certain laws in relation to respective subjects. A number of the amendments are self-operative.

No. 14 provides that "laws shall be passed providing for the prompt removal from office upon complaint and hearing of all officers, judges, and members of the general assembly for any misconduct involving moral turpitude or for other causes provided by law; and this method of removal shall be in addition to impeachment or other method of removal authorized by the constitution."

There is no one thing that has contributed more to social unrest than the abuse of power by public officials. The spirit of our institutions certainly contemplates that power be given to the people superior to their representatives. Government has been made more representative by direct legislation established by the initiative and referendum than ever before. If the people have the right to set aside a law, then certainly some power exceeding that given by the old constitution should be available for the purpose of removing any delinquent public official. There has been considerable sentiment in behalf of a direct recall. Many members of the constitutional convention believed this to be too drastic, so the proposal finally adopted is a compromise along what appears to be very common-sense lines. Under the new arrangement the legislature is directed to pass laws remedying any situation developed by official remissness. "Prompt removal from office, upon complaint and hearing of all officers, including State officers, judges, and members of the general assembly, for any misconduct involving moral turpitude or for other cause provided by law" is the constitutional specification with respect to your legislative duty. While the legislative provision should be effective in correcting an obviously bad condition, it should be sheltered with such safeguards as will prevent any possibility of intrigue against public officials, and it should not be so shaped as to inspire the caprice of an insincere and inconsiderable minority.

Section 286 of the general code makes provision for the recovery of misappropriated funds. The reports made by the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, since the creation of the bureau, discloses an unhealthy condition of affairs in many taxing districts in the State. The people's money has been appropriated by public officers illegally, under the forms of law; the reports disclose that for the year 1910 findings to the amount of $261,446.81 were made against the public officials in the various taxing districts of the State, on account of the drawing of fees not provided for by law and the misapplication of funds in various forms; in 1911 the findings disclose misappropriation of $837,596.33; in 1912 of $232,285.03. This should not be; our laws should be so framed and executed that the misappropriation of funds would be reduced to the minimum—in fact, there is no excuse for any noticeable amount under this head. True, on account of changes in the laws and differences in interpretation, there may be small overdrafts, due to no willful action of the official; but, in my judgment—and such is the information imparted to me from the proper official sources—most of the misappropriations are inexcusable, and provision should at once be made to effectually recover into the treasuries of the various taxing districts of the State all funds misappropriated.

By virtue of section 286, General Code, it is provided that "if the report discloses malfeasance, misfeasance, or neglect of duty on the part of an officer or an employee, upon the receipt of such copy of said report it shall be the duty of the proper legal officer, and he is hereby authorized and required, to institute in the proper court within 90 days from the receipt thereof civil actions in behalf of the State or the political divisions thereof to which the right of action has accrued, and promptly prosecute the same to final determination to recover any fees or public funds misappropriated or to otherwise determine the rights of the parties to the premises. * * * Upon the refusal or neglect of the proper legal officer to take action as herein provided, the auditor of State shall direct the attorney general to institute and prosecute the action to a final determination of the rights of the parties in the premises, and he is hereby authorized and required to do the same."

To my mind it is not fair to the State that it should be put to the expense of doing the work properly belonging to county prosecutors and city solicitors, work for which these officials are elected by the people and paid. Instead of casting upon the attorney general the duty of collecting misapplied funds, upon the mere refusal and neglect of the prosecuting attorney, the statute should be so amended as to give full power to the attorney general to require the prosecuting attorneys and city solicitors to proceed to the discharge of their duty, making such failure to do so an effective ground for removal from office. The detail of this plan, which will involve the amendment of section 286, general code, should be worked out more fully than herein suggested after consultation with the auditor of state and the attorney general, who are in a position to understand the deficiencies of the present plan. If county prosecutors and city solicitors are required under pain of removal from office to enforce recoveries under this section, and conduct criminal prosecutions as well when the circumstances warrant, there is no doubt but that an effective check will be put upon the practice of misappropriation of funds.

Another matter touching the legal department is this: A great deal of unnecessary delay and great inconvenience has been caused during the past two years on account of injunctions being issued against State officials and departmental boards without notice, and also from the fact that neither the attorney general nor the boards or officers interested have had notice of suits filed in which they were vitally interested until the time for answer had expired. There is no reason why, in any case, an injunction should be issued without notice against State officers or boards in the performance of their duties. When an injunction is thus issued it is often a difficult or vexatious matter to get the case heard, as the plaintiff, so long as the injunction is in force, has all that he desires. I therefore recommend that a provision be made similar to the one now incorporated in the act relative to the tax commission, that no court in this State issue an injunction against a State official, department, or board without notice to said official, department, or board, or to the attorney general. I further recommend that a provision be incorporated in the code by which it is made mandatory upon the clerk of the courts to forward, by special delivery letter, a certified copy of every pleading filed by the adversary party against the State of Ohio or any of its officers, boards, or departments, and a copy of the petition in any case not brought directly against the State or any of its officers, boards, or departments, but in which the interest of the State may be involved, or whenever the constitutionality of an act of the Ohio Legislature is involved, the costs of making said copies to be taxed as part of the costs of the case.

Proposals 19 and 20 relate to the reform of the judiciary. I yield to no man in my appreciation of the finer traditions of this great calling, but it is generally admitted that judicial procedure needs simplification in this State. The delays of the law made a situation which the constitutional convention, primarily at least, sought to correct when it adopted these amendments. The State Bar Association has been cooperative, so I am advised, in the matter of preparing suggestions with respect to the laws necessary to carry out the intent of the amendments. The people of the State are, I believe, fortunate in having strong legal talent on both the house and senate judiciary committees. The courts constitute that part of our government which deals with the philosophy of social justice, and the changes made in the laws with respect to the courts should claim the profoundest consideration of your honorable body. It is recognized as a detail of great importance that every possible facility be provided to insure some degree of uniformity in the action of the courts of appeals, because these bodies, eight in number, will be the courts of last resort in many cases. It seems to me that a modern and effective method of reporting decisions will obviate possible confusion.

Proposal No. 26 relates to primary elections, the provision being that all nominations for office in the State or any subdivision thereof having a population of over 2,000 must be made by primary election or by petition. Nominations for offices in districts with a less population are not so made unless the qualified electors thereof so desire. All delegates to national conventions of the different political parties are to be chosen by primary and provision is made for a preferential vote for United States Senator. Candidates for the office of delegates to the national conventions are required to state their preference as between the different candidates for the Presidency. This is merely another manifestation of the desire to bring the details of government down closer to the individual unit. The evolution of politics clearly suggests the propriety of this arrangement. This law should be so drawn as to provide equality of opportunity as between men of small and large means in presenting their claims for the consideration of the electors.

Proposal 27 amends article 6 of the constitution as follows:

"Provision shall be made by law for the organization, administration and control of the public-school system of the State supported by public funds."

Because of its far-reaching influence and the further fact that the schools form the real base to our institutions and civilization, this constitutional change imposes upon the legislature a great responsibility. It will be noted that provision is made for the organization of a school system in Ohio. Whether this phraseology was so intended or not, still in plain words it exhibits a very serious lack in our government scheme, because Ohio really has no uniform school system. Instead, we have a variety of school systems, and the truth is that Ohio does not rank with many of the best States in the Union in the matter of her public schools. This subject suggests possibilities of such stupendous moment to the people that legislation should be preceded by investigation. It is my judgment that a complete school survey should be made of the State. This plan has been followed by a number of States in the last few years and the conditions existent in many parts of these Commonwealths have been surprising to the people. If a survey is made in Ohio there will be found such a number of school systems as to clearly index the disorder and incongruity of our present archaic structure. No one will deny the need of complete uniformity in the method of teaching, sanitation, etc. Other States have found it necessary to withhold the distribution of the State common-school funds to all districts until they have fully complied with the laws relative to the length of term, minimum salary, institute pay, janitor service, compulsory attendance, and all reports required of the department of public instruction. It is the executive recommendation that a commission consisting of not less than three persons, to be selected by the governor, be created for the purpose of conducting a complete school survey of the State and reporting a plan of school supervision. The bureau of municipal research in New York City has been of untold assistance to every State undertaking this great work, and we have the assurance of cooperation from experts employed by that bureau when be begin here. It is pertinent to quote a statement recently received from William H. Allen, one of the directors of this organization. He says: "You may be interested that following the announcement of our report several weeks ago on Wisconsin rural schools requests have come to us already from 34 States. Eighty-two cities, several normal colleges and many universities are using the report for textbook purposes to interest teachers in looking for deficiencies in their own environment and methods." The result of this survey will enable the State to provide and maintain a modern and uniform school system and bring to every community the advantages wrought by the best thought and research. The commission should by all means be empowered to work out some system of standardizing textbooks in order that the expense of education might be reduced and the recurrent school book scandals made a thing of the past.

Proposal 32 amends article 7 of the constitution in several important respects. The mandatory provision directs the legislature to pass laws "taxing by a uniform rule all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise; and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money, excepting all bonds at present outstanding in the State of Ohio, or of any city, village, hamlet, county, or township in this State or which have been issued in behalf of the public schools in Ohio and the means of instruction in connection therewith, which bonds so at present outstanding shall be exempt from taxation."

Your body is given the right to provide legislation taxing incomes, inheritances, and franchises. The authority is also extended to impose taxes on the production of coal, oil, gas, and other minerals. The underlying spirit of taxation contemplates an arrangement under which contribution for governmental support shall be proportioned as nearly as possible to the benefits received. The amendment to the constitution licensing the liquor traffic reduces the number of saloons in the State and this automatically will greatly curtail both the State and local revenues. With this decline in income and the State limitation on the local tax rate carried by the 1 per cent tax law it will be necessary not only for the State but local subdivisions to procure revenue from other sources. There is no tax more just than that upon incomes. The constitution permits the exemption of incomes up to $3,000, so that it would not bear heavily upon a single individual. With inheritances the constitution permits the exemption of estates up to $20,000. This form of taxation is sanctioned by usage in a great many of the States. Franchises are a thing of absolute value and constitute in many instances a gratuitous contribution by government to private and corporate interests. This is also an equitable plan of taxation. With the constitutional right to tax inheritances, incomes, and franchises and the production of coal, oil, gas, and other minerals there is abundant facility to provide for the depletion in revenue occasioned by the revision of the liquor laws and to take care of any other emergency which might arise.

Taxation is always a live subject, and I may later submit recommendations touching on matters apart from the provisions either of our platform or the mandatory amendments.

Article 15 of the constitution as amended provides that "Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the State, the several counties and cities, shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained as far as practicable by competitive examination. Laws shall be passed providing for the enforcement of this provision."

It therefore becomes the duty of the legislature to establish a civil-service system extending to the State, counties, and municipalities. This obtains now in cities and it would be my suggestion that they be permitted to operate through their own civil-service commissions to the extent that no conflict occurs with the State law. Wisconsin and New York have recently installed a civil-service system. It has for its purpose the establishment of a merit system and giving to every citizen the competitive right to enter the public service. The experience of other States demonstrates the importance of so shaping the law as to make it much more difficult to get into the service than out of it. I mean by this that the test should be so high as to insure competency, and that no provision should in the least degree exempt an employee from the responsibilities of the station. The criticism most heard of the Federal civil-service law is that an administrative officer is without simplified power to remove an incompetent employee. My suggestion to the legislature would be that the expense of this commission be kept to the nearest possible minimum. The logical tendency is toward government by commissions or bureaus. No needless organization should be created, but when necessity suggests a new administrative unit, every precaution should be exercised against the establishment of sinecures.

This disposes of the so-called mandatory amendments to the constitution.

The public interest, I think, demands the passage of a so-called "blue-sky law," as provided for in the amendment to article 13 of the constitution. It is conceded that our citizens have been robbed of millions of dollars through the sale in this State of worthless securities. Some may urge that the State should not be constituted as a financial guardian of its citizens. Under the common law it is unlawful to procure money under false pretenses, and it is difficult to resist the conclusion that the real spirit of the law would bring the sale of fictitious stocks and the procurement of goods under false pretenses in the same moral classification. The Kansas law on this subject prevents the sale of securities in the State until they have been passed upon by some constituted State authority. There is a difference between "wildcatting" in brokerage operations and the legitimate investment houses. It is recommended, therefore, that the law be so framed as to stamp out illegitimate practice and conserve the legitimate.

It would certainly be common bad faith not to pass a compulsory workmen's compensation law. No subject was discussed during the last campaign with greater elaboration, and it must be stated to the credit of our citizenship generally that, regardless of the differences of opinion existent for many years, the justice of the compulsory feature is now admitted. Much of the criticism of the courts has been due to the trials of personal injury cases under the principles of practice which held the fellow-servant rule, the assumption of risk, and contributory negligence to be grounds of defense. The layman reaches his conclusion with respect to justice along the lines of common sense, and the practice in personal-injury cases has been so sharply in conflict with the plain fundamentals of right that social unrest has been much contributed to. A second phase of this whole subject which has been noted in the development of the great industrialism of the day has been the inevitable animosity between capital and labor through the ceaseless litigation growing out of these cases. The individual or the corporation that employs on a large scale has taken insurance in liability companies, and, in too many instances, cases which admitted of little difference of opinion have been carried into the courts. The third injustice has been the waste occasioned by the system. The injured workman or the family deprived of its support by accident is not so circumstanced that the case can be contested with the corporation to the court of last resort. The need of funds compels compromise on a base that is not always equitable. Human nature many times drives sharp bargains that can hardly be indorsed by the moral scale. In the final analysis, the cost of attorney fees is so heavy that the amount which finally accrues in cases of accident is seriously curtailed before it reaches the beneficiary. These three considerations clearly suggest the lifting of this whole operation out of the courts and the sphere of legal disputation. And then there is a broader principle which must be recognized. There is no characteristic of our civilization so marked as the element of interdependence as between social units. We are all dependent upon our fellows in one way or another. Some occupations, however, are more hazardous than others, and the rule of the past, in compelling those engaged in dangerous activities to bear unaided the burden of this great risk, is not right. The workmen's compensation law in this State, which, however, lacks the compulsory feature, has made steady growth in popularity. The heavy decrease in rates clearly indicate economy and efficiency in the administration of the State liability board of awards. The compulsory feature, however, should at once be added. I respectfully, but very earnestly, urge its adoption amendatory of the present law with such other changes as experience might dictate. There is some force and justice in the contention that the employers should be given the option of insuring either in the State fund under the liability board of awards or in liability companies which have met all the requirements of the State department of insurance. If the State board gives better service and lower rates it will be perfectly apparent that the liability companies are operating on the wrong base. If, on the other hand, insurance concerns yield an advantage in both service and rates, then it would be safe to assume that efficiency and economy of administration are lacking with the State board. The competitive feature may be wholesome. The objective to be sought is the fullest measure of protection to those engaged in dangerous occupations with the least burden of cost to society, because, after all, the social organization must pay for it. The ultimate result of this law will be the reduction in death and accident, because not only the humanitarian but the commercial consideration will suggest the necessity of installing and maintaining with more vigilance modern safety devices.

Government as a science must make its improvement along the same practical lines which develop system, simplification, classification of kindred activities and better administrative direction in the evolution of business. A private or corporate enterprise is compelled to promote in the highest degree both efficiency and economy because its income is subject to the hazards of business. Government without this spur of necessity, because its revenue is both regular and certain, does not effect reorganizations and combine common activities so readily. One reason, of course, is that new legislation is required and that is not easy at all times. Wherever human energies are now being directed toward more efficient public service we find the consolidation under one administrative unit or bureau of all departments which deal either in direct or different manner with the same general subject. Investigation develops many duplications in both labor and expense in the departments of the State. No business institution would continue such a policy, and recognizing now the importance of conducting the business of the Commonwealth along the same modern and efficient lines of private and corporate operations, there is submitted herewith to your honorable body two recommendations which in my judgment are of tremendous importance, namely, the creation of an industrial commission and a department of agriculture. The first-named organization would combine every existing department which deals with the relation between capital and labor. It is certainly a logical observation that the department heads clothed with the responsibility of details will find it extremely difficult to rise to the moral vision necessary to construct and conserve policies dealing with big things. Besides duplication of service is a waste of both human energy and State funds. The bureau of labor statistics is in charge of a commissioner, and the expense for the past year was $32,460. The department of inspection of workshops, factories, and public buildings is directed by a chief inspector, and the expense for the year was $80,240. The State mine inspection department is in charge of a chief inspector, and the cost for the year was $42,040. The department of examiner of steam engineers is in charge of a chief examiner. It was run at a cost of $32,700. The department of inspection of boilers or board of boiler rules is composed of five members, including the chief engineer, who is chairman of the board, and who gives all of his time to the State. His salary is $3,000. The compensation of the other four members is $1,000 each. This department cost the State last year $40,700. The State liability board of awards consists of three members, who receive a salary of $5,000 each. It cost the administration for the year $42,081. The total is $270,221 for these departments, not counting additional provisions by the emergency board.

These several departments touch the relation of capital and labor. In some of the large cities of the State separate offices are maintained. There is nothing new or experimental in this suggested consolidation. It is so obviously in harmony with modern methods that it is almost useless to investigate the experience of other States where the plan is universally commended and stands without an expressed criticism from either capital or labor. The departments involved are all rendering splendid service now, and this suggestion must not be accepted as the slightest criticism of the personnel. It is highly important, however, that every agency of government render its utmost with a view to bringing these two reciprocal elements of industrialism to a basis of common understanding and public indorsement. It is the recommendation, therefore, that the industrial commission be created by legislative enactment, to consist of not less than three members appointed by the governor, and that this organization be given wide discretionary powers for the reasons which have already been advanced in this communication.

The same reasons advanced for the consolidation of the labor departments apply with equal force to the same arrangement in behalf of a department of agriculture. We have three distinct administrative subdivisions, namely, the State board of agriculture, the college of agriculture, and the experiment station. The first two are directed by boards the members of which are appointed by the governor. I have made personal investigation with respect to 25 agricultural activities in the State. Of these direct duplication ensues in 14 departments of the work, while triplication occurs in 11. Every one of the three departments is engaged in orchard, spraying and pruning demonstrations, farmers' institute work, the publication of bulletins, in many instances on the same subject. Lecture work independent of institutes and granges, exhibits at agricultural fairs, investigation of the cost of agricultural production, organization of farmers' clubs, corn shows, field meetings, and farm advice.

Very useful service has been rendered in behalf of the agricultural interests, but the present system can not be justified by any modern method of administration. Our labors have just begun in agricultural research work. Scientific investigation must play a large part, because the mysteries, possibilities, and utilities of nature are subjects to be developed. It touches the question of food and clothing, two very vital considerations, so important, in fact, that there is the highest call for efficient organization. Recommendation has already been made in compliance with the short ballot to abolish as elective the office of dairy and food commissioner. Under the present arrangement the dairy and food commissioner is devoting a large part of the energies of this splendidly conducted department in investigating the illegal sale of liquor. This will logically be transferred to the liquor-license commission, and the remaining operations of the dairy and food department should be taken over by the department of agriculture. In this connection the legislature will find, upon inquiry, that the laws with respect to food inspection and regulation are very inefficient. The dairy industry has shown development in every part of the country where increased inspection is brought to milk products. The police power of the State is a constitutional provision for the primary purposes of conserving the general welfare. The public health is certainly entitled to first consideration. There is no uniformity in the communities of the State in the matter of food regulation. Many places are without local laws on the subject of meat inspection, for instance; and in some cities, even where the provision by ordinance seems sufficient, the local authority is so remiss as to constitute a reproach on government. Every slaughtering and meat-packing house engaged in interstate traffic is subject to inspection by the Federal Government. The result is that these institutions, in their desire to escape loss from condemned animals, make the first selection from stockyards and farms. The meat slaughtered for purposes that do not constitute interstate traffic and which, it must be understood, is limited to consumption in the State, is procured from the herds that have been picked over. It is true both with respect to meat and milk, that the lowest quality, with its disease-producing possibilities, goes to the communities where the food regulations are lax. Ohio demands attention to the subject of human conservation, and the police power of the State lodged in the hands of a strong department of agriculture could be exercised for the protection of our citizenship. I therefore recommend the consolidation of the State board of agriculture, the Ohio experiment station, and the College of Agriculture, under what shall be known as the department of agriculture, the agricultural commission, or such other designation as the wisdom of the legislature might suggest. The College of Agriculture is a part of the State University and the dual relation of the college to both the university and the department of agriculture occasions the only real problems. However, the university at Columbus is a State institution conducted with funds appropriated by the State, and with the relation which is now being established as between the State government and the State University there is every belief that common interest is sure to prevent any conflict in administration.

This introduces the subject of coordinating the energies of the State government and the State University. Wisconsin has made its greatest progress because of this relation. Students whose services under experienced heads have been called into practical operation come back to the institution of learning with problems from the field, and the result has been an alert and progressive faculty. The advantage is so clearly mutual both in the development of Government and learning, and in the economy of public expense, that no one will deny the self-evident wisdom of the plan. To take issue with it one must predicate his position on the contention that research, experimentation, and education are not useful elements in the affairs of man or government.

There should be established a bureau of legislative research for the development of every subject vital to the State and the legislature, and a salary should be provided to make possible the employment of an expert. In other States the detail work of this department, under the direction of the chief, is performed in most part by students in the university and the bibliography of the subjects is developed in such thorough and systematic manner as to make the department an institution of enduring service and value to the State. The director should also be related to the department of political economy in the university, and be given the authority to employ an official draftsman during the session of the legislature for the use of its members. The bar of the country has given enthusiastic indorsement to this plan and wherever it has been installed it has saved confusion in administration and reduced the element of delay occasioned by legal tests on ultra technical grounds.

The subject of farm credits is claiming the attention of all civilized powers. They all recognize that the movement from the farm to the city continues in such increased proportion as to create a distinct and perplexing problem. At the conference of the governors held at Richmond, Va., Ambassador Myron T. Herrick, now located at the French capital, and an ex-governor of this State, made this observation:

"The drift of the population to the city has not yet been stayed. Over 10 per cent has been added to the ratio of urban population in the last two decades. In 1900 there was one farm for every 13.2 persons; in 1910 there was one farm for every 14.5 persons. On the average, therefore, each farm has to furnish food for more than one more person than in 1900. Under the circumstanses, it is not altogether surprising that in the last 20 years the price of cattle has advanced nearly 62 per cent, of hogs 96 per cent, of cotton 28 per cent, of wheat 67 per cent, of corn 200 per cent, and of potatoes 288 per cent, and that the prices of other farm products have steadily advanced."

Rural opportunity is the thing to be considered. Good roads and a modern common-school system will do much toward increasing the advantages of country life, but the fact remains that there must be more tillers of the soil. The question of farm credits in the opinion of experts on the subject must be solved in the first instance through State rather than national legislation. Farmers need two sorts of credit: Long-time credit for the purchase of land and the making of permanent improvements, and short-time credit for the operation of their property, purchase of stock, fertilizer, financing their crops, etc. In both of these respects facilities are very insufficient in the United States. It is the recommendation that your body provide for the selection of a special commission for the purpose of making an investigation with respect to the exact needs of Ohio farmers for credit and the credit facilities that are now afforded. There is such a lively interest taken in this subject that I am convinced the commission would serve without compensation. Ex-Governor Herrick has given his personal assurance that he will give every cooperation in the way of personal service and the contribution of such information as he has procured at home and abroad.

Additional regulation is also needed for the protection of breeding of live stock. Ohio is notoriously a dumping ground for diseased and unsound stock used for breeding purposes. It is also important that the fertilizer laws be strengthened and the farmer given better protection against adulteration in all fertilizing and spraying materials.

The Department of Health has asked for an increased appropriation of $25,000 to render more effective the combat against tuberculosis. It ought to be given. The agencies engaged in this work are being given every cooperation possible, governmental and otherwise, in every part of the world. Science has contributed much in reducing the mortality, but our work has scarcely begun. The relatively small appropriation which is asked to maintain for two years the annual expense of $3,000 necessary to investigate the subject of occupational diseases ought also to be allowed. Let me remind the legislature that $25,000 was appropriated by the State for the production of hog-cholera serum. The requested appropriation to produce antitoxin for diphtheria was not allowed. The economic loss from hog cholera in this State for the last year has been appalling. It has assumed almost the proportions of a disaster to many farmers and resulted in greatly increased prices for food supplies. Ample appropriation should not only be made for the production of hog-cholera serum, but a system should be created making it more available. However, this should not be done to the neglect of the child. He is also entitled to protection against the disease of diphtheria. The circumstance is an index to the legislative tendency of the day. As I have myself served for four years in the Federal legislative body this observation is not made in any invidious spirit.

The newly amended constitution gives to the State the right to adopt the minimum wage, and to pass laws for the general welfare of the employee. There should be a common understanding of this subject as developed by a survey of the wage question. I am convinced there should be no law passed until after this is accomplished, except to provide for obviously unjust conditions affecting the wages of women and children. The labor departments or the industrial commission, if it is established, could doubtless make this survey without adding to the public expense. It is a question of live concern, and I regret that the information is not at hand so that a legislative remedy might be applied without delay. It is recommended that your body pass a resolution empowering such agency as in your judgment seems best to make the investigation.

The State is paying in rentals over $50,000 a year for the reason that our public buildings are insufficient for the needs of the several State departments. This sum of money is ample to carry the interest charges on more than a million-dollar investment. For approximately this sum, the State could unquestionably provide its own property and insure better accommodations for the departments. I am mindful of the importance of guarding the finances of the State and keeping our operations within our revenues. But it is admittedly false economy to continue the rental system. Another thing to be considered is the rapidly appreciating value of business real estate in the vicinity of the capitol, where purchase inevitably must be made. It is suggested that the general assembly appoint a legislative committee to investigate the conditions and report on the expediency of acquiring property by condemnation for the purpose of this project.

The commission appointed by Gov. Harmon to codify all subjects which relate to the child has developed many interesting aspects, and I am convinced that its suggestions can profitably claim the most careful consideration of your body. The ablest juvenile officials of the State have responded in cooperative service in a very patriotic way, and the measure of information which has been adduced on child life will be of distinctive benefit to our people. The commission takes up the vital subject of the widows' relief bill, and while it has not unanimously agreed as to the desirability of such a law, it is conceded that should any be passed, it should provide:

"For the partial support of women whose husbands are dead or become permanently disabled for work by reasons of physical or mental infirmity, or whose husbands are prisoners, when such women are poor, and are the mothers of children under the age of 14 years, and such mothers and children as have a legal residence in any county of the State."

The order making an allowance shall not be effective for a longer period than six months, but, upon expiration, the time can be extended, provided the home has first been visited and conditions investigated. The child or children must be living with the mother. The allowance should be made only when in the absence of it the mother would be required to work regularly away from her home and children. The mother must be a proper person, morally, physically, and mentally, for the bringing up of the children. The purpose of such a law is to keep together families of widows and small children, that might otherwise be broken up, the belief being that it is cheaper to maintain these children in their homes than in public institutions, and that they are much better off with their mothers. The moral and humanitarian considerations make strong appeal to public favor. The great majority of juvenile judges believe the law should be passed, but that it should be a felony rather than a misdemeanor for any person to attempt to obtain an allowance for anyone not entitled to it. The State inspector of workshops and factories is enthusiastically in favor of the law. He reports that in certain cases he has investigated, where the child-labor law has been violated employment is rendered necessary by the absolute dependence of a widowed mother. In such instances, the growth of the child, physically, intellectually, and morally, is interfered with, and these are considerations which must be measured on a higher footing than the items of public expense. Under existing law, the father who consigns his children to the county children's home, because of his inability to maintain a satisfactory domestic arrangement, can not pay the county for this service. Instances have been reported where the parent has desired to do this, but there is no enabling statute. This one item would help to bear the expense of giving aid to dependent widows. The codifying commission, in its suggestion, has, with far-seeing vision, created apparently every safeguard. It may be true that the most perfect law it is possible to enact will have its abuses. Most laws have. I recommend this whole subject for the very careful consideration of your honorable body.

A thing to be avoided is the rapidly increasing expense in the cost of maintaining the militia. While this organizaton has its function and its maintenance in large degrees is made possible by the patriotic service of privates and officers who are devoted to military subjects, still it is scarcely conceivable that any necessity exists for such disbursements in our State as almost equal the total expense of two of the three constitutional branches of the government—the judicial and the legislative. One of the unfortunate tendencies of the time is toward excessive armament.

The moving-picture business is one of the marked evolutions of the day. Its growth and the countless thousands which attend the shows daily stagger the imagination. Without the restraint of governmental authority, abuses are apt to develop; in fact, I am not sure they have not already done so. The picture films should be censored and the police power of the State should be exercised in making it a State rather than a community regulation. The business has many useful functions, and under proper restrictions it can become a pleasurable and profitable recreation for the people. The youth is entitled to protection against improper preservations. Immoral pictures in public places, with apparent official sanction, can not but excite a bad influence. I recommend the passage of a law which will establish this regulation and assess against the business concerned sufficient fees to maintain the administrative machinery.

I join in the recommendations made by Gov. Harmon in relation to the following matters: The Perry Victory Centennial, the Panama Exposition, State supervision over private banks, and the power of special counsel from the attorney general's office to appear before grand juries.

JANUARY 14, 1913.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28283) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BURNHAM. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. BURNHAM, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. GORE conferees on the part of the Senate.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives (H. Con. Res. 72), which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President is requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 18787) relating to the limitation of the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon a public work of the United States and of the District of Columbia, and of all persons employed in constructing, maintaining, or improving a river or harbor of the United States and of the District of Columbia, and that the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate in signing said enrolled bill be rescinded.

Mr. SHIVELY. I ask that the Senate concur in the resolution.

The resolution was concurred in.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 8275) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16.

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 5.

P. J. McCUMBER,
BENJAMIN F. SHIVELY,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 8178) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 6.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2, 3, 4, and 5, and agree to the same.

P. J. McCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
BENJAMIN F. SHIVELY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOE J. RUSSELL,

COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE (S. DOC. NO. 1122).

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have had furnished me a very old Senate document, of which I presume this is probably the only copy to be found. It is, I think, of great value from a historical and practical standpoint. It is Miscellaneous Document No. 2, printed at a special session of Congress in 1863, and gives an exhaustive review of all the precedents of the Senate in regard to the appointment of its committees. It evidently required a great deal of labor to prepare, and I think it would be unfortunate if it should pass away without being reproduced. I therefore ask that it may be reprinted. I will not ask that it be printed as an ordinary Senate document, because in that case it would be distributed as specified in the rule; but I shall ask that it be printed for the use of the Senate, as it relates exclusively to matters in which the Senate is interested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks that the document indicated by him be printed for the use of the Senate. Without objection, that order will be made.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 27475.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 27475) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 2, line 2, before the word "acting," to insert "late," so as to read:

The name of Emma L. Cole, widow of William C. Cole, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 10, after the word "Volunteer," to strike out "Infantry" and insert "Cavalry," so as to read:

The name of Julia A. Rouse, widow of Oliver H. P. Rouse, late of Company D, Eighteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 6, to strike out:

The name of Elizabeth M. Rutherford, widow of George Rutherford, late of Company F, Second Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 8, to strike out:

The name of Emma E. Kanzleiter, widow of Daniel Kanzleiter, late of Company E, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 11, before the words "per month," to strike out "$30" and insert "$24," so as to read:

The name of Gideon F. Denton, late of Company H, Seventh Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 15, before the words "per month," to strike out "$36" and insert "$30," so as to read:

The name of David W. Stafford, late of Company D, Eighty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 4, before the words "per month," to strike out "$24" and insert "$12," so as to read:

The name of Charles P. Harder, late of Company C, One hundred and eighty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. I inquire if we are proceeding now to dispose first of committee amendments?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill contains certain committee amendments, which are being acted upon as the bill is read. There is no agreement as to the consideration of amendments, and they may be offered from the floor at any time.

Mr. BRYAN. I move to strike out the lines from 1 to 4, on page 7.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, at the top of the page, it is proposed to strike out:

The name of Charles P. Harder, late of Company C, One hundred and eighty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator if he will not allow us to pass over that until I can get the report, and then we can recur to it?

Mr. BRYAN. I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that we can act upon the committee amendments first and then go back, if that is satisfactory.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 7, after line 4, to strike out:

The name of Catherine M. Hazelton, widow of Frank B. Hazelton, late first lieutenant and adjutant, Twenty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 18, before the word "Volunteer," to strike out "Mounted," and in the same line, after the word "Volunteer," to insert "Mounted," so as to read:

The name of Frederick Kinner, late of Company H, Fifty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 12, to strike out:

The name of James K. Waltermire, late of Company I, Third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 15 to strike out:

The name of Walter S. Reeder, late of Company C, Seventy-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 2, before the word "Volunteer," to strike out "Mounted," and in the same line, after the word "Volunteer," to insert "Mounted," so as to read:

The name of Senobio Cordova, late of Capt. Graydon's independent company of New Mexico Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 4, to strike out:

The name of Patrick L. Kennedy, late of Company F, Second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 2, after the word "receiving," to insert: "Provided, That in the event of the death of Ira Cotterell, helpless and dependent child of said John Cotterell, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine," so as to read:

The name of Nancy A. Cotterell, widow of John Cotterell, late of Company H, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, Seventy-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Ira Cotterell, helpless and dependent child of said John Cotterell, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 9, to strike out:

The name of Elizabeth O'Reiley, widow of Peter O'Reiley, late of Company H, Thirty-fifth Regiment New Jersey Volunter Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of 20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. So that the chairman of the committee may know the amendments I propose to offer, I now move to strike out lines 14 to 17, inclusive, on page 20.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 20, line 19, before the word "Volunteer," to strike out "Mounted," and in the same line, after the word "Volunteer," to insert "Mounted," so as to read:

The name of James David Rich, late of Company A, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 21, to strike out:

The name of Charles Reynolds, late chaplain, Eighty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 9, after the name "Caroline," to strike out "Koch" and insert "Knarr," so as to read:

The name of Caroline Knarr, former widow of Jonathan Kennedy, late of Company H, One hundred and fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 16, before the words "per month," to strike out "$25" and insert "$24," so as to read:

The name of Frances M. Dille, widow of John B. Dille, late of Company K, Seventy-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 12, before the words "per month," to strike out "$25" and insert "$24," so as to read:

The name of Lizzie Dovener, widow of Robert G. Dovener, late assistant surgeon, Fifteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 16, after the words "per month," to strike out "in lieu of that she is now receiving," so as to read:

The name of Elizabeth J. Todd, former widow of Ephraim L. Webb, late of Company E, Forty-fourth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 22, to strike out:

The name of Melvin J. Ringler, late of Company C, Sixty-fourth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 6, to strike out:

The name of Tilla L. Eckard, widow of Calvin J. Eckard, late of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 23, before the word "Volunteer," to strike out "Mounted," and in the same line, after the word "Volunteer," to insert "Mounted," so as to read:

The name of David R. Edmonds, late of Company A, Thirty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 4, to strike out:

The name of Mary A. Missner, former widow of Mitchell Haynes, late of Company H, One hundred and second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 20, before the words "per month," to strike out "$25" and insert "$20," so as to read:

The name of Louise Taylor, widow of Charles C. Taylor, late of Company F, One hundred and seventy-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 7, before the words "per month," to strike out "$20" and insert "$12," so as to read:

The name of William H. Cummings, late of Company I, Twenty-fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 6, after the word "receiving," to insert "Provided, That in the event of the death of Jennie Dickinson, helpless and dependent child of said James D. Dickinson, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine," so as to read:

The name of Martha Dickinson, widow of James D. Dickinson, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Jennie Dickinson, helpless and dependent child of said James D. Dickinson, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 10, to strike out:

The name of William T. Mills, late of Company E, Forty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 10, before the words "per month," to strike out "$24" and insert "$50," so as to read:

The name of Samuel A. Pearce, late of Company B, One hundred and ninety-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 10, to strike out:

The name of Fredericka Welfley, now Wurthner, former widow of Gottlieb Frederick Welfley, late of Company H, Sixteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 2, before the words "per month," to strike out "$25" and insert "$24," so as to read:

The name of Emily A. Kennedy, widow of Oliver H. S. Kennedy, late of Companies B and F, Fortieth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 4, before the word "widow," to insert "former," so as to read:

The name of Mary Gourno, now Earle, former widow of Louis Gourno, late of Company E, Sixty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 18, after the word "receiving," to insert "Provided, That in the event of the death of Roy L. Moffatt, helpless and dependent child of said Joseph L. Moffatt, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine," so as to read:

The name of Julia A. Moffatt, widow of Joseph L. Moffatt, late of Company I, Seventh Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Roy L. Moffatt, helpless and dependent child of said Joseph L. Moffatt, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 21, before the words "per month," to strike out "$40" and insert "$50," so as to read:

The name of Archibald McLain, late of Company C, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The items passed over temporarily will now be read.

The SECRETARY. The first item passed over is, on page 7, beginning with line 1, as follows:

The name of Charles P. Harder, late of Company C, One hundred and eighty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] moves to strike out those lines. The question is upon the Senator's motion.

Mr. McCUMBER. I call attention to the fact that there is an amendment there reducing the $24 to $12 a month.

Mr. BRYAN. The House committee, in reporting this omnibus bill, prepared a report, and its report with reference to the item now under consideration is as follows:

H. R. 9296. Charles P. Harder, aged 60 years, served as a drummer in Company C, One hundred and eighty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry, from June 20, 1863, to January 9, 1864, and from April 14, 1864, to August 3, 1865, and is now a pensioner under the act of June 27, 1890, at $6 per month on account of rheumatism and resulting disease of heart. Address, Orville, Pa.

Medical examination, June 27, 1897, shows rheumatism, disease of heart, and piles.

Two physicians, May 17, 1911, have treated him for impaired vision, neuritis, rheumatism, indigestion, and is unable to follow his usual occupation.

Pensioner states that his income, including his pension, is about $125 a year.

An increase to $24 per month is recommended.

Upon a preliminary examination by the clerks in the office of the Senate Committee on Pensions the following notice was made of this item:

This man is pensioned at $6 per month under the act of June 27, 1890, and has not applied for increase at the bureau in over 13 years. Inasmuch as the rule requires that he must establish his title to and be granted the maximum rate under that act of June 27, 1890, before bringing his case to Congress, it does not appear that special legislation is warranted at this time in his behalf. He enlisted when only 10 years of age.

Rule I of the committee requires, as stated in this comment, that he must have pursued that course. The rule says, among other things:

No bill will be considered by this committee unless application for pension or increase of pension has first been made to the Bureau of Pensions, nor while the claim is pending in the bureau, except in cases where conclusive proof is presented that the claimant has no pensionable status under existing laws.

He has a pensionable status under existing law. Under existing law he can be allowed, if he has no specific disability, as high as $30 per month. He is on the pension roll; and here is what the rule says with reference to increase of pensions:

With reference to increase cases it will be required that the applicant shall have had his claim adjudicated at the bureau within a reasonable period of time prior to the presentation of the bill.

And, according to the report of the House committee, the last application, as I understand it—if the rather indefinite language as to the time of his medical examination can be construed as a date—was in 1897, nearly 16 years ago.

We have heard much about the rules of this committee. Yet here is a case that the majority of the Committee on Pensions recommend to the Senate with a favorable report, as to an individual whom the clerk of the committee says would not be entitled, and whom the rule of the committee says would not be entitled, to consideration under a special bill.

If this man can come in and have his pension granted, he understands perfectly well that the rule is not meant to or does not operate to his disadvantage; but every other soldier seeing and reading that rule—and the rules are printed for their guidance—will say, "Well, I have no right to get upon that roll under the rules of the committee." Those rules are liberal ones. Yet the committee of the House of Representatives, and in theory—in theory only, I admit—the House of Representatives itself passes a private bill for this man in spite of the rules of the committee of the Senate and the House. It is not only generous enough to waive its rules in his behalf, but is also generous enough to quadruple the pension of a boy who enlisted when he was 10 years old and saw the end of his service at the great age of 12!

If the Senate wants to pass that kind of a bill for a man who is now 60 years old, who was 10 years old when he went into the service, and who was 12 when he went out, who was only a drummer boy, and who can trace no injury to service, I have nothing further to say with reference to this item.

Mr. McCUMBER. This man enlisted, according to the records, when he was 13 years of age. He is 60 now. He enlisted in 1863. At that time, therefore, he must have been 13.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. McCUMBER. I guess the Senator is right. He enlisted first as a drummer boy.

Mr. BRYAN. When he was 10.

Mr. McCUMBER. And he remained in the service something over two years.

Mr. BRYAN. He was 12 when he went out.

Mr. McCUMBER. Under the present law he would be entitled at the expiration of two years to a pension of $15 a month for his service. It is true that our rules require that he should first exhaust every right that he would have before the department.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me ask the Senator, if he will permit me, has he not done that?

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will give me a chance, I was going to say it is true, also, that he has not done that; but this is a House bill. The House committee has the same rules. Its members evidently thought the circumstances were such as to justify departing somewhat from that rule, in view of the fact that in a very short time he would be entitled to $15 per month. The House passed the bill at $24 per month. The Senate cut it down to $12 per month, which is $3 less than he will be entitled to receive in less than two years. I think it really ought to pass at $12, but I am willing to take the sense of the Senate upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN]. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. THOMAS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I wish to inquire whether the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a general pair with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who seems not to be present. I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I inquire whether the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with him. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], and vote "nay."

Mr. BRIGGS. I ask if the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will inquire whether the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I inquire if the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Being paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BRIGGS. As I announced previously, I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] and vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

Mr. WARREN. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] so that that Senator will stand paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM]. I vote "nay."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—19.

Ashurst	Gardner	Owen	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Gore	Percy	Swanson
Bryan	Kavanaugh	Pittman	Thomas

So Mr. BRYAN's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement before proceeding to the next amendment. I hope Senators will not ask for a yea-and-nay vote on any of these items which I shall move to strike out of the bill, for two reasons. In the first place, I am not trying needlessly to take up the time of the Senate nor to embarrass Senators or make them come from the important committees in which they are working to be present. I am perfectly willing to leave it to the judgment of the Chair on a viva voce vote.

There is another reason which will appeal to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] a little later, and that is that it is perfectly useless to do it. I want it understood that I am not in any degree undertaking to filibuster against this bill. I am upon the Committee on Pensions, and I propose to move to strike out of the bill some of the items which violate the rules of the committee. The Senate has placed itself upon record as willing to do that, so there is no use to have it repeated on every motion.

Now, I ask, and I want to get it into as close juxtaposition with the vote of the Senate as I can, that rule 1 of the Committee on Pensions be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be inserted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

RULE 1. No bill will be considered by this committee unless application for pension or increase of pension has first been made to the Bureau of Pensions nor while the claim is pending in the bureau, except in cases where conclusive proof is presented that the claimant has no pensionable status under existing laws. With reference to increase cases it will be required that the applicant shall have had his claim adjudicated at the bureau within a reasonable period of time prior to the presentation of the bill. It has been frequently noted that applicants ignore the bureau and apply direct to Congress where no effort has been made through the regular channels for a period of from 5 to 10 years and more. The committee will give no consideration to such cases but will require applicants to make claim for increase at the bureau and have their rights adjudicated there.

Mr. BRYAN. I move to strike out lines 14 to 17, inclusive, on page 20 of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida moves to strike out certain lines which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, strike out lines 14 to 17, inclusive, in the following words:

The name Izanna J. Kemp, widow of George H. Kemp, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. BRYAN. I send to the desk the report of the House committee upon this item and ask that the Secretary may read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read from House Report No. 1278 as follows:

H. R. 19731. Izanna J. Kemp, aged 73 years, is the widow of George H. Kemp, who served as a private in Company E, Fourth Regiment Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, from August 20, 1864, to June 17, 1865, and on U. S. S. Somoma, etc., August 13, 1862, to June 25, 1863, and on U. S. S. Ohio and Minnesota, April 23, 1861, to September 9, 1861, when he deserted. Total faithful service, 1 year 8 months.

Sailor was pensioned under act of June 27, 1890, at $12, and died November 12, 1900. The pension accrued at his death was paid to this applicant, whom he married December 1, 1858.

A pension was denied her because when she applied it was discovered that in a prior service he had deserted. She applied a second time, claiming the benefit of the joint resolution of July 1, 1902, but was again denied on the ground that the bounty received for his last enlistment was greater than that which he would have received had he faithfully performed his first contract of service.

Dr. G. F. Martin, December 4, 1911, says she is too weak and feeble to work or earn any part of her living.

Neighbors testify that she owns no property or income; that she was supported by her son until he died recently, and now she tries to assist in housework, and, owing to her advanced years, can not do but little housework.

Since soldier had faithful services of 1 year and 8 months and applicant was his wife prior to the Civil War, and is quite old and penniless, an allowance of $12 a month is advised.

Mr. BRYAN. Upon that item the force which assists the Senate committee in its labors upon the great number of private pension bills that make their way into Congress at every session, and who have had to consider during the Sixty-second Congress, as I understand it, about 15,000 private pension bills, makes the following note with reference to this item:

Izanna J. Kemp. In this case the soldier husband was a deserter from his first service, although he had one year and eight months faithful service.

Widow is poor and needy. But the Senate committee has never recommended granting pensions except for faithful service.

If there are any extenuating circumstances as to his desertion, a bill to correct that record would give the widow a pension.

Yet, Mr. President, the Senate committee to-day recommends the giving of a pension to the widow of a man who has achieved the double distinction of being a deserter and a bounty jumper, according to the report of both the Senate and House committees. The record that he made crooked on the field of battle in time of war the Congress of the United States in time of peace makes straight for him in the face of legislation that protected a deserter who returned within a reasonable time of service, in the face of a joint resolution of 1902 which provided that if he got an honorable discharge from a subsequent contract of service it should operate to be an honorable discharge from a prior contract of service.

Yet the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate urge upon their respective bodies the passage of this bill. When he got an opportunity he deserted. Oh, but he came back into the Army, they say. Yes; he came back for a bounty. That is patriotism. In these latter days we do not measure patriotism by the old standard that the Government which protects its citizen in time of peace has the absolute right to demand his service in time of war. But you by this kind of legislation invite him to come in although he deserted, because you think, well, it may be that at one time he was loyal. The Senate of the United States, I presume, will join the majority of the committee in providing that not only a deserter but a man who went back for money into the Army of the United States should be so distinguished and separated and isolated and placed above the great body of the loyal men of the Union Army who are not here besieging Congress to grant them any peculiar privileges, but are satisfied to receive only the pensions that come to them under the general legislation of Congress.

That is all I care to say. I think it is my duty to say that much, and I leave it for the Senate to retain the item in the bill if it shall so desire.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, had this been a pension for the soldier himself I have an idea that probably the committee would not have granted the pension. But the facts were discussed before the Committee on Pensions, and the committee undoubtedly focused their attention upon the condition of the widow rather than upon the fact that a bounty had been received by the husband at the time of one of his enlistments.

I will state the facts, and I want the Senate to look at it as the majority of the committee looked at it.

This man had a service of one year and eight months—nearly two years of service—during the war. This woman was his wife during that service of about two years. She is now 73 years of age; she attempts to make a living by trying to do housework; she is sick and feeble, and has no money whatever. There is a widow, in my opinion, who is drawing a pension and has been voted one where the conditions were far less justifiable than in this woman's case. I repeat, she is a woman 73 years old, and in her condition a pension of $12 is a small pittance. While her son was living and was able to take care of her she made no attempt to secure a pension. After she learned that there had been a bounty paid to her husband, after her son's death, and having to rely on herself, with no one to support her, and being 73 years of age, the committee, or a majority of the committee—and I have here on this floor to represent the view of the majority of that committee—concluded that because of that service and because of her destitute condition and her age she ought to be allowed $12 per month. I speak only the views of the majority of the committee and the basis on which they allowed the pension. I am willing to take the sense of the Senate upon it.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, just a word. The clerk of the committee was right. If there was any question about this man being a deserter, he had a right to have that shown. The way to do that is to refer it, to have his military record corrected, or to have his crooked record straightened; but that would do no good. There is no question about his being a deserter; there is no question that he could not come in. Even under the liberal provisions of the general law this widow could not get upon that roll unless the Senate should waive that and waive the fact that he went back into the service for pay.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] bases, as he has to base, this claim upon what? Upon the fact that the widow is old and poor. Mr. President, that shows the vice and the evil of this special pension legislation. I have stated before, and I now repeat, that it would be much better if Congress would simply enact as a law the rules of the Committee on Pensions and send them down to the Pension Bureau to be administered. Why? Because they would follow the rules; they would not violate them, as the Senate did a minute ago and in the case of the previous amendment which I offered. They would not yield to the temptation to give a pension as an act of charity upon the part of the Government to every old or needy person who applied.

Mr. President, I have as much sympathy, I hope, as has the Senator from North Dakota with the old and the needy; but I say that we are by this legislation establishing a precedent which will come back to plague this country in the near future. The United States pays more money for pensions than all the balance of the civilized world put together, and that, too, half a century after the war is over. Other countries pay pensions because of injuries received in battle, and no one needs special legislation for that. I began the other day to comment upon a bill that was introduced for the "Old Age Home Guard of the United States Army."

Senators smiled at that; Senators thought that was a wild dream of some irresponsible person. That bill was framed upon the theory that we in later days are not granting war pensions, but that we are selecting simply a class, and that if a poor widow 73 years old, needing help from somebody, simply because of that was put upon the pension roll, there is no reason on earth why every other poor person under like circumstances should not also be placed there.

Who was behind the bill to which I referred a few days ago? In the Denver convention, which met in 1908, of the American Federation of Labor, a committee was appointed to report back to the next annual convention a form of bill for old-age pensions. They were also authorized and required to take legal advice. They came back to the Toronto convention, in 1909, and approved the bill to which I referred, but which I did not then have time to explain.

It is true that those who enlisted in the Civil War, as compared to the widows and dependents, are in the proportion of only 5 to 4. They are dying off rapidly. There is now pending—and I understand it will be pressed before adjournment here—legislation designed to give pensions to the widows of the veterans of the Spanish-American War and to remove any restrictions in regard to the date of marriage as to widows of veterans of the Civil War. It will not be long—it will not be two years—before the noncombatants will outnumber those upon the pension roll designated as having been enlisted in the Civil War.

There are not 25 per cent of those who enlisted in the War between the States upon the pension rolls to-day. Less than one year ago Mr. Gardner, formerly a Representative from Michigan, said that most of the old veterans of the war were gone, and that the 600,000 or 800,000 people who enlisted at the close of the war, and who did not even get the polish off their shoes, formed the great majority of those now upon the pension roll. The number of those on the pension roll on account of the Spanish-American War is 29,000——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt my colleague?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to his colleague?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to get clearly in my mind just the meaning of the statement that not 25 per cent of those who enlisted in the war were on the pension roll. I want to ask the Senator if he means that not 25 per cent of those on the pension roll ever enlisted in the war, or does he mean that not 25 per cent of those who enlisted are on the pension roll?

Mr. BRYAN. Not 25 per cent of those who enlisted. There were over 2,000,000 enlistments in the Civil War, and there are less than half a million now on the pension roll, although the pension roll itself numbers about 900,000 names. There are on the pension roll because of the War with Spain, in round numbers, 29,000 pensioners.

In the battle of Santiago there were about 15,000 soldiers engaged. They were all of the Regular Army, except the Rough Riders, and the Rough Riders only numbered 557; but you have now upon the pension roll 29,000 pensioners of the Spanish-American War, with 7,000 applications pending, and by general legislation and special legislation we increase it from time to time.

The yea-and-nay vote, taken a few minutes ago, showed that the rules relating to pensions amounted to nothing. There is but one rule, and that is to pay a pension if it is asked for.

The bill that came in here, to which I have referred, had back of it the American Federation of Labor. I think it is a great mistake; but I think that those people have as much right to be put upon the pension roll as the women who happened to marry men who enlisted in a war. If the Congress of the United States can not resist the temptation to grant whatever money is asked, if the pension roll in the two years that I have had the honor to serve in this body has jumped from $150,000,000 to $180,000,000, and if you are going to pass before Congress adjourns two more bills that will bring the total up to $190,000,000, I predict that before 1914 we will spend $200,000,000 for the pension roll, and that it will be impossible to resist the 18,000,000 laboring men who are asking to be put upon that roll.

There will be 1,250,000 of them entitled to be so placed, as the proposition is presented.

The Senate acted upon a measure this week. It went out upon a point of order, but what would you have done if you had had a chance to vote upon it—to pension civil employees of the Government in the postal service. It was said that it would not cost much; that this class was small in number; but, Mr. President, there are 400,000 people in the civil service, and to pension them would add about $40,000,000 a year to the expenditures of the Government.

So the advocates of the Crago bill say that it will only cost two and a half millions to put the widows of Spanish-American War soldiers on the pension roll now; but those men have studied history; they know that that was the way the pensioning of the widows of the Civil War was started; but these men live in a much faster age, and they are getting upon the roll quicker.

There were 400,000 enlistments in the War with Spain, and we will have more pensions if we listen to the plea of the Senator from North Dakota that this woman is old and needy, until finally some genius will propose to provide pensions for the men who have been in the public service, and perhaps, after a while, there will be pensions for Members of Congress. In Great Britain they have pensions for those who hold office when the office is abolished. We are getting along faster than England ever did, and some genius will propose to provide a pension for a man who gets beaten for office. The sum total of the whole thing will be that every man will get a pension. Who is going to pay them? I do not know. We will be lifting ourselves by our boot straps. Two-thirds of the money that comes to the customhouses of this country to-day is spent in the payment of pensions, with less than a half million men on the rolls who ever smelled gunpowder.

Oh, Mr. President, simply because—and that is the only excuse—this woman is old and needy, are we to place her upon the pension rolls? If so, you can not resist the demands that will be placed before Congress by the 1,250,000 decrepit, dependent laboring people, backed by the great American Federation of Labor. You will not resist the demands of the 400,000 civil-service employees. I think the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] recognizes that the only way to get away from that is to provide a retirement plan and make the employees contribute to it.

It does not make much difference to me; it does not make any difference whether you pay a pension to this woman or not; but it is not in accordance with the rules of the committee. It is in the teeth of every requirement of the statute. We are to pay her a pension because she is poor, because the committee has had compassion upon her, and, in addition to her poverty, she had a husband who was both a deserter and a bounty jumper. If the Senate wants to do that, well and good; but I do not think I would be doing my duty if I should sit silent as a member of that committee without calling attention to the fact that in a few items we are violating the rules of the committee and violating the statutes we have solemnly passed, and are doing it upon no theory at all except that under the system that prevails if a constituent has enough influence or can get close enough to or can get acquainted with the Representative from his district, out of that acquaintanceship grows a private pension bill. Members of Congress, I understand, have the privilege of securing consideration for so many bills, not upon merit—I do not mean to say they are not passed upon their merits, or such merit as this case displays, or such merit as is involved in the case of the 10-year-old soldier boy to whom we granted a pension a few moments ago; but outside of that they have no merit.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. I desire to ask the Senator from Florida if he does not think that the present pension policy is a wise policy on the part of those who desire to create a necessity for high taxes and a necessity for protective duties?

Mr. BRYAN. I do not believe, Mr. President, that, rich as this country is, it can afford to pursue this policy much further. I think the time has come in this country for men from all sections to say that we have given and given until we have about used up the immense resources of this great Government, and we will just have to disappoint some of our friends who have enlisted for military service.

I am very glad somebody has introduced a bill to pension the veterans of the Spanish-American War, because while I do not feel that I have any prejudice against the veterans in the Union Army of the Civil War, certainly nobody can charge with fairness that I would be prejudiced against many of my own constituents, men who enlisted in the War with Spain, but never got to Cuba, and who, yielding to this Nation-wide demand to get upon the pay roll of the Government, are urging legislation for the widows of the Spanish-American War veterans. I know opposition to it is unpopular. I know the camps of the veterans have petitioned us to vote for this bill, but I do not believe that all the patriotism of men is gone. I should like once more to have it felt by the young men of this country that the Government does not owe them a living.

I rather admire the spirit of independence, the spirit for which this Government has stood, that it is no part of the business of the Government to provide a man a living, but to give him a chance equal with everybody else. I rather like the sentiment, "Look every man in the eye and tell him to go about his own business." He is an independent, free American citizen, and not dependent upon the charity of the Government which protects his life and property.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. I only rose to suggest to the Senator from Florida that this "widespread demand" for enlarging the pension list is not in reality a widespread demand from the people of the United States. It is a demand of individuals organized together and banded together for the purpose of promoting the interests of individuals by putting them on the pension list. I took the vote of Oklahoma audiences, one after another during the last year, with regard to the proposed blanket extension of pensions, and the people of that State were almost unanimously against it. I will say easily 99 out of 100 citizens were against it, and I am sure 99 out of 100 of the citizens of the United States are against this extravagant policy, which seems to know no limit and no ending.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, taking the question in its large sense, I believe the statement of the Senator from Oklahoma is accurate. The trouble is that men organize for the old soldiers.

Mr. OWEN. It is the pension attorneys.

Mr. BRYAN. These men who went into the war without reward or the hope thereof, when the war was over went back to build names for themselves in times of peace. But there are organizations, and the people are not active in resistance. They rather sympathize with the desire of anybody to get along in life easily. Another trouble is, the people do not realize that they are paying the taxes collected in an indirect way. But the organizations know their business.

Mr. OWEN. They do.

Mr. BRYAN. I want to read, right here, a colloquy that occurred in the Committee on Pensions not long ago when the colleague of the Senator who last interrupted me, the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] inquired of Mr. McElroy as I shall read. I beg to assure Senators that I shall close my remarks very shortly. I have taken up a vast deal more time than I intended to consume; but in answer to the Senator's question I will read extracts from this hearing.

This gentleman was careful to let the committee understand just exactly who he is:

> I presume you gentlemen all understand that I am the editor of the National Tribune, and I am talking to these men all of the time.

The National Tribune is the official organ of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Then he said in another place:

> Aside from that, I want to reiterate that it is grossly immoral and a danger to public morals to have the Government of the United States say that one marriage can be different in a way from another marriage.

He is an expert on what it takes to constitute morality. So the senior Senator from Oklahoma, in his innocence, asked these questions:

> Senator GORE. Colonel, is it your opinion that these pensioners ought to support the political party that grants them pensions?
> Mr. MCELROY. No.
> Senator GORE. You were at the head of the pension organization in the late campaign, were you not?
> Mr. MCELROY. No; I was not.
> Senator GORE. Did you not write letters to the veterans stating that you had been placed in charge?
> Mr. MCELROY. I wrote letters as a Republican.
> Senator GORE. Did you not state that you had been placed in charge?
> Mr. MCELROY. Of what?
> Senator GORE. Of that bureau—the organization of the old soldiers—for the campaign committee?
> Mr. MCELROY. Yes; I stated that I was placed in charge of the veteran wing, as a veteran, talking to veterans as a Republican veteran and writing to veterans. I wrote to them and told them that I thought it was good policy for them to support the Republican Party.
> Senator GORE. That is the point. You think they ought to support the party that grants the pension?
> Mr. MCELROY. Certainly; I am a Republican.
> Senator GORE. Did you write to the commandants of the camps telling them to go through the editorials of papers that were not supporting Mr. Wilson and to get editorials that were specially mean and harsh against Mr. Wilson?
> Mr. MCELROY. Yes; yes. I think that is perfectly legitimate politically. I wrote to comrades. I did not write to the commanders of the camps. I wrote to comrades with whom I am in correspondence.
> Senator GORE. Do you think that is good pension ethics?
> Mr. MCELROY. Yes; I think it is good political ethics.
> Senator GORE. All right. I just wanted to get your standard and ideals about it. That is all.

He will support any party that will give him what he wants. I do not mean to say, because I know it is not true, that one party will be less liberal to these men than another party. My opinion has been that no party has had the determination and the sense of justice to call a halt.

So, Mr. President, I move to strike out this item. The fact that this woman is old and poor ought not, according to any standard of morals or ethics or justice, to entitle her to a place upon the pension roll, or entitle her to be supported by the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I move to strike out lines 11 to 14, inclusive, on page 27.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, it is proposed to strike out all of lines 11, 12, 13, and 14, which read as follows:

The name of Mary J. Weddel, helpless and dependent child of William P. Weddel, late of Company A, Twelfth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary read from the report the item with reference to Mary J. Weddel on page 5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. McCUMBER. What page is it?

The SECRETARY. Page 59, at the top of House report 1278:

H. R. 23708. Mary J. Weddel, aged 60 years, is the helpless and dependent child of William P. Weddel, who served as a private in Company A, Twelfth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, from March 16, 1865, to February 15, 1866 (11 months). Address, Olivet, Mich.

Soldier was pensioned under the general law at $30 by reason of bronchitis and resulting phthisis pulmonalis. He died September 5, 1886. He and the mother of applicant were married April 8, 1849; she died August 11, 1901. She had been pensioned under the general law at $12 from date of soldier's death.

No one now pensioned on above service. This applicant was born May 18, 1852.

Dr. A. H. Burleson, August 20, 1912, says applicant is a permanent cripple, due to dislocation of hip, the ball of the joint being several inches out of place; she also has occasional attacks of pleurisy, such attacks being brought on by work; he believes applicant unable to do any kind of work.

William L. Emerson testifies that he has known her since before the Civil War; that in the early sixties she was injured by falling off a load of wood, dislocating her hip. The hip was not properly set or attended to, and as a result she became a confirmed cripple, and whenever she attempts to work she has pleurisy of the side.

Other testimony shows her to be the legitimate child of soldier and Nancy J. Weddel; that she never married; that she can not work, being a cripple and suffering from chronic pleurisy; that she has no property except a small house and lot; that there is no one to contribute to her support.

The county assessor certifies that applicant's property is assessed at $1,200; further, it is mortgaged, but he knows not the amount.

All the village officials have united in a petition asking that she be pensioned and indorsing her application as a true statement.

A rate of $12 a month may be allowed.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to the report prepared in the Senate committee:

Mary J. Weddel. In this case it is proposed to pension a 60-year-old helpless child of a soldier. The child was born before the services of the soldier. There is no evidence to show that she was helpless prior to attaining the age of 16 years.

The statute allows children who are dependent or helpless before they reach that age to be pensioned. There is no provision of law to authorize a pension after that time; so this bill confessedly is in the teeth of the law.

I read further:

It is true she is now an old woman and helpless and disabled, largely on account of age; but if pensions are to be granted to children of a soldier who become helpless through the infirmities of age pensions on account of the Civil War will continue for a hundred years. Therefore the item should be stricken from the bill.

I did not write that. That was written by the clerk of the Committee on Pensions, employed to state the facts. He stated the facts; and under the facts this person is not entitled to this pension either by any rule of the committee or by any law, but it is in the face of the law we have made.

If we make fish of one and fowl of another, and if we pension this woman because she is poor and 60 years old, I want to know why it is that the demand of those who advocate an old-age pension can not lay equal claim not only to the consideration but to the approval by Congress of their demands?

It is useless to urge this. My sole purpose is to make the Senate understand that it is violating its own rule; that it is violating the law. I know it will be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] asks me why I am making the fight. I have had more experience in this business than the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. I know what will happen. We have a case here where the Senate violated the rule, admittedly so, in defiance of the facts. Nobody disputes that. It is pure charity; and you are inviting anybody in this country to come in and get an organization behind him and demand a pension.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is not because it is charity. I think the strongest objection is that it is favoritism, rank favoritism. A rule is adopted and applied to some, and others are exempted from its operation.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator from Nebraska wants to test it, let him try it. I know what will happen.

I move to strike out the paragraph from lines 19 to 22, inclusive, on page 28.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida moves to strike from the bill what will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, beginning in line 19, strike out the following item:

The name of Mary F. Hess, former widow of Thomas K. Hess, late of Company F, Thirty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. BRYAN. I send to the desk and ask that the Secretary may read the report upon this item, beginning at the bottom of page 61.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary, reading from page 61 of House Report 1278:

H. R. 24047. Mary F. Hess, aged 66 years, is the former widow of Thomas K. Hess, who served as a private in Company F, Thirty-second Regiment Ohio Infantry, from August 15, 1861, to June 25, 1862 (10 months).

Soldier was pensioned under the general law at $15 for gunshot wounds of both thighs; he died June 22, 1873. He and applicant were married June 25, 1868. She, with one child, was pensioned under the general law at $8 and $2. February 17, 1875, date of her remarriage to one Zeenos Shaffer, from whom divorced January term, 1880, and alowed to resume use of former name.

Mr. BRYAN. The report of the Senate committee on the pending omnibus bill contains the following:

H. R. 24047. Mary F. Hess, aged 66 years, is the former widow of Thomas K. Hess, who served as a private in Company F, Thirty-second Regiment Ohio Infantry, from August 15, 1861, to June 25, 1862 (10 months).

Soldier was pensioned under the general law at $15 for gunshot wounds of both thighs; he died June 22, 1873. He and applicant were married June 25, 1868. She, with one child, was pensioned under the general law at $8 and $2. February 17, 1875, date of her remarriage to one Zeenos Shaffer, from whom divorced January term, 1880, and allowed to resume use of former name.

Dr. A. W. Bice, a specialist in diseases of the eye, testifies that without well-fitted glasses she is unable to see well enough to work, and that by reason of her poor health and age she is unable to do much work. It is further shown she has no real estate, personal property, except a few household goods valued at $25, no income, or resources of any kind.

Precedents allow a rate of $12 a month.

I read from rule 8 of the rules of the committee:

RULE 8. Consideration will not be given to any bill proposing to grant a pension to a widow who has remarried since the death of her soldier husband, even though she is again a widow, or has been divorced from her second husband, unless she was the wife of the soldier during the time of his service.

Oh, unanimous consent can always be had to suspend the rules of the Committee on Pensions. But I want the country to know that they are making fish of one and fowl of another. You say publicly by your rules that this class of widows are not entitled to pensions, but there is a mental reservation that if they can come in and say that they are poor, that they are 50 years old or 60 years old or 45 years old, the rule will not be enforced against them if, even after the war, they happen to have had the good luck to marry a man who had enlisted.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it is probably proper for me to say in justification of the committee that this is a House bill. It came here from the House. In looking over the bill, my committee clerk made a note of all the facts suggested by the Senator from Florida. The committee in its judgment by a majority vote decided that the item ought to stay in the bill.

I presume the committee decided it, Mr. President, upon these grounds: First, that while this woman technically could not have been the widow of the soldier her long life was as the wife of this soldier, and he died from injuries incurred in the service. Afterwards she married, when she was well along in years, probably for a home. She made a mistake and left her husband after a short time, obtaining a divorce, and resumed her other name. The committee overlooked this second marriage, under the circumstances. I am willing to submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I am somewhat interested in this case. Do I understand that this is a widow who was married to a soldier and the soldier died and she afterwards remarried, and this overlooks the remarriage and pensions her because her first husband was a soldier?

Mr. DU PONT. That is the case.

Mr. BRISTOW. I want to know why the committee will bring this report in on one bill and turn it down in another. I have an exactly similar case from my own State, and the Committee on Pensions refused to grant the pension.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I agree to the Senator's proposition. I think when we have a rule it ought to be observed. The excuses for making this exception to the rule are sickness and destitution, but in the cases of others who are turned down under the rule is there not also equal ill health and equal destitution? But the fact is that all the cases presented to the committee are cases in which the people are old and probably needy and in want. Such being the case, I believe that a citizen of one State should not be allowed to have a pension in violation of the rule and a citizen of another State be denied a pension because of the rule.

In my own State, because of the rule, there have been large classes of people denied the benefits of the pension law. The soldiers of the Fifth and Sixth Delaware Volunteers have been denied any participation in the benefits of the present pension law, and there are many widows of these soldiers in suffering and in want. Why should not the case of these people be considered if a violation of the rule in the case of other people is to be given consideration? I think they are entitled to the same justice and equity.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. BRYAN. Does not the Senator see it is inevitable that if you establish rules for your guidance and do not abide by those rules, injustice and favoritism are bound to be shown? Does not the Senator know that that is bound to be true? I have simply pointed out four or five instances where under the rules of the committee that is the case.

Mr. BRISTOW. The inquiry that I was making was whether this woman was the wife of a soldier who served in the Army at the time of his service. As I understand the rule, if the widow was the wife of a soldier at the time he served——

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator is mistaken. She married him after his service, several years afterwards, according to the data collected.

Mr. BRISTOW. So she was not the wife at the time of the service of the soldier in the Army?

Mr. BRYAN. According to this report she was not.

Mr. BRISTOW. She married him afterwards?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is exactly the case of a very worthy woman who lives in my home county, who is as poor as anybody and has to be supported by her friends. She had a second unfortunate marriage. I took the matter up with the committee personally, and it was refused upon the ground that such exceptions were never made, and I am amazed to find exceptions of that kind in this bill. I want to know if there is a rule for one Senator in regard to widows of that kind that is not applied to others.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the principal offender in destroying the rules of the committee has been the Senate here, and the two Senators who have spoken have been as conspicuous as anyone else I know of in turning down the rules of the committee.

The chairman has endeavored in all instances to hold the committee to stringent rules, and we have had two or three of them turned down within the last few days. We had one turned down for the benefit of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. The committee provides that under no circumstances will we ever grant a widow over $50 a month, and the pension was raised to $75 or $100 a month; and my good friend from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] joined with a majority in allowing that amount, clearly, Mr. President, against the rules of the committee, clearly against the efforts of the chairman of that committee to hold to the rule. When he could not hold the committee down to that rule he has tried to hold them just as closely as it is possible to the rules of the Senate. The House, of course, may not have the same rules. They are governed by their own set of rules, and they may see fit to set aside whatever rules they may have in particular cases.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that I am sure the Senator from North Dakota does not wish to make a misstatement in reference to the bill granting a pension to Mrs. Hawkins. The statement, as I understood it, was that she received a pension greater than $50 a month, in violation of the rule of the committee. That is a complete error. The pension granted in the bill that passed yesterday was only $50 a month.

Mr. McCUMBER. My attention was directed in another direction and I did not hear the remark of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. DU PONT. I will repeat it. I said that I am sure the Senator from North Dakota does not wish to make a misstatement in reference to the bill pensioning Mrs. Hawkins.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am speaking of the bill pensioning Mrs. Porter.

Mr. DU PONT. I thought the Senator spoke of the bill pensioning Mrs. Hawkins.

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not mention any name, but the bill I had in mind was that pensioning Mrs. Porter. The principle is the same.

Mr. DU PONT. Mrs. Porter receives only $50 a month.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think she receives $75.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to ask the Senator two questions. Is it not true that the House committee has the same rules as the Senate Committee on Pensions?

Mr. McCUMBER. We have had, but I think they have rather modified their rules during the last year. I judge that more particularly from the kind of bills they are sending over here. I know they are not drawing the line as strictly as they did before. I would have to know what their rules are before I could answer the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. Is not the Senator familiar with the rules of the House Committee on Pensions?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am familiar with the fact that we adopted joint rules some time ago, but I do not know whether the present committee of the House still adheres to the old joint rules.

Mr. BRYAN. I wish to ask the Senator one more question. Do these rules anywhere say how much we can devote to private pensions? I want to say to the Senator—granting that there is a rule prohibiting a pension above $50 to a widow—I think I have had a very bad example set me as to the rule. Really, I had understood from my experience on the committee that the rules are not enforced, and if I fell by the wayside in voting for what I conceive to be a meritorious bill for the widow of Fitz John Porter, I can only plead as my excuse that it was my only offense. I think the Senator will bear me out in that, whereas it is the exception for a majority of the committee not to override the rules whenever they please. I do not believe it is fair to take the case of Mrs. Porter, whose husband was treated unjustly, and who lost his pay for years, and compare it with the ordinary case that comes before the committee.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. Referring to the statement of the Senator from North Dakota that I had been one of the offenders in inducing the Senate to violate the rules of the committee, I want to say that the Senator is entirely mistaken. I may have voted to overrule the committee upon one or two cases—I do not remember; but if I did it was in behalf of a bill that some Senator was advocating and which the committee was resisting. I know that I have never taken a case from the committee to the floor of the Senate in which I was personally interested and attempted to get the committee overruled. Whenever the committee announces that the rules of the committee forbid a pension, under such circumstances I yield to the decision of the committee, and I always have done so.

I wish to say that if the committee on its own motion and by the vote of its own members violates those rules and reports for one Senator a case and under exactly the same circumstances refuses a report for another Senator, it is a gross injustice and indefensible.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me first answer the Senator from Kansas. The Senator must know, I think, that this is a House bill; it is not a Senate bill. It comes to us from the House with a House report on it. The House undoubtedly can act in accordance with its rules or waive its rules in a particular case. Of course, we can not govern what the House may do. The chairman tries to call the attention of the committee at each of its sessions to every case that he thinks is an infringement upon the rule.

The committee, like the Senate itself, often turns down the views of the chairman as to what ought to be done upon the rule. That is not the fault of the chairman. He attempts in all instances to have the rules applied to House bills that are applied to Senate bills, and applied equally to all persons. I think the Senator will agree with me that no one has been more diligent in their efforts, both in committee and on the floor, to appeal to Senators that they do not make bad precedents.

Mr. BRISTOW. I admit that.

Mr. McCUMBER. If they have voted in a way that the chairman thought was wrong in one instance, the chairman has called attention to the fact that that one instance would make a bad precedent. The chairman must be more or less responsible; he has to defend the committee whenever there is a precedent brought up, and it is his desire to make matters as clearly right as possible.

Let me say to the Senator that being unable to get the committee to agree with me in all instances that we ought not to grant a pension to any person who has been remarried, the chairman has at least succeeded in his efforts in holding the committee down to this proposition: That where the husband has died of injuries incurred in the service, and where the second marriage was after the woman had become old and practically helpless and had rather remarried in order to secure a home in her old age, and her real life and about all her married life was with the soldier husband, and having made a mistake in her anxiety to secure a home in marrying a man whom she ought not to have married, and having obtained a divorce in a very short time, the majority of the committee seemed to look at that as more of a mistake than a real marriage, and they would regard her long life with the soldier husband—would regard the fact that he had died of injuries incurred in the service as justifying them in overturning the rule.

Mr. BRISTOW. In response to what the Senator from North Dakota has just said, if he will permit me, I want to give him credit for defending the rules of the committee on the floor with great vigor. I think he is entitled to commendation for the way he has done so. I believe that thoroughly; but my complaint is a serious one, because it opens the field to very great injustice.

Suppose it is a House bill. The situation might be then that the Member representing a district can take the identical case to the House and get the pension, while the Senator is precluded from getting the pension, if the bill should originate in the Senate. So the Senator can readily see that nothing could be more unjust, more inequitable, or more demoralizing as a legislative procedure.

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree with the Senator. I have stated that again and again.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is almost unthinkable that the Senate would tolerate such a thing as that.

Mr. McCUMBER. But I think the Senator would probably find that the case he has in mind would not coincide with this in all respects; first, as to the fact of the death of the husband being due to injury incurred in the service; second, as to the great length of the real married life with that husband; and, third, as to the very short time of the second marriage and the divorce immediately following. Possibly that might differentiate the case the Senator refers to. I do not say that it does.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not think that such is the case.

Mr. McCUMBER. It may not be.

Mr. BRISTOW. The evidence may not have been clear that the death occurred from injuries in the service, because that is a difficult thing to prove, as the Senator well knows.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. It gets into very hazy kind of evidence when we undertake to trace back the cause of death. I certainly must contend that when the Senate committee reports a bill of this kind under these circumstances in violation of its rules, it is due to the Senators who undertake to conform to those rules that such a case should not be permitted to pass.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota has referred to me as an offender, inasmuch as I was one of those who induced the Senate to violate the rules of the Pension Committee in the case of Mrs. Porter and, I believe, in that of Mrs. Hawkins. Be that as it may, I should like to say that my advocacy of those cases on the floor of the Senate was simply the support of the majority report of the Pension Committee, and if these be offenses I must say that I glory in such offenses.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think possibly I am justified in stating that the cases referred to did not come within the rule of destitution. Under the rules of our committee no pension should be allowed under any circumstances by private bill unless there is a case of destitution, and it was not stated that either of the cases came within that rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 27874.

Mr. DU PONT. I should like to inquire if that is a House omnibus pension bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 27874) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, at the top of page 2, to strike out:

The name of William Bennett, late of Capt. Hart's independent company, Florida Mounted Volunteers, Florida war with Seminole Indians, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 23, to strike out:

The name of George W. Lyons, late of Capt. N. P. Willard's company, First Regiment Florida Mounted Volunteers, Florida Seminole Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $10 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 6, before the words "per month," to strike out "$15" and insert "$12," so as to read:

The name of John E. Jones, late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 13, to strike out:

The name of John E. Zoucks, late of Capt. G. U. Ellis's company, Florida Volunteers, Florida Seminole Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 23, to strike out:

The name of Robert P. Prescott, late of Capts. Jernigan and Rutland's independent company, Florida Mounted Volunteers, Florida war with Seminole Indians, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 3, to strike out:

The name of Josiah J. Sikes, late of Capt. Brady's company, First Regiment Florida Mounted Volunteers, Florida war with Seminole Indians, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 8, to strike out:

The name of Rosalia Spohr, widow of Mathias Spohr, late of Capt. Sommer's company, Louisiana Volunteers, Florida war with Seminole Indians, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. President, I move to add an amendment at the end of the bill, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

The name of Ellen B. Woodbury, widow of Thomas C. Woodbury, late colonel Third Regiment, United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 a month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of said Thomas C. Woodbury until she reaches the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 28379.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 28379) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 2, after line 2, to strike out:

The name of Cornelia A. Mobley, widow of William L. Mobley, late of Capt. Martin's and G. W. Smith's companies, Florida Volunteers, Florida Seminole Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 5, to strike out:

The name of James H. Swallum, alias James H. Shields, late of Troop H, Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 24, before the name "Space," to strike out "Aminda" and insert "Arminda," so as to read:

The name of Arminda Space, dependent mother of William H. Space, late of Battery K, First Regiment United States Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 8, to strike out:

The name of Sarah J. Wood, widow of Buzzilla Wood, late of Capt. Stewart's company, First Regiment Florida Mounted Volunteers, Florida Seminole Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 28282.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 28282) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 6, line 4, after the word "receiving," to insert: "Provided, That in the event of the death of California Haysmer, helpless and dependent child of the said James Haysmer, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine," so as to read:

The name of Anna M. Haysmer, widow of James Haysmer, late of Company F, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Engineers and Mechanics, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of California Haysmer, helpless and dependent child of the said James Haysmer, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 18, to strike out:

The name of Anna O. Stanton, widow of Clark Stanton, late of Company A, First Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 23, before the words "per month," to strike out "$24" and insert "$30," so as to read:

The name of Henry C. Adams, late of Company E, Second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 19, after the word "helpless," to insert "and dependent," so as to read:

The name of Ida Newcomer, helpless and dependent child of Henry Newcomer, late of Company K, Two hundred and third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 1, after the name "Samuel," to strike out the letter "R" and insert the letter "F," so as to read:

The name of Samuel F. Garrett, late of Company I, Thirty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 19, before the word "widow," to insert "former," and in line 23, before the words "per month," to strike out "$17" and insert "$12," so as to read:

The name of Frances A. Ayers, former widow of Benjamin S. Ayers, late of Company K, Twelfth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and Company G, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 6, to strike out:

The name of Rosa Prentiss, widow of Leander P. Prentiss, late of Company E, Fifth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 2, before the word "Volunteer," to strike out "Mounted," and in the same line, after the word "Volunteer" to insert "Mounted," so as to read:

The name of Peter F. Dixon, late of Company E, Eighth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 19, before the words "per month," to strike out "$40" and insert "$30," so as to read:

The name of Isaac J. Nichols, late of Company A, First Regiment Alabama Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 12, to strike out:

The name of Severyn T. Bruyn, late of Company K, One hundred and forty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 11, before the words "per month," to strike out "$60" and insert "$50," so as to read:

The name of John H. Civits, late of Company C, Forty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 5, to strike out:

The name of Frances D. Cadamus, former widow of Robert Phillips, late of Company D, Ninety-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 22, before the words "per month," to strike out "$40" and insert "$50," so as to read:

The name of Daniel Caswell, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 2, to strike out:

The name of Andrew W. McCullough, late of Company E, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Infantry, and Company A, Fifty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 2, before the words "per month," to strike out "$25" and insert "$24," so as to read:

The name of Finetta L. Wood, widow of Enoch Wood, late of Company F, Seventeenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 17, after the name "Reindeer," to insert "United States Navy," and in line 22, after the word "determine," to trike out "And provided further, That in the event of the death of Elizabeth N. Brand, the name of said Charles Alfred Brand shall be placed on the pension roll subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Elizabeth N. Brand," so as to read:

The name of Elizabeth N. Brand, widow of George J. Brand, late seaman United States ships Grampus and Reindeer, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Charles Alfred Brand, helpless and dependent son of said George J. Brand, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 23, before the words "per month," to strike out "$60" and insert "$50," so as to read:

The name of Albert S. Bloomer, late of Company G, Fifty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 8, to strike out:

The name of Mary L. Merchant, widow of Silas B. Merchant, late of Company G, Forty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 52, line 12, after the words "rate of," I move to strike out "$25" and to insert "$20."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 13, to strike out:

The name of Louisa I. Baldwin, widow of William H. Baldwin, alias William Dunlap, late of Company I, Ninth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 21, before the words "per month," to strike out "$24" and insert "$20," so as to read:

The name of Dorothy E. Bacon, widow of Francis H. Bacon, late acting ensign, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 16, before the word "Volunteer," to strike out "Mounted," and, in the same line, after the word "Volunteer," to insert "Mounted," so as to read:

The name of Samuel C. Robertson, late of Company C, Third Regiment North Carolina Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 8, before the words "per month," to strike out "$30" and insert "$24," so as to read:

The name of Mary Bartlett Taylor, widow of Isaac Taylor, late of Company H, Third Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 17, after the words "per month," to insert "such pension to cease upon proof that the soldier is still living," so as to read:

The name of Sarah A. Bland, widow of Francis M. L. Bland, late of Company D, Ninety-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, such pension to cease upon proof that the soldier is still living.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 13, to strike out:

The name of Hannah M. Brewer, widow of Benjamin Brewer, late of Company C, Sixty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 65, to strike out:

The name of Stephen G. Lindsey, late of Company B, Eighty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 7, before the word "widow," to insert "former," so as to read:

The name of Nancy Walton, former widow of Jacob Walton, late of Company H, Seventy-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 7, before the word "widow," to insert "former," so as to read:

The name of Jennie McMurtrie, former widow of Rudolph McMurtrie, late private United States Marine Corps, and of Company C, One hundred and twenty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 17, before the word "widow," to insert "former," so as to read:

The name of Rachel Castell, now Robbins, former widow of Hiram Castell, late of Company C, Seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 16, after the word "receiving," to insert "Provided, That in the event of the death of Maria E. Seib, helpless and dependent child of the said Jacob Seib, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine," so as to read:

The name of Caroline Seib, widow of Jacob Seib, late of Company F, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Maria E. Seib, helpless and dependent child of the said Jacob Seib, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 13, to strike out:

The name of Sarah J. Benton, widow of James P. Benton, late of Company I, Sixty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 10, before the word "Regiment," to strike out "Fourtieth" and insert "Fortieth," so as to read:

The name of George W. Lawson, late of Company E, Fortieth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 8, before the word "widow," to insert "former," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Nancy Stutesman, now Olmstead, former widow of James Stutesman, late of Company H, One hundredth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, after line 21, to strike out:

The name of Nellie McMillan, helpless and dependent child of Daniel McMillan, late of Company F, One hundred and fifty-fourth Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, line 8, after the word "receiving," to insert "the same to be paid to him without any deduction or rebate on account of former alleged overpayments or erroneous payments of pension," so as to read:

The name of James Anderson, late of Company C, One hundred and thirteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving, the same to be paid to him without any deduction or rebate on account of former alleged overpayments or erroneous payments of pension.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. On page 28, I move to strike out lines 11 to 14, inclusive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, after line 10, it is proposed to strike out:

The name of Mary A. Pfister, widow of Reinhard Pfister, late of detachment of Artillery, United States Military Academy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I presume this item can be acted upon without any discussion.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator on what page of the report the item appears?

Mr. BRYAN. On page 59. As I started to say, I think this item can be acted upon without discussion, if the Senate follows the precedent established in the case of the last item upon which we voted. This is the case of a widow who married after the service of her husband. His service is designated by the report as a "peace service at the West Point Military Academy." I simply say that, according to the last action of the Senate, this item should be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. I move to strike out lines 14 to 17, inclusive, on page 21.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 13, it is proposed to strike out:

The name of Edwin F. Miller, late of Company F, Ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. BRYAN. I request the Secretary to read the record of the soldier affected by this item.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

H. R. 14345. Edwin F. Miller, aged 65 years, served as a private in Company F, Ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, from April 8, 1865, to July 10, 1865 (3 months), and is now a pensioner under the act of February 6, 1907, at $12 per month on account of age. Formerly pensioned under act of June 27, 1890, at $8 for loss of sight of left eye and injury to left ankle and right hand. Address, Leechburg, Pa.

Three physicians testify that pensioner is now totally blind, cataracts having grown over both eyes; besides he has rheumatism and is entirely unfit to care for himself, and requires assistance at all times.

Neighbors testify that soldier has no property, real or personal, and no income whatever other than his pension.

An increase to $24 is recommended, his short service not justifying a larger amount.

Mr. BRYAN. The report which passed the committee reads as follows:

In this case the soldier did not enlist until April 8, 1865, the close of the war, and only served three months, but he is now totally blind, and it might be allowed.

Mr. President, it is simply allowing our feelings of sympathy for a blind man, who never saw any service in the war, whose blindness is not due to any enlistment, who only enlisted the day before Lee's surrender, and who saw no service at all—it is purely and simply a pension because of his unfortunate condition and because he is poor. That is all I care to say about the case. It is not a war pension at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the claimant in this case is totally blind. He is not very old, being only 65 years of age, and probably could not have enlisted prior to early in 1865 unless he had enlisted very much under age. He had sufficient service so that he was drawing a pension under the act of 1907, and on account of his total blindness and the necessity of having an attendant the House granted the little pension of $24 per month. If he had had longer service the pension might have run up as high as $40 or $50 a month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRYAN. I move to strike out lines 19 to 23, on page 28.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, after line 18, it is proposed to strike out:

The name of Frances A. Ayers, former widow of Benjamin S. Ayers, late of Company K, Twelfth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and Company G, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, as I understand, this case is identical with the case which attracted the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW]. The bill provides for a remarried widow whose first marriage was subsequent to her deceased soldier husband's service. According to the rule which the Senator from Kansas says he has always felt to be binding upon him, this item ought not to be in this bill. It is exactly like the item heretofore stricken out.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator on what page of the report that item appears, in order that I may look it up?

Mr. BRYAN. On page 60. The report, I will say to the Senator, of the clerk of the Committee on Pensions is:

In this case it is proposed to grant a pension of $17 per month to a remarried widow. The soldier's death was not due to service, and in such cases $12 is the amount usually allowed.

Mr. McCUMBER. This is similar to the cases which I have heretofore mentioned, where there has been a remarriage. This widow was the soldier's wife during his service.

Soldier and applicant were married June 3, 1862. She was pensioned under act of June 27, 1890, at $8, her claim under the general law having been rejected, because soldier's death was not due to the service. Her name was dropped from the rolls by reason of her remarriage, November 13, 1907, to Isaac H. Myers, from whom she divorced at her own request, April term, 1910, and allowed to resume her name of Ayers.

When rather an old woman she was remarried in 1907, making the usual mistake that old ladies make at that time of life in getting married; but the Senate committee seems to have overlooked that error on her part, and granted the pension. I leave the matter entirely to the Senate.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to call attention to the fact that the property of this woman is assessed at $500, and she derives from it a net rent of $75 a year. She is 66 years old. She is not now the widow of a soldier. According to the record, she did marry him between two periods of service; so I was mistaken in saying that this case is exactly like the case acted upon a few moments ago. I do not care to say anything further about it. Under the rules of the committee, she would not be entitled to be upon the pension roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Florida to strike out the paragraph.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRYAN. I move to strike out lines 24 and 25, on page 53, and lines 1 and 2, on page 54.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, after line 23, it is proposed to strike out:

The name of Augusta Batdorf, former widow of John C. Sanders, late of Company A, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, in brief, this is the case of a widow whose husband saw service between November, 1863, and July, 1865. She was married to him in 1869; she was remarried in 1893, and, therefore, under the rules of the committee she is not entitled to a pension. This case is identical in principle with the case which attracted so much attention from the junior Senator from Kansas a few moments ago, and the Senate voted to strike that item from the bill; so, in order to be consistent, this item ought also to be stricken from this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator remember the page of the report? As he is aware, the report is quite voluminous and it takes some time to find particular items.

Mr. BRYAN. Page 110 of the House report. There is another interesting thing about this case. The comment of the clerk of the committee is:

She did not marry the soldier until 1869, four years after his discharge. She was his wife about 10 years. She again married and was the wife of the second man 10 years, and then again married. The third husband committed suicide in 1911. The principal question in this case is whether she should be considered the widow of the soldier. It is clearly against the rules of your committee as to granting pensions to remarried widows.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to state to the Senator that I shall not oppose his motion.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not know but that other Senators might oppose it. I hope the Senator will not oppose it, because if we grant her a pension it ought to be because her third husband committed suicide. There is no other reason for it. To grant a pension in such a case is against the rules of the committee; and for the fight I have made here for about two hours, I should like to be rewarded by seeing this item go out of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to say there are two other amendments that I wish to offer, but I am not able to turn to the pages of the bill where they are found; but I can turn to the pages in the report and we can identify them in the bill and have them acted upon in that way. I move to strike out the item which grants a pension to Mary O'Brien, which we will identify. I would state, Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. On what page in the report is that item found?

Mr. BRYAN. On page 123 of the House report. Her husband saw service only from April 19, 1861, to July 26, 1861. He was never pensioned. He started in at the war, and got enough in three months, and never went back any more. His widow applied for a pension under the general law, and her application was rejected. She is now receiving $12 a month. But, Mr. President, she did not marry the soldier until 1863, two years after his service, and under the rules of the committee should not be in this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will pardon the Chair, the item will be found on page 60, lines 7 to 10, inclusive.

Mr. BRYAN. Then I move to strike that from the bill, Mr. President. I want to say now that, of course, I am not interested in these particular items, but it is a most dangerous precedent if we start out to pension widows who have no better claim to it than is shown in this case, it makes no difference how pitiable the condition is or how poor they are, because they can not be separated by any process of reasoning from those in like condition who have never happened to marry a soldier.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 60 it is proposed to strike out lines 7, 8, 9, and 10, as follows:

The name of Mary O'Brien, widow of Timothy O'Brien, late of Company H, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I can not locate the place in the bill, but the next item which I move to strike out relates to Leora R. Maxon, and is found in the House report, on page 107. The comment in this Senate document is as follows:

If the beneficiary were helpless before arriving at the age of 16 years, she could get a pension by applying at the bureau and proving helplessness. The testimony indicates that she incurred her injury long after arriving at the age of 16 years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will pardon the Chair, the item will be found on page 52, in lines 5 to 8, inclusive.

Mr. BRYAN. I compliment the Chair on being able to turn to it so quickly.

Mr. President, that would also be a dangerous precedent. It is not only not authorized by law, but it is forbidden by law. We certainly ought to keep within the provisions of the statute and not go outside them. The statutory provisions are broad and liberal enough already. I hope the chairman of the committee will concede the wisdom of having that item stricken from the bill. We must some day stop adding new classes. If we begin now to pension the children whose fathers were in a war somewhere, at some time, after they are grown, there never will be any end to this pension roll, and it will sooner or later tend to reflect upon those who have a rightful place on the roll.

Mr. President, it was only in 1911 that the last pensioner of the Revolutionary War went off the rolls. If we start this kind of practice now, in addition to the liberality of recent years, we will be pensioning the great-grandchildren of anybody who ever enlisted in the Civil War. I hope the Senator will agree with me that this item should be stricken out, and raise no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 52, it is proposed to strike out lines 5, 6, 7, and 8, as follows:

The name of Leora R. Maxon, helpless and dependent child of Jonathan H. Maxon, late of Company D, Twenty-fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that under the present law pensions are allowed to helpless and dependent children where the cause of the helplessness accrued before the child became 16 years of age. There was some doubt in this case as to when it accrued, but the committee agreed with the statement made by the Member introducing the bill. That statement was:

The Member introducing this bill has known applicant since childhood, and says she has been virtually helpless all that time, and that she has no property or means of support.

I am giving that simply to show that it would come within the rules, if that statement be correct. Being a helpless child, having been a helpless child of the soldier from infancy until the present time, it is clearly within the right and within the rules to grant the pension.

Mr. BRYAN. The Member who introduced the bill, as I understand, does not say "since infancy"; he says "since childhood." If it be a fact that she was injured before she was 16, she does not need a special bill, and the comment of whoever prepared this Senate document is applicable and very pertinent. If it be the fact that she was helpless before she was 16, she does not need any special bill. The law will give her that protection without a special act of Congress.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will call attention to the fact that in a number of instances, where the department has held that the ailment was not incurred until after 16 years of age, the committees of both Houses, after going through the evidence, have disagreed as to what the evidence established; and in many instances, not only in reference to cases of this character, but in other cases, the committees of both Houses, in their judgment, have found upon the facts differently from the Bureau of Pensions.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I think it will be conceded that these matters can be much more justly settled by a pension bureau, which is interested only in administering the law as it is written, and the rules under which it is to act, than we can settle them here.

It ought not to be hard to ascertain, either from this applicant for a pension herself, or from somebody, somewhere, when it was that she suffered her illness. It seems to me that in that vicinity, among her acquaintances, somebody could fix the time; and if that time be fixed before she was 16, she is already protected. She already has the right. If it was after she was 16, we are, by the passage of bills like this, establishing a precedent that injuries at any time will allow them a place upon the pension roll. If it is desired to establish that kind of a precedent, it ought to be done with a full knowledge of what may be expected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1144. I desire to say to Senators that there are only two very short bills left now, and then we will be through with them.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 28746) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. MYERS. I move to amend the pending bill, on page 3, line 9, by striking out "$40" and substituting in lieu thereof "$50," so as to make the paragraph read:

The name of Belle McP. McCrackin, widow of Alexander McCrackin, late captain in the United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

My reason for making that motion is that the widow in this case, as I understand, is the widow of a naval officer who was a commodore when he died; and I understand the rule to be that no widow of a naval officer shall receive $50 per month except widows of men who were commodores in active service. This deceased husband was only a captain while he was in active service, but when he was retired and put on the retired list he was made a commodore. He was then a retired commodore, and he died a commodore, although he was not actually in service as a commodore. There are some special circumstances, however.

This man entered the United States Navy as a boy, when he was 13 years of age. He ran away from home and got in the Navy as a boy, and served during the War of the Rebellion, beginning as a boy 13 years old. He afterwards entered the Regular Navy and remained in it all of his life, and made a most efficient officer. He died in very straitened circumstances. I understand the widow has no income, aside from this pension, except about $20 per month; she has a daughter about 16 years old to educate, and it is insufficient. I move that the amount be made $50.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "$40" and insert "$50."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to consider Order of Business No. 1145.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 28672) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 28699), making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. DU PONT. I now move that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The motion was agreed to.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "permanent establishment," on page 2, line 5, after the word "cadets," to strike out "$360,000" and insert "$390,000," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of cadets, $390,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 4, after the word "service," to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$864," so as to make the clause read:

Additional pay for length of service, $864.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 5, after the word "service," to insert "detachment," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of general Army service detachment: One first sergeant, $540.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 18, to strike out:

For additional pay of one sergeant in charge of detachment mess, at $6 per month, $72.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 7, to strike out:

For additional pay for one sergeant in charge of mess, $72.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Buildings and grounds," on page 27, line 1, after the word "completion," to strike out "$70,500" and insert "$95,500: Provided, That $25,000 of this amount shall be available for furnishings and fittings such as are necessary to suitably equip this new building for the purposes for which erected," so as to make the clause read:

For completion of the East Academic Building, including finished grading, approaches, etc., in accordance with the plans and specifications approved by the Secretary of War, to be immediately available and to remain so until completion, $95,500: Provided, That $25,000 of this amount shall be available for furnishings and fittings such as are necessary to suitably equip this new building for the purposes for which erected.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. ROOT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That hereafter whenever all vacancies at the Military Academy shall not have been filled as a result of the regular annual entrance examinations the remaining vacancies shall be filled by admission from the list of alternates from the respective States in which the vacancies occur, selected in their order of merit established at such entrance examinations. The admissions thus made shall be credited to the United States at large and shall not interfere with or affect in any manner whatsoever any appointment authorized by existing law: Provided, That whenever, by the operation of this or any other law, the Corps of Cadets exceeds its authorized maximum strength as now provided by law the admission of alternates as prescribed in this act shall cease until such time as the Corps of Cadets may be reduced below its present authorized strength.

Mr. ROOT. I will say that this amendment is the provision to avoid vacancies in the Military Academy by reason of the failure of candidates to pass their examinations in the form which was agreed upon by the Committee on Military Affairs last year. It was passed by the Senate last year, but fell by the wayside in conference.

I think it is quite absurd to keep that great plant at West Point, designed to accommodate a given number of pupils, and then have a large number of the places vacant, when we have the young men who wish to enter and who pass the requisite examination for their admission.

I hope the Senate will take the same view that it did last year and that another attempt will be made to cure this rather wasteful and futile condition, in which we have the plant, the professors, the teachers, and the drillmasters to deal with vacancies.

Mr. DU PONT obtained the floor.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. DU PONT. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma, if he wishes to discuss this matter.

Mr. OWEN. I merely wish to ask whether this provision would transfer the appointments from one district to another, or whether it would confine them to the alternates within the district?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, under the present law the appointment stays in the district until all the candidates named from that district as principal, first alternate, second alternate, and, I think, now, third alternate, have been exhausted. If none of them is able to pass the necessary examination, then there is a vacancy from that district. Under this provision, in that case the vacancy would be filled from the list of alternates from other districts of the same State in the order of merit as shown by their examination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, at the end of the bill, the following:

For construction of a building for instruction purposes for the military post at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., heretofore provided for in the act making appropriations for the support of the Army, as approved August 24, 1912, $10,000, and there is hereby continued available for the construction of this building the amount which was appropriated therefor by the terms of the act mentioned.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to have printed in the RECORD a letter which I have here explaining the necessity for this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF THE QUARTERMASTER CORPS,
Washington, February 13, 1913.

Hon. D. R. ANTHONY, Jr., M. C.,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1913, as you know, contains an item of $10,000 for the construction of a building for instruction purposes at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

The original estimate for the building desired by the local authorities amounted to $37,768.19, and the original amendment proposed to the Army appropriation bill provided for an appropriation of $20,000 for the building in question. The bill as finally passed, however, contained a provision for only $10,000.

With a view of putting the work under contract at the earliest practicable date, this office investigated the matter, and received a report as to the number of children to be provided for in the proposed school building, and their approximate ages, in order to determine the size of building needed. It has been found that accommodations for approximately 135 pupils will be needed. To construct a building suitable for that number would cost not less than $15,000, and a building to cost $20,000 is recommended.

As you were interested in obtaining the provision in the Army bill above referred to, before making recommendation that the amount now available for this purpose be allowed to lapse into the Treasury, and steps taken to include the sum of $20,000 in the Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1915, I thought it advisable to bring this matter to your attention, with a view of obtaining any suggestion in connection therewith that you may desire to make.

Very respectfully,

J. B. ALESHIRE,
Chief, Quartermaster Corps.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I offer an amendment, to come in just after the last amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just agreed to, at the end of the bill, it is proposed to insert:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint William W. Prude, late a cadet at the Military Academy at West Point, to the position of second lieutenant of Infantry in the Army and to place him upon the retired list with the pay of a retired second lieutenant of Infantry.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I hope the chairman will accept that amendment.

Mr. DU PONT. I will accept the amendment. I believe it to be right in principle and a simple act of justice.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like an explanation of that. It seems to me a dangerous thing to do. What are the circumstances which call for retiring this young man before he enters the Army, apparently?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. The circumstances are that he went to West Point a hearty, vigorous boy, stayed there about three years, contracted tuberculosis, and is now in a desperate condition. He contracted tuberculosis while at West Point. I will say to the Senator that a bill on this particular subject has already passed by a unanimous vote.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I do not know anything about this case, but I know we passed a precisely similar bill here a little while ago for a young man at the Naval Academy. I made some inquiry into that case and satisfied myself that he had contracted the tuberculosis because we did not take sufficient care to safeguard the health of the young men there. The tuberculosis manifestly came from cows that were infected, and that ought to have been guarded against.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I simply want to say that when this young man went there he was a boy of splendid physique, and stood high in his class. That a man should intentionally contract tuberculosis, or that he should do it from mischance, is hardly probable. It is exactly a parallel case to that involved in the bill which was passed two years ago.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER obtained the floor.

Mr. DU PONT. Before the Senator from Florida offers an amendment which I believe will lead to some discussion, I will ask that he yield to me to offer an amendment which I assume will provoke no discussion. I will send it to the desk to be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, or at the end of the bill, it is proposed to add a new paragraph, as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to permit John C. Scholtz, a citizen of Venezuela, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that the said John C. Scholtz shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the course in the various departments of instruction, and that the said John C. Scholtz shall not be admitted to the academy until he shall have passed the mental and physical examinations prescribed for candidates from the United States, and that he shall be immediately withdrawn if deficient in studies or conduct and so recommended by the academic board: And provided further, That in the case of the said John C. Scholtz the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

Mr. DU PONT. I should like to explain that this amendment embodies the substance of a joint resolution which has already been passed by the Senate. It was offered here upon the recommendation of the State Department and approved by the War Department. It appears that in the congestion of business in the other House it will be impossible to pass it there. So at the request of some members of the Military Committee of the House I have proposed to attach it to this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 5, after the amendment agreed to at that point, insert:

Provided further, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to reassemble the court-martial, or as many members thereof as practicable, not less than the minimum prescribed by law, which on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the Corps of Cadets of the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., for having violated on August 4, 1911, paragraph No. 132 of the former regulations of the said academy, and sentenced them to be dismissed from the service, and to resubmit the case of any one or more of said cadets upon his or their application to said court for reconsideration of the sentence; and upon such reconsideration the court is authorized to construe said paragraph as not necessarily requiring a sentence of dismissal, but as permitting a lesser punishment, as provided in paragraph No. 142 of the current regulations approved June 15, 1911, and to modify the sentence accordingly: And provided further, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to carry such modified sentence or sentences into effect, notwithstanding the prior dismissal of said cadets, by reinstating them in accordance with the terms and conditions of the modified sentence as approved by the President.

Mr. BRISTOW. I make the point of order that that is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator from Kansas be kind enough to state his point of order?

Mr. BRISTOW. It is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to say that this joint resolution passed the Senate at the present session of Congress. It went to the House and was referred to the appropriate committee there, and it was favorably reported and entered on the House Calendar. It will probably require unanimous consent before it can be reached. It is a resolution which has already passed this body, and it has been favorably reported by the appropriate committee in the other body.

I do not see that the point of order can be well taken. I suppose it rests under Rule XVI. I do not know what part of that rule it has reference to. If it is under the first part of the rule, then the amendment is in pursuance of a resolution which has previously passed the Senate during this session and is excepted from the rule. If it has reference to the question of relevancy, then it would be covered by subdivision 3 of Rule XVI. I fail to find any language in that rule in accordance with the point suggested by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator must realize that this is legislation. If he is changing existing law under the rule, it can not be added to an appropriation bill. The rule of the Senate is well known. It has probably been appealed to a hundred times in the last 10 days.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to have the Senator specify the provision in the rule where he finds a rule that warrants and justifies the objection which he makes. Will he point it out?

Mr. BRISTOW. Rule XVI.

Mr. FLETCHER. What part of it?

Mr. BRISTOW. There are three:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is prepared to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should say, Mr. President, that this could scarcely be called general legislation. I believe the point was raised in the House that it was improperly on the calendar there because it was not general legislation; that it should be classified under the head of private bills rather than bills of a general nature. I do not see that it is general legislation. It would be legislation that applies only to those particular cadets and to this particular case. It can not be classed as general legislation. It does not cover all cases of even a similar character arising at the academy. It refers particularly to these individuals and to this particular case, and it is not general legislation. It can not be considered general legislation. It refers to a particular instance.

The report shows—and I will take the time of the Senate, if it is desired, to go into that—the reason why this special provision is sought to be enacted under the joint resolution which passed this body and is pending in the other House. It is not general legislation. It could only be claimed that it is special legislation, and that does not come within the rule. The reason, as I said, as set forth in the report on this subject, is that the regulations under which these cadets were dismissed had received a construction by the court-martial board which was not authorized, which was erroneous, as is pointed out by the letter of the Secretary of War upon that subject. The regulation itself had been changed, although the change had not been communicated to the officers at the academy. This court-martial sat on the 16th of August. This identical regulation was changed on the 15th of June. These cadets were not tried under the changed regulations, which had not yet been promulgated there, showing the intention and purpose under the regulation to be that the penalty of dismissal was not a mandatory requirement under the regulation as it then existed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Florida that the Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order.

Mr. SWANSON. Before the Senator from Kansas insists on his point of order, I wish to say I am satisfied he would not raise it in this case if he understood all the facts. This is the last chance——

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I do not want to prolong this discussion. I am thoroughly familiar with this case. It has been before the Senate time and again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas has submitted a point of order, and the point of order is sustained. If there be no further amendments to be proposed to the bill as in Committee of the Whole, it will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask the attention of the Senator from Kansas. This matter was fully discussed in the Senate, and the Senate, after full discussion, passed it, the Senator from Kansas simply voting against it and recognizing more or less the justice of this claim. The Secretary of War recommends it. The House committee has reported it favorably. This is the last chance for four or five young men of high character and standing to get justice. It is not a question of any lack of discipline at the academy. The members of the board who tried them said they tried them under a misapprehension as to what the rules were. The rules have been changed.

I should like to offer this amendment again in the Senate, and I ask the Senator from Kansas to reconsider his objection. It simply allows them to go back and reconvene the board according to the law, which they say they did not understand at that time. If the Senator from Kansas will get the facts, I do not believe he will oppose the amendment. Secretary Stimson investigated this matter. He said the board understood that the rules had not been changed, and if they had known they had been changed they would have considered that. The Committee on Military Affairs of the House, the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, the Secretary of War, and the Senate have all passed on this case. This is the last chance five boys have of getting justice at the hands of Congress. The President himself would change it if he had authority. It is too late. The Secretary of War would correct it if he could. This is a case where justice should be given, and I offer that amendment in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia reoffers the amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the Senator from Kansas will not object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment need not be read again unless it is desired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I should like to say that from first to last I have had a great deal to do with this case and I have examined it in every detail. Without taking up the time of the Senate to go over the whole matter, I will say that I consider these four young men have been treated with gross injustice, and it is the least that Congress could do to give them a chance. It is not proposed to reinstate them, but to give them a chance to have their case reinvestigated by the tribunal which originally tried them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOW. In view of the circumstances, I feel that I should make my position clear. I do this because I think I ought to do it, not because it is a pleasant thing to do. It is a conviction with me, and I can not change——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Kansas that the amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOW. The amendment that I made the point of order against?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BRISTOW. I did not withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment was reoffered in the Senate by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, when did the bill get into the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the usual procedure.

Mr. BRISTOW. While Senators were on their feet speaking?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the Senator must not impute to the Chair any wrongdoing.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, Mr. President, I think——

Mr. SWANSON. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that no effort was made to take any advantage of him. I addressed my remarks for nearly 10 minutes to the Senator from Kansas, urging him——

Mr BRISTOW. It is clear there was an advantage taken.

Mr. THORNTON. Urging him not to make the point of order in the Senate.

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, yes; I understand.

Mr. SWANSON. I was addressing him, and I thought I had convinced the Senator so that he was not going to make the point of order. The amendment was submitted and voted on, and I thought the Senator had reconsidered the conditions in the case and decided, after he ascertained the facts, not to make the point of order. My remarks were addressed to him, asking him not to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. DU PONT. After the Senator from Virginia had reintroduced the amendment in the Senate I then went personally to the Senator from Kansas and requested him not to oppose it. I assumed that he understood it perfectly.

Mr. BRISTOW. I understood the purpose of the Senator from Delaware and the purpose of the Senator from Virginia, and I listened to them as attentively as I could, and to other friends of these young men. This is not a personal matter with me. I never saw the young men. I think that such legislation as this is unwise, and ought not to be made. I appealed to the rules of the Senate and exercised the rights I have under those rules. I had not the slightest idea that the bill had passed from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate. If a Senator loses his rights in such a sudden way as that, because he listens with attention and courtesy to Senators who are speaking to or addressing him, it seems to me it is a very unusual proceeding here.

Mr. SWANSON. I will say that I stated distinctly that the bill had passed from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate, and that this amendment was again in order. I stated distinctly that I hoped the Senator from Kansas would not make his objection. I addressed my remarks to him, and not to the Senate. Then the amendment was submitted and passed. If this is wrong the Senator from Kansas can move to reconsider the vote by which it was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is proper the Chair should say that the bill passed from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate in the usual manner. The Senator from Virginia then offered the amendment and the Chair ventured to say that unless a request was made the reading would be dispensed with. The Chair put the question on agreeing to the amendment, supposing that the Senator from Kansas had changed his mind, as he made no point of order against it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I suppose that I was listening to the chairman of the committee, and this process of passing from the Committee of the Whole into the Senate took place when my attention was diverted.

Mr. DU PONT. If the Senator will allow me, I have already stated that it was after the Senator from Virginia reintroduced the amendment and after the Presiding Officer of the Senate had stated it and said that it would not be read again unless requested, that I left my seat and spoke to the Senator from Kansas. It was not before that. So the Senator could not possibly have been talking to me when that event took place.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator from Kansas had listened attentively to me, he would have known that it was done openly.

Mr. BRISTOW. I understand it is perfectly easy when a case is before the Senate like this for a Senator to be deprived of his rights by different processes.

Mr. SWANSON. So far from being deprived of any rights the Senator failed to exercise his rights; he failed to listen to what was going on in the Senate. If he had been attentive to the Senator who was addressing him and called him by name he would not have been deprived of any right. This matter was up; it was debated. It had not been disposed of, for the bill came back into the Senate. Am I to be deprived of the right of offering in the Senate an amendment that is rejected in Committee of the Whole? Everything was done publicly, openly, and fairly. I offered the amendment, and when I offered it I addressed my remarks especially to the Senator from Kansas, appealing to him as an individual Senator to give these boys a chance to have a wrong righted.

I flattered myself that my appeal had convinced him. There was a delay in submitting it, and he had an opportunity to interpose. I thought that he remembered the debate we had heretofore at one time. An objection would then prevent its coming up. The Senator from New York objected at one time, and the Senator from Kansas afterwards simply voted against it, and did not object to unanimous consent, if I remember correctly.

I have no desire to deprive the Senate of its right to pass its judgment upon this question. This is the last chance these boys ever will have of having a wrong corrected. I know that the President would like to correct it; I know that the Secretary of War would like to correct it; the Senate itself has said it would like to correct that wrong; and the military committees of the House and the Senate desire to correct it.

I hope the Senator from Kansas will let the amendment remain in the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me? After the Senator from Virginia had submitted his amendment, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] rose and made remarks upon the subject. Then the Chair, in regular order, put the question on the amendment. There was no purpose or intention and, as a matter of fact, there was not any sort of practice that could at all deprive the Senator of his right in the matter. It came up regularly, and was discussed regularly. That was some time after the Senator's attention had been attracted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If it is in order and a proper request, I should like to have the stenographer turn back to the remarks of the Senator from Virginia when he was appealing to the Senator from Kansas stating that he would offer the amendment again when it came into the Senate, and asking him at that time to refrain from making the point of order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection. After the bill got in the Senate I offered it. I stated that I would offer it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Whatever the facts are, I should like to have the notes read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The stenographer's notes will be read.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say that it is well known to the Senator from Virginia, and the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Delaware know, that when a Senator goes to the desk of another and engages him in conversation he can not listen with courtesy to that Senator and keep track of the details at the Secretary's desk at the same time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to have the stenographer's notes read.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator from Virginia was addressing me at that time and the Senator from Delaware was appealing to me at the same time, it was not easy to listen to both. Now, this is not an unusual incident here; it frequently occurs.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. There is nothing mysterious or unusual about this. The Senator from Virginia knew that I had interposed an objection.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I should like to interrupt the Senator for a moment if he will permit me.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I want to say to the Senator from Kansas that I heard and saw exactly what was going on at the time. The Senator from Virginia offered his amendment, and it was not the Senator from Delaware, but the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] who was attracting the attention of the Senator from Kansas. It was the Senator from Kentucky, who has had nothing at all to do with this matter, and who was, I suppose, discussing some other question with the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DU PONT. I have already taken occasion twice to remind the Senator from Kansas that I did not attempt to engage in conversation with him until a subsequent time. It was the Senator from Kentucky, as the Senator from Alabama states.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut has requested that the stenographer should read his notes as to what actually occurred when the vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia was taken.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not know that I am controverting statements Senators make here. I know——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The point, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. BRISTOW. This may be very funny to those who think they have caught me in a trap and prevented me from interposing an objection and having the Rules of the Senate enforced. It is no joke. It is not a question of the merits of this case; it is a question of the rights of a Senator on this floor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to be perfectly courteous to the Senator. I made a request, which I supposed was proper, one that any Senator could make, for the purpose of refreshing my own recollection about what led up to this matter, to have the stenographer's notes read so that what transpired may appear. I think I am entitled to have that done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is entitled to that. The stenographer will read as requested.

The Reporter read as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas has submitted a point of order and the point of order is sustained. If there be no further amendments to be proposed to the bill as in Committee of the Whole, it will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask the attention of the Senator from Kansas. This matter was fully discussed in the Senate, and the Senate, after full discussion, passed it, the Senator from Kansas simply voting against it and recognizing, more or less, the justice of this claim.

* * * * * * *

I offer that amendment in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia reoffers the amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the Senator from Kansas will not object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment need not be read again unless it is desired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I should like to say that from first to last I have had a great deal to do with this case, and I have examined it in every detail, and so forth.

* * * * * * * *

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say that I did not know that the Senator from Virginia had offered this amendment. I thought it was another amendment. I did not know that he had renewed the amendment at all, and supposed that it was some other amendment relating to something else in the bill. I should have made the objection, the same as I did formerly, if I had known it. If the Senate desires to take advantage of the conditions and circumstances that surrounded me at that time, they have the power to do it, and I have nothing to say; but if this is to be the proceeding, then any Senator can go to the seat of another, engage him in conversation, and bills be passed without objection. This is surely enforcing the rule in a most extraordinary way.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama has referred to the circumstance that I was engaged in conversation with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], and also stated that I have no interest in the matter, which is true. A young man in my State to whom I had given the appointment at West Point was there at the time of this trouble and was involved in it, and I was earnestly appealing to the Senator from Kansas to withdraw the point of order; but the proceedings to which reference is now made, and of which complaint is made, took place after I ceased to have the conversation with the Senator from Kansas.

I want to say that I had not the slightest knowledge that such a motion would be made, and I did not know that the question was pending in the Senate, because I had been earnestly appealing to the Senator from Kansas to withdraw his objection.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if I had not offered the amendment when I did, the bill would have passed in a moment. Desirous of taking no advantages whatever of the Senator from Kansas, I called his attention to the fact—he was looking over this way and I did not know that he was listening to another Senator—that I was going to offer this amendment in the Senate against which he had made a point of order as in Committee of the Whole. I had to do it in one minute or the bill would have passed. I repeat, I addressed myself to him.

The question involved is simply a technical one. These boys are entitled to some rights. They are five young men who have been treated with injustice that the Secretary of War desires to correct; that the President would be glad to correct; that the committee of the Senate desires to correct; that the committee of the other House would like to correct, but on account of the conditions of its business can not correct. I think these five young men, who can never have another opportunity in this country unless some such action as this is taken, are entitled to have their rights presented to the Senate; and if the Senator from Kansas will not listen when he is addressed in connection with their rights, then I, for one, shall insist that the matter shall be disposed of according to the rules of the Senate.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] assumes a good deal in regard to this case. I have been advised that the Secretary of War does not think that injustice has been done these men; I have been advised that the President does not believe that an injustice has been done these men.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. DU PONT. I am in a position to contradict that point, so far as the President is concerned. The Secretary of War has written to that effect.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia speaks about this being the last chance. The bill to which the Senator alludes has been before Congress for a year.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me just one moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Kansas suggests that he is advised as to the attitude of the Secretary of War being different from that indicated by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. The letter of the Secretary of War is attached to the report. In it, after referring to the case, he says:

I came to the conclusion that the court in sentencing these cadets was probably influenced by the mistaken construction that under article 132 of the Regulations of the Military Academy, under which these cadets were tried, a penalty of dismissal was mandatory instead of discretionary with the court.

Then he proceeds to say that after conference with the President he gives his assent to the resolution. That is his statement which, as I have said, is attached to this report.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, of course I do not care to go into a discussion of the merits of the case. About a year ago, as I remember, when it was discussed, I looked into it, though I have not followed it very carefully since; but the Senator from Virginia is appealing in behalf of this case because he says it is the last chance. The bill passed the Senate; it went to the other House; it has been there for months; and now the Senator holds that, because the other House has not passed this bill, it is a gross injustice because the Senate refuses to violate its rules and put it on an appropriation bill. The responsibility for the failure of that legislation, if it fails, is with the House of Representatives.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. DU PONT. My information is that the bill has been held up in the House of Representatives by a single individual, who is able to do so under the antiquated rules which obtain there. That is the reason the legislation has not been passed. It is not the action of the House of Representatives, but it is the action of a single individual, a single Member of that body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would caution Senators as to the rule regarding allusions to the other House.

Mr. DU PONT. I do not wish to make any disrespectful allusion. The only commentary I made upon their rules was that they were antiquated; I will withdraw the word; but the fact is that a single individual, under the rules of that House, can hold up the consideration of any measure if it is his disposition to do so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. How does that differ from the situation in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels it incumbent upon him to make a further observation as to the procedure.

When the bill referred to was before the Senate the present occupant of the chair spoke briefly against it and voted against it. The present occupant of the chair has not changed his mind in regard to the bill. For that reason he gave the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] a rather unusual opportunity to repeat his objection, having with great deliberation put the motions that were put, and which culminated in the agreement to the amendment.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to state further that because of my attention being diverted by different Senators who came to my desk and were talking to me about the case, I did not hear the statement of the Chair and I did not know that the amendment had been offered. I supposed that the amendment under consideration was a different amendment from the one offered as in Committee of the Whole. I do not think that any blame can be attached to me, for I do not think that my conduct in this case has been different from that of any other Senator upon the floor. When a Senator comes to my desk I try to listen to him with attention and courtesy. I did so in this case, and if an advantage is to be taken of a Senator in this way, I want to enter my protest. It is unusual; it is not customary. Nobody would resent it more violently than would the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] if the conditions had been changed; and I for one will say that I would not take advantage of the rules of the Senate if he were in my position and I were in his.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. PAYNTER. I want to make one statement which I omitted to make when I was on the floor a moment ago, in view of the fact that the attention of the Senator from Kansas was diverted from the consideration of this question, because I know it was by reason, in part, of my conversation with him. The statement I wish to make, however, is that neither the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON], or the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] or any other Member of this body knew that I was going to discuss the question with the Senator from Kansas or to appeal to him to withdraw his point of order. The only Senator who could have known it, other than the Senator from Kansas, was the Senator from Delaware, when he approached the Senator from Kansas and made the same kind of an appeal as did I. After that was done the Senator from Delaware approached his seat, and as I left the Senator from Kansas the Senator from Delaware had commenced his address on the merits of the proposition. So the motion which was made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] in the Senate was after the conclusion of the address which the Senator from Delaware made and was after I had left the Senator's desk. I make that statement particularly so that the Senator from Kansas will feel assured that no one was aware of the purpose of my visit to them, except himself, myself, and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say that I do not attribute to the Senator from Kentucky any unworthy motive at all in coming to my desk and talking to me; I never thought of such a thing. I know that he would not do that with the purpose of attracting or diverting my attention.

Mr. PAYNTER. I did not suppose the Senator had; but in view of the fact that my name was mentioned in connection with it, I felt it due me and the Senate to make this statement.

Mr. SWANSON. I simply want to say that, so far as I am concerned, I have as high respect for the rights of Senators, properly exercised, as has any Senator in this body. I would not under the circumstances have made this motion without an effort to notify the Senator from Kansas, and I addressed my remarks to him; but after this bill has passed, after it has been submitted, is the business of the Senate to be delayed because when business is proceeding in the ordinary course and publicly and openly a Senator from Kansas was so courteous as to be diverted to other matters? This matter was urgent; this matter was before the Senate; I was entitled to his attention, and if I had not gotten his attention and made this motion, in one minute this bill would have passed without an opportunity of doing justice to these boys. Consequently, in justice to them and in justice to my rights as a Senator, and in view of the fact that I was addressing my remarks to him, although it appears he was not giving them attention, I do not feel that I should ask to have this action set aside because of a mere technical objection and not one to the merits of the measure itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time?

Mr. BRISTOW. I move that the vote by which the amendment was adopted be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment in question was agreed to. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I rise to a point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to ask the Senator from Kansas if he voted for the amendment on the ground that a motion to reconsider, as I recall, must be made by a Senator who had voted in the affirmative? I will, however, withdraw that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, on which he demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I inquire if the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. PAYNTER. I have a general pair with that Senator and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRADLEY. I refrain from voting, being paired with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], who is unavoidably absent.

Mr. DU PONT. I inquire whether the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. DU PONT (after having voted in the negative). Such being the case, as I have a general pair with the Senator from Texas, I shall have to withdraw my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am satisfied that if the Senator from Texas was present he would vote the same way as would the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. DU PONT. Under that assurance, I will let my vote stand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. GALLINGER) (after having voted in the affirmative). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], and will therefore withhold his vote.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Borah	Cullom	La Follette	Stephenson
Bourne	Cummins	Lippitt	Townsend
Brandegee	Curtis	Lodge	Warren
Bristow	Dillingham	Page	Webb
Burnham	Dixon	Penrose	Wetmore
Burton	Gamble	Perkins	Works
Clapp	Gore	Poindexter
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Smith, Mich.
Crawford	Kenyon	Smoot

NAYS—33.

Ashurst	Gardner	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Bacon	Hitchcock	Owen	Stone
Bankhead	Johnston, Ala.	Pittman	Swanson
Bryan	Kavanaugh	Pomerene	Thornton
Catron	Lea	Richardson	Tillman
Chamberlain	McCumber	Sheppard	Williams
du Pont	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Foster	Newlands	Smith, Md.

NOT VOTING—29.

Bradley	Fall	Myers	Shively
Brady	Gallinger	Nelson	Simmons
Briggs	Gronna	O'Gorman	Sutherland
Brown	Guggenheim	Overman	Thomas
Chilton	Jackson	Paynter	Watson
Clarke, Ark.	Johnson, Me.	Percy
Crane	Kern	Reed
Culberson	McLean	Root

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to call up the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which was presented some time ago, read to the Senate, printed in the RECORD, and also as a document; but there was some objection then made to it and it went over. I now move that the report be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 26680) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand this conference report, so far as the subject matter in which I am interested is concerned, provides an appropriation for certain assay offices until January 1, 1914.

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. And that there is no provision in the bill affirmatively abandoning these assay offices?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BORAH. I take it, Mr. President, that the fact that the appropriation extends only to January 1, 1914, is to some extent a notice that the hour of execution is not far away?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is correct as to the intention of those who wish to abandon the offices.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in view of that I want to say a few words in regard to these assay offices scattered throughout the country, particularly the West. I think there is a misunderstanding as to their usefulness, and also a misunderstanding as to their expense. First, as to the expense of these assay offices, they practically pay their own cost or the amount necessary to maintain them. So far as the office which is located in Boise City is concerned, and so far as I am concerned as a citizen of that particular city, I would rather have a public park in its place than to have the assay office, speaking purely as a resident of the city. But it nevertheless is of great value to a large class of people who are engaged in developing the mining industry of that great intermountain region, which mining industry has not yet been developed, as so many people seem to assume. For instance, the State of Idaho has produced as vital money of the country, since it became a Territory and a State, $300,000,000, and yet it is confidently asserted by those who have familiarized themselves with the capacity or resourcefulness of that country that we have only begun to develop our mining resources. Anything which tends to accentuate the development of that industry or to give encouragement to men to explore the mining regions with a view to finding more of the vital money of the country seems to me a thing which we ought not to disregard, especially when these assay offices take care of themselves.

There is one thing about these assay offices which is of special moment, and that is that they are particularly beneficial to the small mine owner or the prospector, as you might say. Out of the 547 mines depositing in the Boise assay office during the last year 490 of them deposited less than a thousand dollars, which speaks for itself and shows that the office is especially beneficial to the man who is not prepared to ship his ore to a distant point and pay the freight and expenses and await the return.

At the risk of detaining the Senate in what I consider a matter of some importance, I am going to read a statement from the man in charge of the Helena (Mont.) office:

> These offices are so vital to the mining industry in the West that it is nothing short of a crime to abolish them.
>
> The great injury would come to the small miners, who bring their gold to these offices and within a short time receive payment for its value. They depend upon an immediate return from each clean-up to meet their pay rolls and purchase needed supplies. To force them to send their gold a long distance, with consequent high carrying charges, would mean that a number of small properties which are now conducted under decent profit would be compelled to shut down, throwing a large number of men out of employment, making a general stagnation in various small camps.
> The mining development of this section of the country served by these offices is now entering upon a revival, which means a great deal to the country if it is properly fostered and aided instead of being hampered by attacks of this nature.
> The uses of these offices to the miner are best shown by the records. Take the assay office in this city, which has been in existence since 1874. Since that time it has smelted and paid over $80,000,000 in gold bullion. The cost of the Government for handling this immense sum has been a little less than three-fourths of 1 per cent, or at the rate of about $15,000 a year.

We have not very many governmental institutions that disclose such a record.

> The convenience of the local office has been of untold benefit. Eleven counties in the State of Montana sent to the Helena office last month gold bullion of the amount of $136,695.55. A very large percentage of the producers of this gold bullion is composed of small miners who bring to the office anywhere from 1 ounce to a thousand dollars, and they consequently would suffer the most if the office was abolished. When these small savings are melted and the value determined, the owner is at once given the cash for his gold. The cost for this service is about $2. If he were obliged to resort to a private refinery, the expense would be prohibitive.
> This is a matter of vital importance to the entire West, not only to the people engaged in the industry but to the wholesale, mercantile, and manufacturing industries furnishing supplies and machinery.
> If the men who are attempting to abolish these offices on the ground of economy would come here and make an honest investigation, they would not only cease this campaign but would inaugurate one for the enlargement and support of these assay offices.

I here call attention to a part of the report of the State mine inspector of Idaho.

> Idaho's output of the vital money metal of the world has already aggregated $300,000,000, largely from surface placer deposits; and while our present output is not so large as formerly, it has shown a gradual increase for several years past, and is susceptible of a rapid advancement in the future from our extensive and partly demonstrated primary resources of gold ore.
>
> As an example, we have a recently discovered ore deposit tributary to Boise, on which a report was made by one of the most conservative and capable authorities in the country, in which an investment of $2,500,000, largely for mill construction and development, was recommended, that proposed a milling capacity of 3,000 tons daily of ore that shows an average of $4.40 per ton, and on which tests indicate a recovery of $4 per ton, with a tonnage resource that promises to last for years at this rate of production.
>
> This deal has not yet been consummated, but is likely to be perfected in the near future. This is only one of a dozen similar prospects of new gold supply which this State contains.
>
> Millions of dollars have been invested in Alaskan and other ore deposits recently that average only $2 per ton by successful engineers and mining capitalists. The future gold supply of the world must come from ore of this class, and Idaho is in line to become one of the chief sources of supply; and its Federal assay office will stimulate this line of development, as it saves the risk of long bullion shipments and gives immediate and satisfactory results by the Federal indorsement of its business, which are conclusive, and amount in effect to stamping the coin eagle on the gold, and is highly appreciated by the producer, besides keeping him in closer touch with and respect for the Central Government.
> A great deal of public money is annually spent in pure display and patriotic purpose by all governments, and it seems to me that it would be an unwise policy to eliminate such branches of Federal authority as these in the gold-producing regions of the Nation, as they are a good deal more than self-sustaining if the seigniorage on the silver bullion they separte from the gold is taken into consideration, and their specific purpose in assisting in the discovery and disposition of new gold and the consequent expansion of the basic credit of the Nation is well worth the paltry cost of their maintenance without taking into account their seigniorage profits.

But I want to put into the RECORD now this notice:

These assay offices are practically self-sustaining. They are of immense benefit to the people who are developing the great mountain regions of the Northwest; but they are peculiarly beneficial to a class of people who need them because of their limited means. I want further to put into the RECORD the statement that, believing that the maintenance of these assay offices is necessary to the interests of the West, I do not propose to consent, now or later, to their abandonment.

They are particularly beneficial to the man whom we know in the West as the prospector.

The prospector, Mr. President, is one of the unique, one of the most exceptional and most worthy of all those remarkable characters who have exploited and led the way for the development of the West. The West owes him a debt of gratitude which the West can never pay. Always poor, often homeless, self-reliant, hopeful, generous, and brave, he has been the solitary explorer of desert and mountain fastness; the man who has unlocked from its imprisoned silence the countless millions of what is now the world's wealth. He penetrates the most remote and inaccessible regions, defies hunger and storms alike, sleeps upon the mountain side or in improvised cabins, restlessly wanders and searches through weeks and months and years for nature's hidden and hoarded treasures. Oftentimes his search ends in poverty and distress and failure, sometimes in success. Without the prospector—this poor, isolated solitary wanderer—the great mining centers of the West would not exist. Without his uneasy, never-tiring efforts, millions of dollars now on their way to minister to the happiness and comfort of the race would never have been poured into the channels of business and commerce.

These assay offices scattered about near the mining camps are distinctly to his benefit and advantage. They encourage him to go forth and they enable him without great trouble and expense to get the benefit of his too often meager returns. Let us strike out some other expense, some extravagance which ministers to a fad or a fancy and leave these inducements for these hardy explorers.

The prospector, as everyone in the West knows, is being very rapidly deprived of his occupation, by reason of the fact that he is practically prohibited from going into a large portion of the country which he has heretofore traversed; and now the last incentive for his activity and for his energy is being removed by making it prohibitive upon his part to ship his ore and to get any return to justify his generally impecunious condition.

AMENDMENT TO FOOD AND DRUGS ACT.

Mr. OLIVER submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R.

22526) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out, and the insertions made by said amendment, insert the following: "That reasonable variations shall be permitted, and tolerances and also exemptions as to small packages shall be established by rules and regulations made in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

(Matter stricken out printed in brackets.)

"An act (H. R. 22526) to amend section 8 of an act entitled 'An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1906.

"Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of an act entitled 'An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words 'Third. If in package form, and the contents are stated in terms of weight or measure, they are not plainly and correctly stated on the outside of the package,' and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"'Third. If in package form, the quantity of the contents be not plainly and conspicuously marked on the outside of the package in terms of weight, measure, or numerical count: Provided, however, That reasonable variations shall be permitted, and tolerances and also exemptions as to small packages shall be established by rules and regulations made in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act. (1) [That reasonable variations shall be permitted, and tolerances shall be established by rules and regulations made in accordance with the provisions of this act.] That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to establish rules and regulations permitting reasonable variations where in his judgment exactness is impracticable, and shall keep a record thereof: Provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to articles in packages or containers when the retail price of such article is 6 cents or less.'

"SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage: Provided, however, That no penalty of fine, imprisonment, or confiscation shall be enforced for any violation of its provisions as to domestic products prepared or foreign products imported prior to (2) [twelve] eighteen months after its passage."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I regret very much that I am unable to give my approval to this conference report. It is with great reluctance that I say anything on the subject, but I do feel that it would be very much better to leave the subject where it is than to agree to this report. I want very briefly to present my reasons for this statement.

I recognize, as a matter of practical experience, that it is impossible to have exact weights and exact measures in package goods. On the other hand, we know full well that short weights and short measures in package goods are entirely too prevalent. It was the purpose of the House and of the Senate to devise some methods which would at the same time protect the consuming public and be fair and just to the manufacturer.

Under this bill it seems to me we are making no provision whatsoever which is going to protect the public, but we are giving to the manufacturers the whip hand and delegating the entire subject to the board provided for in the pure-food act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Will the Senator from Ohio permit the Chair to ask a question of the Senator from Wyoming? The Senator from Wyoming had a conference report before the Senate, being considered, when the Senator from Pennsylvania offered another conference report. The Chair thought it was simply a perfunctory matter and would be agreed to. The Chair will have to assume that the Senator from Wyoming is yielding for this purpose.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I was not requested to yield, but did yield to the report presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I suggest that if the report is to be in any manner antagonized or delayed it should go into print and await the disposition of the one already before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands the situation, the Senator from Wyoming yielded for the presentation of a conference report?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But not for its present consideration.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I was not aware of the parliamentary status, and I appreciate the fact that under the circumstances the Senator from Wyoming has the right of way.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to say that I did not appreciate the parliamentary situation, or I should not have interposed my report ahead of the disposition of the one under consideration.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has been seeking recognition from the Chair to speak to the conference report that was made some time ago, and is now in issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the conference report, offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], will be received and will lie upon the table until called up by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to give notice that I will call it up immediately after action upon the conference report now pending.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 26680) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

Mr. NEWLANDS obtained the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I presume the Senator from Nevada and I are about to ask questions of the same import. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what has been the fate of the mint and the assay office in San Francisco?

Mr. WARREN. The mint and assay office at San Francisco is provided for, for a full year, as usual.

Mr. ASHURST. I view with considerable alarm——

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask, is there any provision that at the end of the year the operations of that office shall cease?

Mr. WARREN. Not at all. The mint at San Francisco, the one in Denver, and the one in Philadelphia are all provided for in the regular annual way.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to supplement the remarks of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] regarding the closing of certain assay offices in the mining regions; and I wish to address my remarks particularly to the dropping of the so-called Carson Mint, which really for years has been reduced to an assay office.

If I may have the attention of the Senator from Wyoming, I should like to ask him the reason for the difference between the treatment of the Carson Mint or assay office and that accorded to the other assay offices.

I observe, for instance, that the assay office at Boise City, Idaho, is extended in its operations or is provided for, so far as its operations are concerned, until January of next year, whilst the Carson City assay office is to close at the end of the fiscal year in July next.

Mr. WARREN. That difference arises, first—or, at least, that was the claim made by those we had to meet in the conference—from the fact that the business as a mint has been, or was some time since, transferred to these larger mints, so that now it is nil, or nearly so——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I refer only to its operations as an assay office.

Mr. WARREN. I am getting to that—and that as an assay office the amount of business done is very small; that we have already cut out the one at St. Louis and others apparently of equal importance. If the Senator wants to know the reason why I cut it out—if he wishes to put it that way—I will say that I saved everything I could after several meetings had been held and some 30 days consumed. It was not with my mental consent, but only as a forced consent, to close the matter, that I agreed either to that going out, or to the others being cut down on the 1st of January.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But I wish to get at the special reason for allowing the operations of these small assay offices in the mining regions to continue until January 1 of next year, while the operations of the Carson Mint or assay office are cut short in July next.

Mr. WARREN. Because they were so much smaller than the others, and because that at Carson was a mint, and was closed because it was the last one of the small mints. That is the reason given by those we met in conference.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have not the statistics before me, but I very much question the accuracy of the statement as to the business of the Carson Mint being less than that of some of these whose operations were continued until January next. To my mind it makes no difference as to whether its operations were less or not. It was entitled to the same treatment as the other assay offices in the West whose operations it is the purpose of the Appropriations Committee to bring to an end. The same considerations which led them to extend the life of these other assay offices until January next ought to have induced them to continue the life of the Carson City assay office for the same period.

It is a misnomer to call this a mint. During the flush times of the Comstock mine it was a mint of very large operations, but long since its minting operations were discontinued, and it has been running simply as an assay office. As an assay office it ought to stand upon the same basis as all the neighboring assay offices in the West. It is in the center of a very large and expanding mining region. Nevada's mineral product is increasing every year. I believe in the precious metals it stands second now among the States of the Union. That assay office is located at a point where it presents great conveniences to the prospector and to the small mining operator.

The action regarding these assay offices has not been taken by the committee charged with jurisdiction upon this subject, the Committee on Mines and Mining; but it has been taken charge of by the Appropriations Committee. That committee proposes absolutely to nullify a law that is now on the statute books.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will differentiate, and state what Appropriations Committee does that.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Appropriations Committee of the House.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I intended, later on, to say that the Senate had been coerced by the House and compelled to violate existing law. Congress has made its solemn declaration in favor of an assay office at Carson City, just as it has at these other places, by a law passed by both bodies, and approved by the President. That law still remains upon the statute books, unrepealed and unamended. Without action by the appropriate committee, the Appropriations Committee of the House, assuming a jurisdiction that did not belong to it, regardful only of economy and not of wise economics, has practically nullified that law, has coerced the conferees of the Senate, and, if this report is adopted, will have coerced the Senate itself into subjection to its will.

Mr. President, it seems to me there must come a time when the usurpation of jurisdiction by the various Appropriations Committees in matters of general legislation shall cease, and this is a glaring instance of the injustice of their action.

For some time the Appropriations Committee of the House has been bent upon economy—economy in small matters; economy striking at small expenditures; economy in the small appropriations under the control of the general Appropriations Committee of each House. For, strange to say, whilst we have a general Appropriations Committee in each House, that Appropriations Committee has jurisdiction over only about one-fifth of the total expenditures of the Government. Thus, being unable to reach out for the major energies and the major operations of the Government, they have sought to carry out the party instructions regarding economy through a limitation of expenditures in a range covering only one-fifth of the total expenditures of the Government; and they have sought to do that by absolutely nullifying laws authorizing these expenditures—an act of gross usurpation of jurisdiction.

I can understand why there may be times when, upon appropriation bills, general legislation may be desirable, when that legislation meets the clear views of both Houses, and is simply a quick and convenient method of recording their will. But whenever one House is opposed to the action desired, the comity which controls with reference to such general legislation is at an end. Neither House has the right, against the will of the other, to insist upon such general legislation. But this is not general legislation. It is nullification of law.

Mr. WARREN. No, Mr. President; it is perhaps worse than that. It is a failure to appropriate for what the law calls for.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is true; and hence it is a nullification of law—an absolute refusal by a committee of one House to obey the law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Nevada is also aware of the fact, I presume, that the Secretary of the Treasury has been for a long time in favor of this movement?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. And that it comes from a policy which seemed to have originated with the executive department?

Mr. NEWLANDS. What has the Secretary of the Treasury to do with mines and mining? The jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury pertains to the fiscal affairs of the Government. In the pursuit of economy he proposes to strike at a great industry that is under the fostering care of the Government. Economy, as I said before, is one thing; economics is another. The Secretary of the Treasury has jurisdiction, possibly, in matters relating to economy. But the wise pursuit of economics means the development of the resources of the country. Economy means saving; economics means production or development of the resources of a country.

How is it with the great mining industry of this country? It stands upon a par with that of agriculture. And yet what do we do for agriculture? We are to-day expending, I believe, about $15,000,000 annually, perhaps more, in the study of all questions relating to agriculture and to the increase of production. We are entering even into the domain of education in order to promote agriculture. Is not mining an industry of equal importance? Does it not employ almost as many men?

Mr. President, an assay office is an essential incident to mining. It is of the highest importance that these Government officials should be established everywhere throughout the mining region, within convenient reach. The prospector and the small mine owner, who have not the means to employ, as have the large establishments, a great corps of scientific men, have a right to claim that a Government agency should be established which can give them a standard of value, and can tell them the truth with reference to the value of the ores submitted to their inspection. They are just as necessary to the mining industry as the various experiment stations and other instrumentalities established under the Agriculture Department for the promotion of agriculture. Yet what would be said if the Secretary of the Treasury, invading the jurisdiction of the Agriculture Department, as to-day he invades the jurisdiction of the Interior Department, should present to the Appropriations Committee of the House a proposal that by their action alone, nullifying the existing acts of Congress, salaries should be denied to all the experiment stations in the country?

Mr. President, I do not believe the total expenditures involved in all these small assay offices, scattered throughout the mining region, exceeds $50,000 annually. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming whether or not I am correct.

Mr. WARREN. I have not the figures before me, but the Senator is approximately correct. The amount may be as much as $65,000. Let me say to the Senator, if he will yield for a moment——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will do this: The Senator is one of our old and most valued Members and belongs to a party which very soon will have control of both Houses of Congress. I hope he will secure in the Cabinet of the next Executive men who understand western ways and the western country and who will have some compassion, if I may put it that way, or some good horse sense, to guide them in treating these western matters.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I hope we shall have men who will realize that there is a West as well as an East.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator says the expense will amount to about $50,000. It does not amount to that when you take into consideration the receipts from the assay offices. It will not be much more than one-half that amount. The Secretary of the Treasury recommended in his 1912 report the abolishment of all assay offices, and it was stated on the floor of the House by a Member that they would have been abolished if a combination of the Representatives of Western States had not been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair admonishes the Senator that the rule does not permit a Senator to refer to what is done in the other House.

Mr. SMOOT. I have the RECORD here, and I am quoting nearly the exact language. It is a matter of history. I am not referring to the action of any Member of the House. I am stating what was really said and what can be found in the RECORD. When it came to the House this year some of the smaller offices were eliminated from the bill.

Mr. BORAH. In view of the suggestion made by the Senator from Wyoming to the Senator from Nevada that the incoming administration would take care of this situation, perhaps it would be better that the bill should go over, so as to give them a better chance to get at it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Wyoming is discreetly silent upon that subject.

Mr. WARREN. I do not believe that we ought to take out the neglect or the sins of omission or commission of one or two officials on a great many thousands of deserving employees. There would be caused not only trouble, but perhaps suffering. Whenever there is delay in the passage of an appropriation bill there are losses which occur, as they did last year when we had to extend the appropriations of the preceding year by joint resolution, covering nearly two months, and probably lost anywhere from $150,000 to $200,000 by that delay.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, of course we recognize the responsibility that rests on the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and his unwillingness to have the bill fail simply because an injustice is done in a single particular; but those considerations do not address themselves to the Senate at large, and there is no reason why this bill should fail. Unfortunately, no motion can be presented approving the entire action of the conferees except with reference to this matter; and in order to reach this matter we will have to disagree to the report, and the bill will then go back to conference. The debate will show the cause of the disagreement, and then the conferees can address themselves to this single question and can remedy the injustice done, either by striking out all of the provisions limiting the appropriations for these offices or by placing them all upon the same plane, making the same appropriations for the Carson assay office and for the same period that they have made for the other assay offices, whose operations are extended until January of next year, while the operations of the Carson assay office will be ended in July next, thus giving the former the opportunity with the new Congress, Congress meeting in December next, to secure action which would relieve the other assay offices without reducing any of them meanwhile to extinction, as the action of this conference report does do with reference to the Carson assay office.

So I urge upon the Senate to prevent this glaring injustice, this discrimination as between the assay offices of the West, by disagreeing to this report; and if so be we will give the conferees an opportunity to accomplish more regarding this particular matter.

So far as I am concerned, I think the Senate should take decisive action and absolutely insist upon the appropriation bill following the law and not violating the law, and put an end to this system of three or four men upon the Appropriations Committee of the House practically coercing the action of Congress and compelling Congress itself to be a party in the violation of existing law.

I trust, Mr. President, that the Senate will vote against the motion offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from Wyoming desires to address the Senate——

Mr. WARREN. I had only this to say, that having done the very best that can be done for the Senate as one of the managers I hope the Senate will approve of the report. I think there is no doubt but that we could get an agreement to cut out more of the bill by going back; but I do not believe the Senator from Nevada would ask us to do that, and I myself do not like to cut out something that I believe is deserving because I can not get something else that is also deserving, but which we were unable to retain.

I hope the report may be agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand the question is simply a motion to accept the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is right.

Mr. BORAH. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the Senator asks for the yeas and nays I wish he would allow me just a moment.

Mr. BORAH. Very well; I will withhold the request.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dillingham	Lodge	Shively
Borah	du Pont	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
Bradley	Foster	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Gallinger	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Briggs	Gardner	Oliver	Smoot
Bristow	Gore	Overman	Stephenson
Burton	Gronna	Page	Thomas
Clark, Wyo.	Guggenheim	Percy	Thornton
Crane	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Townsend
Crawford	Jones	Pomerene	Warren
Cullom	Kenyon	Richardson	Webb
Cummins	Lea	Root	Williams
Curtis	Lippitt	Sheppard	Works

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the roll 52 Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Idaho demands the yeas and nays on agreeing to the conference report.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not intend to occupy more than a few minutes. The plea that is made for the abolishment of certain assay offices is on the ground of economy. A year ago the Secretary of the Treasury asked that not only the assay offices which are to be abolished by this conference report, but that the assay office at Seattle and the mint at San Francisco should be discontinued as well upon the same plea of economy. But to-day we find that his recommendation is different, and he now wishes that the mint at San Francisco be maintained and that the assay office at Seattle be continued. The excuse given for retaining the assay office at Seattle is on account of the gold production in Alaska.

When we stop to think, in the United States to-day there is produced nearly $100,000,000 of gold and silver, most of the same produced in the States in which are located the assay offices recommended to be discontinued. The Senate provided an appropriation of $64,000 for the maintenance of the assay offices that will be abolished if this conference report is adopted. The receipts from these same assay offices are about one-half the amount appropriated. I do not believe the Senate desires the intermountain States to be deprived of an assay office for the mere pittance of $30,000.

That is all that there is involved in this question, and I denounce it as false economy. Their abolishment is not going to be a burden upon the man who owns a rich, well-developed mine. It will be a burden upon the small miner and poor prospector, the man who has no capital, the pioneer in the development of our precious-metal mining.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question. If the assay offices located in the mining regions should be abolished, where would the prospector have his ore assayed so as to know its value or whether it was workable?

Mr. SMOOT. He could perhaps find an assay office somewhere within 100 miles or 200 miles of the place where he is prospecting.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Assay offices, then, are owned by private corporations or individuals. Can the Senator state what would be the difference in cost between an assay by a private corporation and the assay work by the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. The question of assaying ore is a small part of the difficulty. It is the small producer of ore who will suffer. At present he can send his gold and silver to the assay office and get his money at once, and is not compelled to send it to New York or San Francisco and wait for the return. This he is not able to do. He has to pay his employees and live upon what he receives from the metals produced, and he must get his returns as quickly as possible.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Are there any charges made by the Government on individuals for the assay?

Mr. SMOOT. There are certain charges for assay, but the great advantage comes principally from the fact that the gold produced by the small miner can be settled and paid for at these assay offices, instead of his being compelled to send it to San Francisco or New York, if the conference report is adopted; or he would have to sell it to private parties at a loss, who in turn would send it to New York and make his commission.

All the expense involved in this question, as I said, is not more than $30,000. This amount, if expended in maintaining the assay offices, will protect the small producer of gold and silver against the speculator who would buy it from him and then send it to some distant assay office.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that this is of so much importance to the great mining industry of the intermountain country, an industry putting millions and hundreds of millions of dollars of gold and silver into circulation, the very life blood of commerce, that the expenditure of a few thousand dollars should not be considered. It will have the effect of retarding the growth of that industry. I do not believe that the Congress of the United States fully comprehends it or they would not hesitate to appropriate the paltry sum of $30,000 to develop and encourage this great industry.

As the Senator from Nevada says, we are appropriating from fifteen to sixteen million dollars toward the education of the people along agricultural lines. I would not care if it was twice the amount. This is for a similar purpose, for the development of the great mining industry that has added so much to the wealth of this country.

I certainly trust the Senate will send this conference report back and see if the conferees on the part of the House will not recede from the disagreement of the House to this amendment, so that we shall have these offices retained.

[Mr. ASHURST addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, as a member of the conference committee I think perhaps I ought to say that this was one of the great questions that divided the conferees two years ago. The conferees on the part of the Senate held out until finally it was agreed to let the assay offices remain one more year. This year we had the fight again and we held out for weeks and weeks. There is one of these assay offices, I will say to the Senator, in my own State, and of course I was personally interested; but we could get no agreement at all unless we made the compromise, allowing the assay offices to remain until the 1st day of January, and then the next Congress can take such action as it may please. The Senate can send the bill back to the conferees if it desires to do so, but we have been notified that the House will never agree, and the bill will probably be lost. I do not know what the House will do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As this seems to be a matter of very great importance—and I think myself it is—I should like for the Senator from North Carolina, who is a member of the conference committee, to explain upon what ground the conferees on the part of the House seemed to oppose the retention of these assay offices. It seems that the arguments that have been made in favor of them are almost unanswerable, and I should like to hear, if there is any Senator who can give the information to the Senate, on what ground the House desires to abolish the assay offices.

Mr. OVERMAN. Their abolition is recommended by the Superintendent of the Mint and by the Secretary of the Treasury, and I believe——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. On what ground did the Secretary of the Treasury base his recommendation?

Mr. OVERMAN. On the ground that the offices do not pay; that they are expensive, and that there is no need for them.

Mr. BORAH. That may be the reason assigned by the Secretary of the Treasury, but——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It does not make any difference what reason may be assigned; I want to know from those who are on the ground whether the reasons that have been given are true.

Mr. BORAH. No; they are not true. The facts can be had, and anyone who wishes to investigate will find that the statements are not true. The Secretary is simply in error; that is what I mean to say.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that the conferees on the part of the Senate stood out as long as possible to sustain the action of the Senate, as it was their duty to do, but finally yielded after a long struggle on this matter.

Mr. BORAH. No one is criticizing the Senate conferees.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the Senator is not; but I am giving him the position of this bill as it now stands. We were notified that the House of Representatives will never agree. If it is desired to send the report back, I am willing to have it sent back. As I have said, I am interested because one of these assay offices is almost right at my door.

Mr. BORAH. There is no reason why the Senate should, out of courtesy, yield when the action which has been taken is aimed at the destruction of a great industry.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was not out of courtesy that we yielded, but it was because we are compelled to have this great appropriation bill passed.

Mr. BORAH. We are not compelled to have a bill any more than the House of Representatives is compelled to have a bill, and inasmuch as the provision so seriously affects what all concede to be a great industry, there is no reason why we should yield. Let those who are in error do the yielding.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me suggest to the Senator from Idaho that it not only involves a great injury to that industry, but it also involves the sacrifice of a principle, for we have here a clear case where the Appropriations Committee of the other House propose to force upon the Senate, on a general appropriation bill, a nullification of existing law now authorizing these assay offices and providing for their operation without accomplishing in the usual way the repeal of that law. After this action is taken, the law authorizing the operation of these assay offices and fixing the salaries of the officials will still remain on the statute books. Thus, by this action, initiated in the House of Representatives and forced upon the Senate, the Senate being the victim of coercion, we are practically called upon to aid the House and the Secretary of the Treasury in nullifying existing law.

There is another thing I wish to say. This action does not involve in any degree any of the mints. It is true that the Carson City assay office is called a mint. That arises from the fact that it was at one time a great mint, but its operations have been gradually diminished until now it is simply an assay office, for the convenience of prospectors and small miners of that great region. So far as the minting operations are concerned, they are now concentrated at San Francisco, Denver, and Philadelphia. Whilst for a long time some of us from the West insisted that the operation of minting be not contracted to so small an area, yet that contention has been abandoned, and we are now simply endeavoring to save these assay offices, which are as much a convenience to the great mining industries of that region as are the agricultural experiment stations to the farmers of the country.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. Can the Senator give us an estimate as to the additional expense which would be incurred by the miners of that section if these assay offices were discontinued?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; I can not. They would be subjected to the charges of private assayers, and it has been suggested that they would be compelled to resort to the great smelting organizations in that region and be compelled to submit to what the smelting organizations said their ores contained, for, recollect, we are making a scientific inquiry here, through competent men, as to the value of the ores of small operators. The big men have, of course, scientific men to attend to all such matters, but the Government is now pursuing various activities of this kind in various ways, having to-day a Bureau of Standards right here in Washington devoted to the question of establishing standards, and the Government itself is looked upon——

Mr. OVERMAN. With the exception——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will address the Chair and get permission to interrupt. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to state that the assay offices are not abolished.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is what I say; they are not abolished, but their operations are abolished.

Mr. OVERMAN. The appropriation is made for them until the 1st of next January. That was a compromise. Of course, the conferees wanted to except the Carson assay office.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me say to the Senator that a glaring injustice was done to the Carson assay office, miscalled a mint, for its salaries were only continued until July next, and it will not be until next December that we will have another opportunity to act on the matter.

Mr. OVERMAN. A compromise had to be made, and the compromise was that we would provide appropriations to the 1st of July and the 1st of January and then let Congress take 1st of July and the 1st of January and then let Congress take are appropriated for just as they have always been except that we have only appropriated for them until July and to January next.

Mr. NEWLANDS. There is no appropriation whatever, if the Senator will permit me, made for the Carson assay office. The Carson assay office appropriation was made last year and runs only until July next, so that there is no appropriation in this bill whatever for that office; and as to the other assay offices, the appropriation is made for only one-half of the year, and not for another year, and that notwithstanding the fact that the law authorizing these assay offices and providing for their operation is still on the statute books and will remain upon the statute books after their officials are discharged.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KENYON. I thought the Senator had given up the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, I will yield the floor.

Mr. KENYON. I rise to offer a privileged motion under clause 6 of Rule VII. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the veto message of the President of the United States on Senate bill No. 4043, and in connection with that I call the attention of the Chair to clause 6 of Rule VII, on page 10.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, we are already considering a privileged question, which I hope will soon be determined.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Senator from Iowa whether he will not permit a vote now on the conference report? I imagine the discussion is ended, and the question is upon agreeing to that report.

Mr. KENYON. I will withhold the motion if there can be a vote without further debate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have no doubt there can be.

Mr. WARREN. The yeas and nays have already been ordered.

Mr. JONES. I want just a minute or two.

Mr. KENYON. If there is to be no debate, Mr. President, I will withhold the motion temporarily, but if debate is to ensue I will proceed.

Mr. JONES. I want a minute or two on this matter. I do not care to prevent the Senator from Iowa from proceeding, but I simply want to say that I desire to discuss this matter briefly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand, Mr. President, that the discussion——

Mr. KENYON. I insist upon my motion, if there is to be debate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand that discussion has ended and we are ready for a vote. When the conference report is disposed of, then, of course, the Senator from Iowa can proceed.

Mr. KENYON. I will be very glad to withhold the motion, if the Senate is ready to vote; but the Senator from Washington announces that he desires to discuss the matter, and hence we are not ready for a vote, and I will ask that my motion be put.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I supposed that the Senator from Washington desired to speak upon the question which the Senator from Iowa desires to bring up.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I will withhold my motion until the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I merely want a minute or two, and I will not delay the matter further. I desire to say that the assay office in my State is cared for in this bill, but I have not lost my interest in the other assay offices throughout that great section of the country, and I think the conference report should be disagreed to.

As has been said, these assay offices are very much to the miners and prospectors what the agricultural experiment stations are to the poor farmers, and the Senate should not adopt the proposition to abolish them. The subject has never been considered by the committees of the Senate or the House having jurisdiction over the matter; it has not been referred to any such committee, and there has been no bill on this question reported by any such committee. This simply comes here on an appropriation bill, and we can not escape our responsibility by saying that it has been suggested by the executive department. If we adopt the report, this action becomes our legislative act, and we are responsible for it. I hope the Senate will reject the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Iowa permit a vote to be taken on the conference report, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. The question is on agreeing to the conference report, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is; but the Senator from Colorado addressed the Chair. [A pause.] The question is on agreeing to the conference report, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In the absence of that Senator I withhold my vote. Otherwise I should vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 15, nays 55, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Brandegee	Curtis	McCumber	Warren
Burnham	du Pont	Overman	Wetmore
Burton	Gallinger	Tillman	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	Johnston, Ala.	Townsend

NAYS—55.

Ashurst	Dixon	Myers	Sheppard
Borah	Fall	Newlands	Shively
Bradley	Gardner	O'Gorman	Smith, Ariz.
Brady	Gronna	Oliver	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	Guggenheim	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Brown	Hitchcock	Page	Smoot
Bryan	Jones	Paynter	Stephenson
Catron	Kenyon	Percy	Sutherland
Chilton	Kern	Perkins	Swanson
Crawford	Lea	Pittman	Thomas
Culberson	Lodge	Poindexter	Thornton
Cullom	McLean	Pomerene	Webb
Cummins	Martin, Va.	Richardson	Works
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Root

NOT VOTING—25.

Bacon	Crane	Kavanaugh	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Fletcher	La Follette	Smith, Mich.
Bourne	Foster	Lippitt	Stone
Briggs	Gamble	Nelson	Watson
Chamberlain	Gore	Penrose
Clapp	Jackson	Reed
Clark, Wyo.	Johnson, Me.	Simmons

So the conference report was rejected.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and request a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. WETMORE, and Mr. OVERMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

INTERSTATE SHIPMENT OF LIQUORS—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which will be read:

The message is as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my signature, S. 4043.

The bill, including title and enacting clause, is as follows:

An act divesting intoxicating liquors of their interstate character in certain cases.

Be it enacted, etc., That the shipment or transportation, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind, from one State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to, but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, into any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to, but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country into any State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to, but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, which said spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor is intended by any person interested therein, to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package, or otherwise, in violation of any law of such State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to, but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, is hereby prohibited.

After giving this proposed enactment full consideration, I believe it to be a violation of the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution, in that it is in substance and effect a delegation by Congress to the States of the power of regulating interstate commerce in liquors which is vested exclusively in Congress.

The most recent expression of the Supreme Court on the general subject is found in the case of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. F. W. Cook Brewing Co. (223 U. S., 70). This was a bill in equity to enjoin the railroad company from refusing to accept the product of the brewing company at Evansville, Ind., where it was located, for transportation to local-option or so-called "dry communities" in Kentucky.

In delivering the judgment of the Supreme Court, affirming the action of the circuit court in awarding the injunction asked, Mr. Justice Lurton said:

By a long line of decisions, beginning even prior to Leisy v. Hardin (135 U. S., 100), it has been indisputably determined:

a. That beer and other intoxicating liquors are a recognized and legitimate subject of interstate commerce.

b. That it is not competent for any State to forbid any common carrier to transport such articles from a consignor in one State to a consignee in another.

c. That until such transportation is concluded by delivery to the consignee, such commodities do not become subject to State regulation, restraining their sale or disposition.

The Wilson Act, which subjects such liquors to State regulation although still in the original packages, does not apply before actual delivery to such consignee where the shipment is interstate. Some of the many later cases in which these matters have been so determined and the Wilson Act construed are: Rhodes v. Iowa (170 U. S., 412); Vance v. Vandercook Co. (170 U. S., 438); Heyman v. Southern Railway (203 U. S., 270); Adams Express Co. v. Kentucky (214 U. S., 218).

Valid as the Kentucky legislation undoubtedly was as a regulation in respect to intrastate shipments of such articles, it was most obviously never an effective enactment in so far as is undertook to regulate interstate shipments to dry points. Pending this very litigation, the Kentucky Court of Appeals, upon the authority of the line of cases above cited, reached the same conclusion, C. & N. O. Ry. v. Kentucky (126 Ky., 563).

The obligation of the railroad company to conform to the requirements of the Kentucky law, so far as that law prohibited intrastate shipments, is clear, and to this extent its circular notification was commendable. But the duty of this company, as an interstate common carrier for hire, to receive for transportation to consignees upon its line in Kentucky from consignors in other States any commodity which is an ordinary subject of interstate commerce, and such transportation could not be prohibited by any law of the State of such consignee, inasmuch as any such law would be an unlawful regulation of interstate commerce not authorized by the police power of the State.

The Wilson Act, referred to by Judge Lurton, provides as follows:

That all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein shall, upon arrival in such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory, enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise.

The Supreme Court, in Rhodes v. Iowa (170 U. S., 423), construed this language to mean that the legislative authority of the respective States should attach to intoxicating liquors coming into the States by an interstate shipment, only after the consummation of the shipment, but before the sale of the merchandise. The court held that the right of the consignee to sell before delivery was a mere incident to the shipment, and that it was within the power of Congress to submit the incidental power to sell to the dominion of State authority.

The court declined to express an opinion as to the authority of Congress under its power to regulate commerce to delegate to the States the right to forbid the transportation of merchandise from one State to another. It must be admitted, therefore, that upon the exact point in question, to wit, the right of the Congress to delegate to States the power to forbid the shipment of intoxicating liquors from another State into its jurisdiction, the Supreme Court has declined to express an opinion, though it is difficult to read the language of the court in the case of Rhodes v. Iowa (170 U. S., 412); Vance v. Vandercook Co. (170 U. S., 438), and of Mr. Justice Catron in the License cases (5 Howard, 504, 599) quoted with approval by Mr. Justice Matthews in Bowman v. Railway Co. (125 U. S., 465, 489) without inferring that such a delegation of power would be beyond the power of Congress.

One of the main purposes of the union of the States under the Constitution was to relieve the commerce between the States of the burdens which local State jealousies and purposes had in the past imposed upon it; and the interstate-commerce clause in the Constitution was one of the chief reasons for its adoption. The power was there conferred upon Congress. Now, if to the discretion of Congress is committed the question whether in interstate commerce we shall return to the old methods prevailing before the Constitution or not, it would seem to be conferring upon Congress the power to amend the Constitution by ignoring or striking out one of its most important provisions. It was certainly intended by that clause to secure uniformity in the regulation of commerce between the States. To suspend that purpose and to permit the States to exercise their old authority before they became States, to interfere with commerce between them and their neighbors, is to defeat the constitutional purpose.

This conclusion is sustained in a very careful report prepared by the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, of which then Senator Knox was chairman. The conclusions stated were as follows:

First. Interstate shipments are not completed until they reach the consignee.

Second. An interruption or interference with interstate shipments before they reach the consignee constitutes a regulation of commerce.

Third. Regulating interstate shipments is an exclusive function of Congress.

Fourth. Congress can not delegate any part of its exclusive power to the States.

Fifth. To remove the bar or impediment of exclusive Federal power which shuts the States out of the Federal domain is to permit or sanction a State law in violation of the Constitution and in effect to delegate a Federal function to the States.

I am quite aware that the purpose of this act is to enable the States more completely to regulate the sale and use of intoxicating liquors in their respective jurisdictions, and that a very large part of the good people of each of such States is strongly in favor of any law which will permit the State to do this, and therefore that the necessity for maintaining the constitutional restrictions in such cases with reference to interstate commerce is not looked upon with popular favor in those States. Recognizing this popular wish, Congress has already gone to the extent of subjecting the original package in which the liquor is imported to the laws of the State as soon as it is delivered into the hands of the consignee. It has regulated the commerce in liquors by forbidding, under sections 238, 239, and 240 of the Penal Code (1) delivery of intoxicating liquor to any person other than the consignee, unless upon his written order, or to any fictitious person; (2) the collection of the purchase price of intoxicating liquor by any common carrier acting as agent of buyer or seller; (3) the shipment of any liquor unless labeled on the outside to show name of consignee, nature of contents, and quantity contained. These restrictions must greatly aid the State authorities in their enforcement of their liquor laws.

If Congress, however, may in addition entirely suspend the operation of the interstate-commerce clause upon a lawful subject of interstate commerce and turn the regulation of interstate commerce over to the States in respect to it, it is difficult to see how it may not suspend interstate commerce in respect to every subject of commerce wherever the police power of the State can be exercised to hinder or obstruct that commerce. I can not think that the framers of the Constitution, or that the people who adopted it, had in mind for a moment that Congress could thus nullify the operation of a clause whose useful effect was deemed so important and which in fact has contributed so much to the solidarity of the Nation and the prosperity that has followed unhampered, nation-wide trade.

But it is said that this is a question with which the Executive or Members of Congress should not burden themselves to consider or decide. It is said that it should be left to the Supreme Court to say whether this proposed act violates the Constitution. I dissent utterly from this proposition. The oath which the Chief Executive takes, and which each Member of Congress takes, does not bind him any less sacredly to observe the Constitution than the oaths which the Justices of the Supreme Court take. It is questionable whether the doubtful constitutionality of a bill ought not to furnish a greater reason for voting against the bill, or vetoing it, than for the court to hold it to be invalid. The court will only declare a law invalid where its unconstitutionality is clear, while the lawmaker may very well hesitate to vote for a bill if of doubtful constitutionality because of the wisdom of keeping clearly within the fundamental law. The custom of legislators and executives having any legislative function to remit to the courts entire and ultimate responsibility as to the constitutionality of the measures which they take part in passing is an abuse which tends to put the court constantly in opposition to the legislature and executive, and, indeed, to the popular supporters of unconstitutional laws. If, however, the legislators and the executives had attempted to do their duty this burden of popular disapproval would have been lifted from the courts, or at least considerably lessened.

For these reasons, and in spite of the popular approval of this bill, I have not felt justified in signing it, because I feel that under principles of proper constitutional construction it violates the interstate-commerce clause of our fundamental law.

I am sustained in the view I have taken by the judgment and opinion of Attorney General Wickersham, which contains an elaborate discussion of the question and considers in detail the issues which have been raised in the congressional debates and elsewhere.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 28, 1913.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, February 28, 1913.

The PRESIDENT.

SIR: I have examined with as much care as the very limited time at my disposal would permit the bill S. 4043, entitled "An act divesting intoxicating liquors of their interstate character in certain cases," which was passed by both Houses of Congress and presented to you on February 17th instant. This bill consists of but one section, which is as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the shipment or transportation in any manner or by any means whatsoever of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind from one State, Territory, or District of the United States or place noncontiguous to, but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, into any other State, Territory, or District of the United States or place noncontiguous to, but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country into any State, Territory, or District of the United States or place noncontiguous to, but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, which said spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor is intended by any person interested therein to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to, but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, is hereby prohibited."

Senator KENYON, the sponsor of the bill during debate, said "that honest lawyers, frank with themselves, must concede that the questions involved are exceedingly troublesome, but inasmuch as the Supreme Court has expressly left open the question it would seem that this was a proper case to place the matter squarely before them in order that a question of great importance might be determined." Whether or not the doubts concerning the constitutionality of this measure thus frankly expressed are so well founded as to require you to disapprove it or are of a character which, in view of the meritorious purpose of the legislation, you should disregard, leaving them, as Senator KENYON suggests, to be dealt with by the courts, is, I take it, the matter for your immediate consideration and determination.

In the Senate, Senators ROOT and SUTHERLAND, among others, expressed in careful and forceful reasoning their conviction that the act was wholly beyond the constitutional powers of Congress, in which view Representative BRANTLEY and other lawyers of high standing in the House of Representatives concurred.

Traffic in liquor has been the subject of much discussion both in Congress and before the courts of the United States ever since the decision in Leisy v. Hardin (135 U. S., 100), which held that a statute of a State prohibiting the sale of any intoxicating liquors except for pharmaceutical, medicinal, chemical, or sacramental purposes, and under a license from a county court of the State, was, as applied to a sale by the importer into the State, and in the original packages or kegs, unbroken and unopened, of such liquors, manufactured in and brought from another State, unconstitutional and void, as repugnant to the clause of the Constitution granting to Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

This case was decided April 28, 1890, and on August 8, following, Congress passed an act known as the Wilson Act (26 Stats., 315, c. 728) providing:

"that all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory, or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein shall, upon arrival in such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise." That act was sustained in the case of In re Rahrer (140 U. S., 555), as a valid exercise of the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States.

In delivering the opinion of the court, Fuller, C. J., said:

The Constitution does not provide that interstate commerce shall be free, but, by the grant of this exclusive power to regulate it, it was left free except as Congress might impose restraint. Therefore it has been determined that the failure of Congress to exercise this exclusive power in any case is an expression of its will that the subject shall be free from restrictions or impositions upon it by the several States.

* * * * * * *

Unquestionably, fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids are subjects of commercial intercourse, exchange, barter, and traffic between nation and nation and between State and State like any other commodity in which a right to traffic exists, and are so recognized by the usages of the commercial world, the laws of Congress, and the decisions of courts. Nevertheless, it has been often held that State legislation which prohibits the manufacture of spiritous, malt, vinous, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors within the limits of a State, to be there sold or bartered for general use as a beverage, does not necessarily infringe any right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution of the United States or by the amendments thereto.

He referred to the language of Mr. Justice Catron in the License Cases (5 How., 599), to the effect that if from its nature an article did not belong to commerce, "or if its condition, from putresence, or other cause, is such when it is about to enter the State that it no longer belongs to commerce, or, in other words, is not a commercial article, then the State power may exclude its introduction. * * * That is to say, that which does not belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the police power of the State; and that which does belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the United States."

Coming to consider whether or not, as declared by Congress, imported liquors shall, upon arrival in a State, fall within the category of domestic articles of a similar nature, the Chief Justice continued as follows:

"By the first clause of section 10 of Article I of the Constitution, certain powers are enumerated which the States are forbidden to exercise in any event; and by clauses 2 and 3, certain others, which may be exercised with the consent of Congress. As to those in the first class, Congress can not relieve from the positive restriction imposed. As to those in the second, their exercise may be authorized; and they include the collection of the revenue from imposts and duties on imports and exports, by State enactments, subject to the revision and control of Congress; and a tonnage duty, to the exaction of which only the consent of Congress is required. Beyond this, Congress is not empowered to enable the State to go in this direction. Nor can Congress transfer legislative powers to a State, nor sanction a State law in violation of the Constitution; and if it can adopt a State law as its own, it must be one that it would be competent for it to enact itself, and not a law passed in the exercise of the police power. (Cooley v. Port Wardens of Philadelphia, 12 How., 299; Gunn v. Barry, 15 Wall., 610, 623; United States v. Dewitt, 9 Wall., 41.)"

But, he held, Congress can, in the exercise of the discretion reposed in it, conclude that the common interests do not require entire freedom in the traffic of ardent spirits, and so concluding it had enacted the Wilson law.

"In so doing, Congress has not attempted to delegate the power to regulate commerce, or to exercise any power reserved to the States or to grant a power not possessed by the States, or to adopt State laws. It has taken its own course and made its own regulation, applying to these subjects of interstate commerce one common rule, whose uniformity is not affected by variations in State laws in dealing with such property."

The Chief Justice added that he perceived no reason why, if Congress chose to provide that certain designated subjects of interstate commerce shall be governed by a rule which divests them of that character at an earlier period of time than would otherwise be the case, it was not within its competency so to do, and accordingly held that the act of 1890 which withdrew the control of Congress over the articles in question upon their arrival within the State into which they were shipped was a constitutional exercise of power.

In Rhodes v. Iowa (170 U. S., 412) the court was called upon to construe the meaning of the words "upon such arrival in such State or Territory" in the Wilson Act, it being contended that these words meant on arrival at the State line. But this interpretation was rejected, and it was held that, properly construed, the words meant to withdraw the Federal control when the goods had arrived at the point of destination and were delivered there to the consignee. "Undoubtedly," the court said—

"The purpose of the act was to enable the laws of the several States to control the character of merchandise therein enumerated at an earlier date than would have been otherwise the case, but it is equally unquestionable that the act of Congress manifests no purpose to confer upon the States the power to give their statutes an extraterritorial operation so as to subject persons and property beyond their borders to the restraints of their laws. If the act of Congress be construed as reaching the contract for interstate shipment made in another State, the necessary effect must be to give to the laws of the several States extraterritorial operation, for, as held in the Bowman case (Bowman v. Chicago & C. R. R. Co., 125 U. S., 465), the inevitable consequence of allowing a State law to forbid interstate shipments of merchandise would be to destroy the right to contract beyond the limits of the State for such shipments. If the construction claimed be upheld, it would be in the power of each State to compel every interstate commerce train to stop before crossing its borders and discharge its freight, lest by crossing the line it might carry within the State merchandise of the character named covered by the inhibitions of a State statute."

* * * * * * *

"Whilst it is true that the right to sell free from State interference interstate-commerce merchandise was held in Leisy v. Hardin to be an essential incident to interstate commerce, it was yet but an incident, as the contract of sale within a State in its nature was usually subject to the control of the legislative authority of the State. On the other hand, the right to contract for the transportation of merchandise from one State into or across another involved interstate commerce in its fundamental aspect, and imported in its very essence a relation which necessarily must be governed by laws apart from the laws of the several States, since it embraced a contract which must come under the laws of more than one State. The purpose of Congress to submit the incidental power to sell to the dominion of State authority should not, without the clearest implication, be held to imply the purpose of subjecting to State laws a contract which in its very object and nature was not susceptible of such regulation even if the constitutional right to do so existed, as to which no opinion is expressed."

The court quoted from the opinion in the Bowman case, a passage which pointed out the confusion which would arise if the laws of the several States were allowed to have an extraterritorial operation, saying that uniformity in the regulations by which a carrier is to be governed from one end of his route to the other is a necessity in his business, and that to secure it Congress, which is untrammeled by State lines, has been invested with the exclusive legislative power of determining what such regulation shall be; and added:

"And it was doubtless this construction which caused the court to observe, in the opinion In re Rahrer (140 U. S., 545, 552), that the act of Congress 'divests them (objects of interstate-commerce shipment) of that character at an earlier period of time than would otherwise be the case.' We think that in interpreting the statute by the light of all its provisions it was not intended to and did not cause the power of the State to attach to an interstate-commerce shipment whilst the merchandise was in transit under such shipment and until its arrival at the point of destination and delivery there to the consignee, and of course this conclusion renders it entirely unnecessary to consider whether, if the act of Congress had submitted the right to make interstate-commerce shipments to State control, it would be repugnant to the Constitution."

The bill presented for your consideration now squarely presents the question put in the clause above italicized, for the bill avowedly and clearly proposes to submit the right to make interstate-commerce shipments of spirituous, vinous, malt, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind to State control. Senator ROOT said during the discussion over it:

"What is proposed in this bill is that the Government of the United States shall hand over to the government of each State the right to say how and when and under what conditions interstate commerce in these articles of commerce, so treated and regarded by all the States, shall be had." (Res., p. 2931.)

Yet, in Vance v. Vandercook (170 U. S., 438–444) the court in passing on the constitutionality of the South Carolina dispensary act said that the proposition was well established "that the right to send liquors from one State into another, and the act of sending the same, is interstate commerce, the regulation whereof has been committed by the Constitution of the United States to Congress, and, hence, that a State law which denies such a right, or substantially interferes with or hampers the same, is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States."

In discussing the constitutionality of that provision in the act of 1890 which withdrew the protection of Congress from the incidental right of the importer into a State of spirituous or vinous liquors to sell the same in the original package, the court advanced as a conclusive answer to one of the contentions made against its constitutionality, "that the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution guarantees the right to ship merchandise from one State into another, and protects it until the termination of the shipment by delivery at the place of consignment, and this right is wholly unaffected by the act of Congress which allows State authority to attach to the original package before sale but only after delivery."

"It follows," said Mr. Justice White in delivering the opinion of the court, "that under the Constitution of the United States every resident of South Carolina is free to receive for his own use liquor from other States, and that the inhibitions of a State statute do not operate to prevent liquors from other States from being shipped into such State, on the order of a resident for his use. * * * To hold the law unconstitutional because it prevents such sale in the original package would be to decide that the State law was unconstitutional because it exerted a power which the State had a lawful right to exercise. Indeed, the law of the State here under review does not purport to forbid the shipment into the State from other States of intoxicating liquors for the use of a resident, and if it did so, it would, upon principle and under the ruling in Scott v. Donald, to that extent be in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

"It is argued that the foregoing considerations are inapplicable, since the State law now before us, whilst it recognizes the right of residents of other States to ship liquor into South Carolina for the use of residents therein, attaches to the exercise of that right such restrictions as virtually destroy it.

"But the right of persons in one State to ship liquor into another State to a resident for his own use is derived from the Constitution of the United States, and does not rest on the grant of the State law. Either the conditions attached by the State law unlawfully restrain the right or they do not; if they do—and we shall hereafter examine this contention—then they are void. If they do not, then there is no lawful ground of complaint on the subject."

Again, analyzing the effect of the State statute, which in substance prohibited the importation of liquor for one's own use without first obtaining a certificate from a State official, the court said:

"The right of the citizen of another State to avail himself of interstate commerce can not be held to be subject to the issuing of a certificate by an officer of the State of South Carolina without admitting the power of that officer to control the exercise of the right. But the right arises from the Constitution of the United States; it exists wholly independent of the will of either the law-making or the executive power of the State; it takes its origin outside of the State of South Carolina and finds its support in the Constitution of the United States. Whether or not it may be exercised depends solely upon the will of the person making the shipment and can not be in advance controlled or limited by the action of the State in any department of its government."

These foregoing decisions were applied in the case of American Express Co. v. Iowa (196 U. S., 147), where it was held that a package of intoxicating liquor received by a company in one State to be carried to a purchaser in another State, c. o. d., is interstate commerce and is under the protection of the commerce clause of the Constitution and may not be confiscated under the prohibitive liquor laws of the State.

In Pabst Brewing Co. v. Crenshaw (198 U. S., 27) it was held that a State statute which operates upon beer and malt liquors shipped from other States after their arrival and while held for sale and consumption within the State was not an interference with interstate commerce in view of the provisions of the Wilson act of 1890. The purpose of that act, said Mr. Justice White—

"was to make liquor after its arrival a domestic product and to confer power upon the States to deal with it accordingly. The police power is hence to be measured by the right of a State to control or regulate domestic products, a State and not a Federal question as respects the commerce clause of the Constitution.

* * * * * * *

"To decide that an exertion by a State of its power to regulate the sale of malt liquors manufactured within the State was an exercise of its police authority, and yet to say that the same, when applied to liquor shipped into the State from other States, after delivery was not an exertion of the police power, would be to destroy the Wilson Act and frustrate the very object which it was intended to accomplish, and besides would overrule the previous decisions of this court upholding and enforcing that statute."

In Heyman v. Southern Railway Co. (203 U. S., 270) it was held that the word "arrival" as used in the Wilson Act means delivery of the goods to the consignee, and not merely reaching their destination; and that the power of the State over intoxicating liquors from other States in original packages after delivery and before sale, given by the Wilson law, does not attach before notice and expiration of a reasonable time for the consignee to receive the goods from the carrier; and that this rule is not affected by the fact that under the State law the carrier's liability as such may have ceased and become that of a warehouseman.

"As the general principle is that goods moving in interstate commerce cease to be such commerce only after delivery and sale in the original package, and as the settled rule is that the Wilson law was not an abdication of the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, since that law simply affects an incident of such commerce by allowing the State power to attach after delivery and before sale, we are not concerned," said Mr. Justice White, "with whether, under the law of any particular State, the liability of a railroad company as carrier ceases and becomes that of a warehouseman on the goods reaching their ultimate destination, before notice and before the expiration of a reasonable time for the consignee to receive the goods from the carrier. For, whatever may be the divergent legal rules in the several States concerning the precise time when the liability of a carrier as such in respect to the carriage of goods ends, they can not affect the general principle as to when an interstate shipment ceases to be under the protection of the commerce clause of the Constitution, and thereby comes under the control of the State authority."

In Delamater v. South Dakota (205 U. S., 93) it was held that since the enactment of the Wilson law the owner of intoxicating liquor in one State can not, under the commerce clause of the Constitution, go himself or send his agent into another State, and, in defiance of its laws, carry on the business of soliciting proposals for the purchase of such liquors; that although a State may not forbid a resident thereof from ordering for his own use intoxicating liquor from another State, it may forbid the carrying on within its borders of the business of soliciting orders for such liquor, although such orders may only contemplate a contract resulting from final acceptance in another State. Mr. Justice White said:

"It is settled by a line of decisions of this court, noted in the margin, that the purpose of the Wilson Act, as a regulation by Congress of interstate commerce, was to allow the States, as to intoxicating liquors, when the subject of such commerce, to exert ampler power than could have been exercised before the enactment of the statute. In other words, that Congress, sedulous to prevent its exclusive right to regulate commerce from interfering with the power of the States over intoxicating liquor, by the Wilson Act adopted a special rule enabling the States to extend their authority as to such liquor shipped from other States before it became commingled with the mass of other property in the State by a sale in the original package."

Sections 238, 239, and 240 of the Penal Code forbid under penalty (1) delivery of intoxicating liquor to any person other than the consignee, unless upon his written order, or to any fictitious person; (2) the collection of the purchase price of intoxicating liquor by any common carrier, or the acting of such as agent of buyer or seller; (3) the shipment of any liquor unless labeled on the outside to show name of consignee, nature of contents, and quantity contained.

Senator SUTHERLAND said of this legislation that it gives the State "full power to seize and confiscate liquor after it reaches the hands of the consignee, and the sections of the penal code, by requiring delivery to an actual consignee and the plain marking of every package with the name of consignee and the quantity and kind of liquor contained, furnishes information which will enable the State to act." (Rec., 2919.)

The bill under consideration goes beyond all this. It proposes to make unlawful the transportation of liquor from one State to another where it "is intended by any person interested therein to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of" the law of the State, etc., into which it is shipped. If, therefore, the law of any State shall prohibit absolutely the possession or use of liquor within that State, then under this bill the mere introduction of liquor across the boundary line of the State would be conclusive evidence of an intention to violate that law, and would subject the carrier and all persons having any interest in the liquor to penalties imposed by the State law.

On the other hand, in those States where the use of liquor is permitted to any degree under restrictions, the carrier and all persons having any interest in the liquor would, from the moment of its introduction into the State, be liable to the penalties imposed by the State law if the evidence should warrant the inference, that any one of them intended to use the liquor so taken into the State in any manner which should violate the State law. This, of course, would operate to give to the statutes of the State an extraterritorial operation so as to subject persons and property without the State to the restraint of these laws by preventing them from making contracts of sale and delivery which would be lawful in the State where made, but which could not be enforced by delivery within the State of the purchaser if such delivery were prohibited by the laws of such State. If, as was said in Rhodes v. Iowa (supra):

"The right to contract for the transportation of merchandise from one State into or across another involved interstate commerce in its fundamental aspect and imparted in its very essence a relation which necessarily must be governed by laws apart from the laws of the several States, since it embraced a contract which must come under the laws of more than one State," this fundamental right, which, as shown in the above cases, is protected by the Constitution, and subjected only to the exclusive power of regulation vested in Congress, would be entirely destroyed by this legislation. This was the principal ground upon which Senator ROOT based his objection to the bill.

"In the second place," he said, "the provision undertakes to invalidate the contracts of the people of each State by reason of the intention of some one else in regard to future conduct under the laws of other States. The laws of a given State require a common carrier to accept and carry an invoice of goods. The contract is obligatory. The contract is made. But under this provision, if it is effective at all, the contract is invalidated because some one besides the carrier, and it may be some one besides the shipper, has an undisclosed intention to violate, after the transaction of transportation is over, an unknown law in a different State." (Rec., 2930.)

"What is proposed in this bill," he added, "is that the Government of the United States shall hand over to the government of each State the right to say how and when and under what conditions interstate commerce in these articles of commerce, so treated and regarded by all the States, shall be had." (Rec., 2931.) Mr. ROOT referred to another objection, namely, "that this bill does not merely hand over to the State, which is the terminus ad quem of this transportation, the power to regulate interstate commerce within its borders, but it undertakes by Federal law to enforce in each State the laws of other States. * * * Let us say that the State of Iowa, which has stringent laws, is empowered by this statute, if it is passed, to declare the circumstances under which beer may be imported from the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri. If the beer is carried in in accordance with the laws of the State of Iowa it is a good transaction. If it is carried in in violation of those laws, with intent to sell without a license, with intent to sell in a 'dry' town rather than a 'wet' town, with intent to sell for one purpose rather than another, then it is a bad transaction and the contract made in Missouri is a void contract, made void by the law of Iowa." (Rec., 2931.)

It was said in the Bowman case (125 U. S., 465, 480) that—

* * * "the rule has been asserted with great clearness that whenever the subjects over which a power to regulate commerce is asserted are in their nature national, or admit of one uniform system or plan of regulation, they may justly be said to be of such a nature as to require exclusive legislation by Congress. * * *

"Surely transportation of passengers or merchandise through a State, or from one State to another, is of this nature. It is of national importance that over that subject there should be but one regulating power, for if one State can directly tax persons or property passing through it, or tax them indirectly by levying a tax upon their transportation, every other may, and thus commercial intercourse between States remote from each other may be destroyed. * * * It was to guard against the possibility of such commercial embarrassments, no doubt, that the power of regulating commerce among States was conferred upon the Federal Government."

The court quoted from the case of Cooley v. Port Wardens (12 How., 299) the following language:

"The subjects, indeed, upon which Congress can act under this power" (over interstate commerce) "are of infinite variety, requiring for their successful management different plans or modes of treatment. Some of them are national in their character, and admit and require uniformity of regulation, affecting alike all the States; others are local, or are mere aids to commerce, and can only be properly regulated by provisions adapted to their special circumstances and localities. Of the former class may be mentioned all that portion of commerce with foreign countries or between the States which consists in the transportation, purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities. Here there can of necessity be only one system or plan of regulation, and that Congress alone can prescribe. * * * And it is a matter of public history that the object of vesting in Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States was to insure uniformity of regulation against conflicting and discriminating State legislation."

Again—

"Commerce with foreign countries and among the States, strictly considered, consists in intercourse and traffic, including in these terms navigation and the transportation and transit of persons and property, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities. For the regulation of commerce as thus defined, there can be only one system of rules, applicable alike to the whole country; and the authority which can act for the whole country can alone adopt such a system. Action upon it by separate States is not, therefore, permissible." (Citing 12 How., 702.)

In summing up a review of the authorities on the subject of the limits of State legislation which would intrench upon commerce among the States, Mr. Justice Matthews said:

"In a word, it may be said that in the matter of interstate commerce the United States are but one country, and are and must be subject to one system of regulations and not to a multitude of systems."

This doctrine was asserted with emphasis in Leisy v. Hardin (135 U. S., 119). It is also declared in Mobile v. Kimball (102 U. S., 691, 697), Hall v. Decuir (95 U. S., 485, 507).

But it is contended that the bill would in the exercise of the undoubted powers of Congress merely declare spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind to be in effect "outlaws of commerce," and subject that class of merchandise to the exercise of the police powers of the several States.

"Doubtless," said the court the Bowman case, "the State have power to provide by law suitable measures to prevent the introduction into the States of articles of trade which, on account of their existing condition, would bring in and spread disease, pestilence, and death, such as rags or other substances infected with the germs of yellow fever or the virus of smallpox, or cattle, or meat, or other provisions that are diseased or decayed, or otherwise, from their condition and quality, unfit for human use or consumption. Such articles are not merchantable; they are no legitimate subjects of trade and commerce. They may be rightly outlawed as intrinsically and directly the immediate sources and causes of destruction to human health and life. The self-protecting power of each State, therefore, may be rightfully exerted against their introduction, and such exercises of power can not be considered regulations of commerce prohibited by the Constitution."

Reference was made to the observation of Justice Catron in the License cases, that if from the nature of the article it did not belong to commerce or if its condition from putrescence or other cause is such when it is about to enter a State that it no longer belongs to commerce, or in other words, is not a merchantable article, then the State power may exclude its introduction; and it is said that by this legislation Congress has in effect declared that liquors do not belong to commerce, are not commercial articles, and has left it to the State to effectually exclude their introduction into the State.

But in Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. F. W. Cook Brewing Co. (223 U. S., 70–82) Justice Lurton said:

"By a long line of decisions, beginning even prior to Leisy v. Hardin (135 U. S., 100), it has been indisputably determined:

"a. That beer and other intoxicating liquors are a recognized and legitimate subject of interstate commerce."

Senator SUTHERLAND stated during the discussion in the Senate:

"There are 8 States in the Union which have passed laws prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors. There are 40 States under whose laws the sale of intoxicating liquors under some circumstances is legitimate and proper, but there is no State in the Union that has thus far undertaken to forbid the purchase or the use of intoxicating liquors."

In Austin v. Tennessee (179 U. S., 343), Mr. Justice Brown held that cigarettes could not be classed with diseased cattle or meats, decayed fruit, or other articles the use of which is a menace to the health of the entire community, and quoted as pertinent to the case the language of Chief Justice Taney in the License Cases (5 How., 504), as follows:

"But spirits and distilled liquors are universally admitted to be subject of ownership and property, and are therefore subjects of exchange, barter, and traffic, like any other commodity in which a right of property exists, and Congress, under its general power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, may prescribe what article of merchandise shall be admitted and what excluded; and may, therefore, admit or not, as it shall deem best, the importation of ardent spirits."

That regulation of commerce may sometimes take the form of prohibition in traffic in certain articles can not be disputed. It was so with respect to lottery tickets in the Lottery Case (188 U. S., 321).

In Rasmussen v. Idaho, a State statute prohibiting the introduction of sheep if found subject to scab or epidemic disease liable to be communicated to other sheep was upheld, and in Plumley v. Massachusetts (155 U. S., 461) a Massachusetts statute prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine artificially colored so as to cause it to look like yellow butter, brought into Massachusetts, was upheld upon the ground that the statute only forbade the practice of frauds upon the general public, seeking to suppress false pretensions, and to promote fair dealing in an article of food; and that the freedom of commerce among the States did not demand a recognition of the right to the practice of deception upon the public in the articles dealt with, even if the articles may have become articles of trade of the country.

So, in Hipolite Egg Co. v. United States (220 U. S., 45) the provisions of the pure food and drug act of 1906, prohibiting the carriage of adulterated articles in interstate commerce, and authorizing the seizure and condemnation of the same while in transit or in original or unbroken packages after reaching destination, were upheld, upon the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce; and applying the principle of the Lottery case, it was held that regulation might in such instance take the form of entire prohibition. The court said, per McKenna, J.:

"The statute rests, of course, upon the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, and, defining that power, we have said that no trade can be carried on between the States to which it does not extend, and have further said that it is complete in itself, subject to no limitations except those found in the Constitution. We are dealing, it must be remembered, with illicit articles—articles which the law seeks to keep out of commerce, because they are debased by adulteration, and which law punishes them (if we may so express ourselves) and the shipper of them. There is no denial that such is the purpose of the law, and the only limitation of the power to execute such purpose which is urged is that the articles must be apprehended in transit or before they have become a part of the general mass of property of the State. In other words, the contention attempts to apply to articles of illegitimate commerce the rule which marks the line between the exercise of Federal power and State power over articles of legitimate commerce. The contention misses the question in the case. There is here no conflict of national and State jurisdictions over property legally articles of trade. The question here is whether articles which are outlaws of commerce may be seized wherever found, and it certainly will not be contended that they are outside of the jurisdiction of the National Government when they are within the borders of a State."

In the recent decision of Hoke v. United States (Feb. 24, 1913) the Supreme Court, in upholding the constitutionality of the Mann white-slave act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stats., 825), put the power squarely upon the commerce clause and the right of prohibition of "a right to be exercised in immorality" on the same basis as the laws prohibiting the carrying of obscene literature or lottery tickets or cattle with infectious diseases. It may be admitted that under the authority of these decisions Congress might, if it chose, prohibit the carriage in interstate commerce of intoxicating liquors in the exercise of its power to regulate such commerce. In the Hoke case (supra) Justice McKenna said:

"But this bill does not declare liquor to be an outlaw of commerce. It does not prohibit, as a uniform rule, its carriage in interstate commerce. It proposes to turn over the whole subject to the conflicting laws of 48 States.

"The recognition of the right of Congress not directly to exercise the power to regulate commerce in liquors, but to abdicate it and to submit the whole question in traffic in liquors to the varying decisions of the different States is not the exercise by the National Government of its power in such manner as it has exercised it respecting the transportation of adulterated food, diseased cattle, obscene literature, lottery tickets, or women for immoral purposes. This objection is met by the contention that the rule of uniformity in regulations of interstate commerce is not absolute, and that the proposed legislation falls within the same category as those which have been sustained as valid by the Supreme Court, and reference is made to the legislation permitting States to enact pilot laws, the provisions of the bankruptcy act permitting the exemptions authorized by the laws of the States, respectively, and the like.

"When the Constitution took effect pilot laws existed in several States and were subsequently enacted in others. In all of such States they have been changed from time to time according to the will of their respective legislatures. The act of August, 1790, provided that the pilots should be regulated by the laws of the States or 'until further legislative provision should be made by Congress.' It was held that the power over the subject of pilotage fell within that provision of the regulation of commerce which might be exercised by the States, but only until Congress should see fit to act upon the subject."

The decision in Cooley v. Board of Wardens of Port of Philadelphia (12 How., 229) was put upon the peculiar nature of pilotage, and the uniform practice of the Government from the adoption of the Constitution which brought the regulation of that part of commerce within the class of powers which might be exercised by the States, and unless and until Congress should choose to interfere, and then only subject to such restrictions as Congress might see fit to interpose.

"The power to regulate commerce," said Mr. Justice Swayne in Gilman v. Philadelphia (3 Wall., 713), "covers a wide field, and embraces a great variety of subjects. Some of these subjects call for uniform rules and national legislation; others can be best regulated by rules and provisions suggested by the varying circumstances of different localities, and limited in their operation to such localities, respectively. To this extent the power to regulate commerce may be exercised by the States.

"Whether the power in any given case is vested exclusively in the General Government depends upon the nature of the subject to be regulated. Pilot laws are regulations of commerce; but if a State enact them in good faith, and not covertly for another purpose, they are not in conflict with the power 'to regulate commerce' committed to Congress by the Constitution."

In Hanover National Bank v. Moyses (186 U. S., 181) the court upheld as valid a provision in the bankruptcy law of 1898, which allowed to bankrupts the exemptions prescribed by the State laws in force at the time of the filing of the petition in the State wherein they have had their domicile for six months, or the greater portion thereof, immediately preceding the filing of the petition. It was contended that this violated Article I, section 8, paragraph 8, of the Constitution, because it did not establish "uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy throughout the United States." But the court held that such exemptions had been sustained for the reason that it was made a rule of the law to subject to the payment of debts under its operation only such property as could by judicial process be made available for the same purpose. One of the effects of a bankruptcy law, it was stated, is that a general execution upon it in favor of all the creditors of the bankrupt reaching all his property subject to levy and applying it to the payment of his debts subject to their respective priorities.

"It is quite proper, therefore, to confine its operation to such property as other legal process could reach. A rule which operates to this effect throughout the United States is uniform within the meaning of that term as used in the Constitution." (Citing In re Deckert, 2 Hughes, 183.)

The court expressed its concurrence in this view and held "that the system is in the constitutional sense uniform throughout the United States when the trustee takes in each State whatever would have been available to the creditors if the bankruptcy law is uniform, although it may result in certain particulars differently in different States."

The statute forbidding the shipment in interstate commerce of game killed in violation of State laws (Criminal Code, secs. 242, 244), sustained in Rupert v. United States (181 Fed., 87), is based upon the principle announced in Gear v. Connecticut (161 U. S., 519), that game birds belong to the people of the respective States in their sovereign capacity, and that they are not the subject of external or interstate commerce unless permitted by the laws of the State. The distinction between internal and external or interstate commerce, said the court, "is marked, and has always been recognized by this court."

Representative WEBB sought to justify the bill on the analogy of the local-option measures enacted in the States.

"Strictly speaking," he said, "this law is not a prohibition law. It is a local-option measure to give to the States what they have always been entitled to under our interpretation of the Constitution—the right to control this troublesome question for themselves."

"The principle upon which local-option laws, so called, have been sustained," said Fuller, Chief Justice, in In re Rahrer (140 U. S., 561), "is that while the legislature can not delegate its power to make a law, it can make a law which leaves it to municipalities or people to determine some fact or state of things upon which the action of the law may depend; but we do not rest the validity of the act of Congress on this analogy. The power over interstate commerce is too vital to the integrity of the Nation to be qualified by any refinement of reasoning. The power to regulate is solely in the General Government, and it is an essential part of that regulation to prescribe the regular means for accomplishing the introduction and incorporation of articles into and with the mass of property in the country or State."

I find no decision which sustains any such delegation of legislative power as supports the local-option provisions of State laws relating to traffic in liquor.

Representative WEBB also sought to justify the law upon the principle of those cases which delegate the duty or power to an individual of finding some fact before a congressional act takes effect. (Record, 3449.) These cases are well understood. The latest one in the Supreme Court is United States v. Grimaud (220 U. S., 506). That and similar cases were turned upon the well-recognized principle of Congress declaring a general rule and devolving upon a subordinate agency the power to ascertain when the facts brought a particular case within the rule. But here Congress does not declare a general rule. It does not provide that liquor shall not be, as a general rule, transported in interstate commerce; it does not declare liquor to be an outlaw of commerce; it does not declare liquor to be deleterious to health or destructive of good morals; but it declares that when one of the parties interested in liquor which is the subject of an interstate shipment intends to introduce it into a State in violation of the laws of that State its carriage shall be unlawful. Such regulation can not be sustained on the principles in the Grimaud case or those similar to it.

Finally, Senator KENYON maintained that the purpose of the bill "and its only purpose is to remove the impediment existing as to the States in the exercise of their police powers regarding the traffic or control of intoxicating liquors within their borders."

But it is unnecessary to rehearse the reasoning in the various decisions heretofore quoted which dispose of this contention.

The proposition begs the whole question under consideration and can only be conceded if it be held that Congress can abdicate entirely its power over interstate commerce in an article which it does not itself declare to be "an outlaw of commerce," but which it leaves to the varying legislation of the respective States to more or less endow with qualities of outlawry. Without prolonging this discussion in which I have endeavored to meet and analyze the various contentions set forth in behalf of this bill, I am compelled to the conclusion that it is not only of doubtful constitutionality but that unless the Supreme Court shall recede from a well-settled line of decisions extending over a long period of years it would most certainly declare this legislation to be without the constitutional powers of Congress.

Respectfully,

GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney General.

Sixty-second Congress of the United States of America; at the third session, begun and held at the city of Washington on Monday, the 2d day of December, 1912.

An act (S. 4043) divesting intoxicating liquors of their interstate character in certain cases.

Be it enacted, etc., That the shipment or transportation, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind, from one State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, into any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country into any State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, which said spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor is intended, by any person interested therein, to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, is hereby prohibited.

CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
J. H. GALLINGER,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that there is a very lengthy opinion from the Attorney General, which, without objection, will be printed in connection with the veto message.

The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? And under the Constitution the yeas and nays must be called on that question.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, I wish to submit a very few remarks on the subject before the vote is taken. Is it in order to do so now, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order. The Senator will proceed.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, I attempted to discuss the constitutional question involved in the consideration of this bill and similar bills. I reached a conclusion that was perfectly satisfactory to myself, and I do not intend to rediscuss the question. But since I delivered that speech another thought has occurred to me resulting from a letter which I received.

I received a letter from a gentleman who designated his profession by adding, after his name, "M. D." The purpose of his letter was to criticize me for the speech I made on the so-called Kenyon bill. Among other things he said:

> Which do you consider to be the Constitution, United States, the people, or the written United States Constitution? I say the people, and their wishes and desires should control your official acts.

The question which he propounded seems to indicate an opinion which appears to be shared by some people in this country, who are better known than my correspondent, and we hardly expect them to entertain or express such opinions.

Billions of treasure and millions of lives have been sacrificed that we might have a Constitution—one guaranteeing constitutional liberty. The world recognizes that we have a model Constitution; still we have those in this country who seem to care less for it than the ordinances of a town council. We have frenzied enthusiasts upon various subjects, and some demagogues, who are utterly oblivious, evidently, to the importance of maintaining a constitutional government. All of them may not express themselves as has my correspondent, but, like him, they forget our constitutional guaranties, some of which may be summarized as follows:

That the privileges and immunities of citizens shall not be abridged; that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall be informed of the cause and nature of the prosecution against him; that he shall have a speedy public trial, be confronted with witnesses against him, have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, have assistance of counsel for his defense, and trial by jury; that he shall not be compelled to answer for a capital or infamous crime unless upon a presentment of a grand jury; that no one shall be compelled to give testimony against himself; that excessive bail shall not be required or excessive fines imposed; that no ex post facto law or law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be passed; that no one shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; that the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended except in case of rebellion or invasion; that no person shall twice be put in jeopardy of life or limb for the same offense; that soldiers in time of peace shall not be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner; that private property shall not be taken for public uses without just compensation.

Mr. OWEN. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. PAYNTER. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. I merely want to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to the interesting historical circumstance that the reactionaries who drew the original Constitution of the United States in the secret conclave of 1787 were compelled by the people to put into that Constitution all the 10 amendments, nearly every single guaranty to which the Senator refers.

Mr. PAYNTER. I suppose the Senator means to intimate that the things which were done by them should be disregarded. I can see no other reason in his rising to make a statement of that kind.

These are some of the guaranties which every citizen of this country should value. If we can with impunity disregard one provision of the Constitution, then we have fixed a precedent for disregarding each and every one of these vital provisions of our Constitution.

I shall not theorize as to what, in my opinion, is producing the condition in the public mind which shows an alarming tendency to treat as valueless the Constitution of our country. I will leave each Senator to solve that question for himself.

Sir Edward Coke said, "Magna Charta is such a fellow that he will have no sovereign." I have always thought that the same may be truly said of our Constitution. It is a pity that there are some people in this country who would not give it such a preeminent status, and instead of allowing the Constitution to be a fellow without a sovereign would make him one with a very tyrannical sovereign.

There is a sane voice in the new and distant State of Arizona which exclaims, "Stand by the Constitution." It is that of Daniel E. Parks, who is, I am informed, a splendid citizen and lawyer. He appeals for respect for the Constitution in these words. I send it to the desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

When Freedom cast her ægis o'er
This land of her devotion,
She called her men of might and lore
To mold the Constitution.

Chorus:

Stand by the Constitution, men—
The Nation's Constitution—
It is our "Ark of Safety," men,
Our sacred institution.

Then at the glowing forge of thought
The hammer and anvil rung,
And men of mighty minds wrought,
And o'er their labors sung:

"Old Tubal Cain did forge the sword;
We forge the Constitution—
And we'll defend it with the sword,
To death and dissolution."

"Hurrah!" they sung, "our work is done;
We've forged the Constitution,
And generations yet to come
Will bless its evolution."

In days of old our fathers fought
In sanguine Revolution,
And won the land, whose statesmen wrought
Our matchless Constitution.

Then let our joyous slogan be,
The Constitution forever!
Grand ship of state and liberty—
Sail on, O ship, forever!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. PAYNTER. I have not the honor of a personal acquaintance with the writer. The words used and the sentiments expressed show him to have proper regard for the fundamental law of the land. I wish all citizens of our country, including public officials, entertained the same sentiments and showed the same respect for it. I intend to vote to sustain the President's veto.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it is quite evident that the President of the United States is not a close reader of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Had he been such, he probably would have discovered the real ground upon which this legislation was based and upon which it was claimed to conform to the Constitution of the United States. I have, of course, read no word of the opinion of the Attorney General, and I do not know what information he conveyed to the President as to the theory on which this legislation was claimed to meet the requirements of the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution. I simply know that in the message of the President there is not even a hint of the ground upon which we claim that this legislation conforms to these provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. President, almost in the opening sentence of the message the President refers to the fact that beer is recognized as a legitimate article of commerce. That is true, Mr. President, in reference to opium; it is also true in reference to adulterated drugs; it is also true in reference to misbranded foods.

But, Mr. President, the Supreme Court has held over and over again that Congress, exercising its legislative authority, had the right to outlaw commodities of that character. If Congress had a right to outlaw that which theretofore had been proper subjects of interstate commerce, then Congress has the same authority to-day to declare that beer and whisky and other intoxicating liquors shall be outlawed. If Congress had the power to assert, in the first instance, the outlawry of this character of produce, then Congress must have the lesser authority to allow them to enter into interstate commerce upon certain conditions. The act itself which we passed did by its operation outlaw these articles to a certain extent and declare that they should not have all of the rights that ordinarily are accorded to proper subjects of interstate commerce, and it declared under what conditions they might enter into commerce and under what conditions they might not enter into commerce.

Having declared that they were not in any respect legitimate objects of commerce, then, Mr. President, they do not thereafter retain their immunity as proper subjects of interstate commerce. The Senator from New York, whose recognized ability as a constitutional lawyer all will agree to, when asked the question directly whether or not Congress had power to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors, was necessarily compelled to answer in the affirmative.

We all agree that Congress has that power; and the only question is whether that power has been exercised to any extent in this act; whether Congress has to any extent outlawed the articles at which this law is aimed. We met the same question in enacting a pure-food law. Until that time no State could have prevented the importation of such food products into its territory, nor could it have seized an article of adulterated food in transit under a State law aimed at adulterated foods, but Congress came to the rescue of the States and declared that in the case of any article of food or drugs that was so labeled or so mixed as would tend to deceive the people Congress had a right to outlaw that article. Congress did so, and refused such adulterated or misbranded products any rights or privileges of interstate commerce.

Mr. President, that question has been tried and determined since we passed this bill in what is known as the White-Slave Traffic case. In a very late case handed down by the Supreme Court on February 24, 1913—I shall not take the time to read from that decision now—the right of Congress is clearly established to declare that the purchase of tickets to send a person from one State to another, there to engage in an act which was immoral, might be prohibited and the person who furnished the ticket might be punished.

Any ordinary article, Mr. President, may be shipped from one State to another; any individual may pass from one State to another and Congress can not inquire into the character of the individual or the article as a condition precedent to the allowance of that person or that article to pass from one State to another, but Congress has a right to say to the individual, "You shall not go from one State to another for the purpose of committing an immoral act, nor shall any person induce you to do so or assist you in doing so." If Congress has that power over the individual, can anyone deny for a single moment that Congress has the power over an inanimate article to say that it shall not be transported from one State to another for the purpose of destroying life, for the purpose of destroying character, for the purpose of violating the moral law of any State or the conscience of the people of any State? It is a simple proposition; and I insist that under the bill which we passed we placed on those articles the stamp of outlawry; and having so stamped them we can say under what conditions they shall enter into interstate commerce or whether they shall enter into commerce at all.

I will agree with the President's message and with those who claim that an article which is purely and simply a commercial article can not while in transit be interfered with by a State when it enters into a State.

Mr. President, I am not unmindful of the claim that is often made, that was made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] in his very able argument on the other side of this question, that we could not outlaw and recognize a property right in an article at the same time; that by taxing and raising revenue upon articles we were thereby giving them a commercial character; and having given them that character, we could not at the same time declare that they should not be subjects of interstate commerce.

Mr. President, the authority of Congress over interstate commerce is complete and plenary in every respect. Congress may tax an article, and, at the same time, may declare under what conditions that article may enter into interstate commerce. Congress may lay a tax upon opium and at the same time may declare that the opium may not be shipped for a specific purpose. Congress may levy a tax upon nitroglycerine, and at the same time Congress may provide that that article may not enter into commerce for the purpose of blowing up structures. If Congress has the right over that kind of article, I confess I fail to understand why it is divested of a like power over an article whose effect in common use, as an injury to the human family, is a thousandfold worse than any and all of these together.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator from North Dakota think that, in the absence of this legislation, a State would have the right to seize a shipment of liquor the moment it crosses the State line?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not; and there is where I made the distinction.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator a further question. Why may not the State do that?

Mr. McCUMBER. Simply because it is a recognized article of commerce and is protected by the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution, which places the matter wholly within the power of Congress.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In other words, if the Senator will permit me to paraphrase what he has said, because for the State to do that would be to do an unconstitutional thing.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It would be to do a thing forbidden by the Constitution.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And yet the Senator from North Dakota takes the position that, although this act of the State would be absolutely void as opposed to the Constitution of the United States, the Congress of the United States may pass some law which will enable the State to violate the Constitution.

Mr. McCUMBER. No, Mr. President.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A proposition with which I utterly disagree.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; the Senator makes the same error that he made before. Until Congress itself has stamped the article as not entitled to all rights of interstate commerce, the State can not interfere with it in transit.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCUMBER. In just a moment I will.

My position is that Congress has the authority to outlaw the article, and having authority to outlaw the article, it can say under what conditions it shall enter into interstate commerce; and it can say under what conditions it will be divested of its commercial protection.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment—by this law the Congress of the United States, the Federal authority, loosens its grasp upon the article and says that under the condition, the condition being that it is shipped for an unlawful purpose, it shall cease to be a subject of interstate commerce the moment it crosses the State line. Then, Mr. President, the moment that it ceases to be interstate commerce, the State laws, of their own force, operate on it. Congress does not say what the State shall do or not do. The State laws are put into operation by the State authority, and can only operate upon the article when it is released by the Federal authority. Congress can do what the State can not do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I agree to that. Congress may do a great many things that the States can not do; but in this case, if this law passes and hereafter a State shall seize an interstate shipment of liquor the moment it has crossed the State line, if an action should be brought against the State, for doing so, the State would be obliged to concede prima facie that it had no power under the Constitution to do that, and then obliged to say that notwithstanding that it is forbidden by the Constitution we have the leave and license of Congress to violate the Constitution. I do not see how it is possible to escape that conclusion.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no, Mr. President; the State must base its right upon being able to establish, and beyond any question, that the interstate character of the article has ceased when the State takes hold of it. If the State is unable to do that, it has failed in its case, and the officers seizing it are liable for damages.

I did not intend to take any more time than merely to show, Mr. President, that the real theory under which this legislation was passed at the time we had it before us was apparently not considered at all in this message, although it may have been considered—I am not prepared to say as to that—by the Attorney General.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, Congress is granted by the Constitution authority to regulate interstate commerce. It is, therefore, granted by the Constitution the power to define what constitutes an interstate-commerce transaction. It is, therefore, granted by the Constitution the power to prescribe what shall be the termination of an interstate transaction.

Mr. President, I reverence the Constitution just as much as does the President of the United States. I profess as great reverence for it and I feel as great reverence for it. I believed when I voted for this bill, and I believe now, that it was a regulation by Congress of interstate commerce. The Senator from Utah has just given an illustration, and asks if a State of itself undertook to seize an interstate shipment whether it would not be a violation of the Constitution. It would be, but if the State, in pursuance of an act of Congress regulating interstate commerce, undertook to seize the article and could plead in justification of its seizure an act of Congress regulating interstate commerce, it would not be a violation of the Constitution. The only reason why it would be a violation of the Constitution for a State to do the thing would be because the Constitution had vested in Congress the power, and the State could exercise the power only when permitted by an act of Congress to exercise it.

Congress has just as much power to prescribe that the termination of an interstate transaction shall be at the State line as it has to prescribe that it shall cease at the consignee's door. The only reason the Supreme Court ever held otherwise was because Congress had not passed any act regulating interstate commerce upon this subject in such a way as to give the courts the right so to decide.

I do not want to argue the case. I did not open my mouth when the bill was pending before the Senate; but I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, I do not see how the mere accident that the regulation of interstate commerce by the Congress of the United States, the exercise of a power vested in Congress happening to be aidful to the States in the exercise of their constitutional reserved police power, makes the exercise of the power vested in Congress unconstitutional or even subject to the suspicion of being unconstitutional. To my mind that should not be the case. I think wherever Congress in the exercise of its power to regulate interstate commerce can exercise the power so as to be aidful and helpful to the States in the exercise of their police powers, that it ought to do so, and wherever possible not exercise it so as to restrict and restrain the States in the exercise of their police powers.

One more thought and I am done. It has seemed to me always that the decisions of the courts in the beginning upon this subject were wrong, because it has been a part of the history of the English-speaking people, from the beginning of time, that lotteries, games, gypsies, liquor selling, and things of that kind were matters of police regulation. The original mistake made was when the Supreme Court took the position that liquor was not, because of the very nature of it, subject to the reserved police powers of the States and undertook to exempt it from the reserved police powers of the States by declaring it to be a subject of interstate-commerce regulation.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I am a believer in the right of the people to govern themselves in their localities. I am, therefore, in sympathy with the principles underlying this bill. When it came up for passage I was in favor of its passage. I have had no occasion to change my views, but we are confronted here this afternoon by a message from the President of the United States, who is himself a great lawyer, and by an opinion of the Attorney General of the United States, which we have had no opportunity to read. I am of the opinion that this message and this opinion should challenge the attention of the Members of this body, inasmuch as they challenge the constitutionality of this measure. Therefore I move that the further consideration of the message be postponed until to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock, to the end that the opinion of the Attorney General may be printed in the RECORD and that the Members of this body may have an opportunity to read the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves that the further consideration of the veto message of the President of the United States be postponed until 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to make the point of order that under the present proceedings such a motion is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is constrained to overrule the point of order.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am sorry that that motion has been made. I can generally agree with whatever the Senator from Indiana proposes, but this bill was passed on Tuesday a week or so ago; it was in the House then until the following Monday, and it has been held in the President's office until almost the last moment. If it goes over until to-morrow for consideration we might as well abandon any attempt to pass it at this session of Congress.

I know that is not at all the purpose of the Senator from Indiana, but a vote to postpone consideration now is a vote to defeat this measure. I hope that no friend of the bill will be willing to have its consideration go over until to-morrow. It has been discussed pro and con, and every Senator, I assume, has his mind made up as to what he will do in regard to it. On the motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana if he would change the hour from 2 to 12 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. KERN. I will change it to any hour that will suit the convenience of Senators. I presume that then, at least, an abstract of the opinion of the Attorney General will be printed in the newspapers to-morrow morning.

Mr. SMOOT. It will be printed not only in the newspapers, but printed in the RECORD. I believe it will be very much better, if the motion is to prevail, to fix the hour at 12 o'clock rather than at 2.

Mr. KERN. I am entirely willing to change the hour to 10 o'clock in the morning, if it is so desired. I have no purpose to interfere in any way with the passage of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think the motion is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana that the further consideration of the veto message be postponed until to-morrow. On that motion the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to inquire whether the hour is fixed at 12 o'clock or 2 o'clock?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is for the Senator from Indiana to determine.

Mr. KERN. I will change the motion so as to make it 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, is the motion debatable?

Mr. LODGE. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not debatable.

Mr. PERCY. A motion to lay aside the question until 12 o'clock to-morrow is not debatable? Under what rule, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, is it not debatable?

Mr. LODGE. I will say, on reflection, that I think the motion is debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair spoke inadvertently, and will say that, in the opinion of the Chair, it is a debatable motion.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I have no desire to delay a vote upon this measure, and I shall vote against the motion to postpone it until to-morrow. I voted against the bill on its passage here because I thought it neither constitutional nor needed to accomplish the purpose which is sought to be accomplished by it, and I shall vote in favor of sustaining the veto.

Liquor is not a contraband of commerce, whatever it may become under changed conditions of public sentiment. Until it becomes a contraband of commerce the regulation of its transportation from State to State appertains exclusively to Congress. The States can make it a contraband of commerce or they can at least go a long way toward that end by passing laws making the possession or use of it a misdemeanor. In my judgment that is the end toward which those who favor this kind of legislation should direct their efforts. They would obtain in that way what is sought to be obtained here. They would obtain it by laws clearly constitutional instead of by laws of at least most doubtful constitutionality.

Without desiring to discuss the measure, those are the reasons which led me to vote against it and which will lead me to vote to sustain the veto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], but I understand he takes the same view of the matter that I do, and therefore I will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 71, as follows:

YEAS—10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the question, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?—the yeas are 63, the nays are 21. More than two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative, the bill is passed.

AMENDMENT TO FOOD AND DRUGS ACT.

Mr. OLIVER. I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 22526) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1906.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference on that bill. The question is, Shall the conference report be agreed to?

Mr. OLIVER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] wishes to be heard on the conference report.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I said a moment ago when this matter was temporarily before the Senate that I was not able to agree with the conference report. In the year 1906 the pure-food act was passed. The purpose of that law was to insure purity of food and drugs and to prevent short weight. One of those sections defined the offense of misbranding. Among the acts which were to be regarded as a misbranding was one to this effect, that if the food or drugs were in package form and "the contents are stated in terms of weight or measure, they are not plainly and correctly stated on the outside of the package."

As a matter of experience, it developed that in placing food and other articles in packages it sometimes happened that there would not be the exact weight or the exact amount. An effort was made to change this law. A bill was introduced in the House which provided, in effect, that the section which I have just read from the law of 1906 should have added to it this proviso:

Provided, That reasonable variations shall be permitted and tolerances shall be established by rules and regulations made in accordance with the provisions of this act.

It was contended that the law, as it then stood, was so strict that it was not possible, or at least easy, to comply with its provisions. The bill passed the House.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. OLIVER. He is under a misapprehension as to the original act. The original act simply provided that if packages were branded, the brands should be corrected. The House bill sought to remedy this by providing that all packages should be branded and then followed the toleration clause.

The command that all packages should be branded is not in the existing law. The purpose of amending the law was to make it more strict and to compel all packages to be branded. Then followed the toleration clause.

Mr. POMERENE. I read the exact words from the act itself. On page 3 of the act it is provided—

That for the purposes of this act an article shall be deemed to be misbranded in the case of drugs—

I will not stop to read that part of the act. The part to which I wish to call attention is on page 4, in the case of food. I omit the first and second paragraphs because they are not pertinent to the question before the Senate. The third method of misbranding was as follows:

That if in package form and the contents are stated in terms of weight or measure, they are not plainly and correctly stated on the outside of the package.

It was attempted to amend this section and the proposed amendment read as follows:

Third. If in package form the quantity of the contents do not plainly and conspicuously mark on the outside of the package in terms of weight or measure or numerical amount: Provided, however, That reasonable variations shall be permitted and tolerances shall be established by rules and regulations made in accordance with the provisions of this act.

In the form it passed the House and came to the Senate the matter was before the Committee on Manufactures, of which the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] is chairman. The proviso as adopted in the House was stricken out by the recommendation of the committee and the following language substituted therefor:

Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to establish rules and regulations permitting reasonable variations where, in his judgment, exactness is impracticable, and shall keep a record thereof: Provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to articles in packages or containers when the retail price of such article is 6 cents or less.

Mr. President, I may say in passing that the amendment as it was reported to the Senate by an inadvertence did not read exactly as it had been agreed upon, in this, that it exempted from the provisions of the act all articles which sold at retail at 6 cents or less. What the committee agreed upon was that those articles should be exempted which sold for less than 6 cents. But that is not, perhaps, material to the question which I am about to suggest.

As this amendment was proposed by the committee it was adopted by the Senate, and then a conference was called and the amendment of the Senate was disagreed to. The committee of conference agreed to a proposition which is neither the one adopted in the House nor the one favored by the Senate. As they report it out of conference now it reads as follows:

Provided, however, That reasonable variances shall be permitted and tolerances and exemptions as to small packages and containers shall be established by rules and regulations made in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Now, note, please, the purpose of the pure-food act in the first instance was to secure pure food and correct weights and measures. That in experience, it seems, was regarded as too exacting. We can recognize the fact that in putting up cereals or flour much of it, particularly cereals, is put up by machinery, and it is not always possible to get the exact weight. There may be variations due to climatic conditions in the administration of this law that ought in all reason to be taken care of. But I submit that when the consumer buys a pound package he is entitled to a pound of weight as a matter of right, and that when the manufacturer puts up and sells the package he ought to sell a pound in weight.

But now it is sought to change this law so as to give to him as a matter of right reasonable variations from the brands he places upon his package. My contention is that while it is not always right that he should be compelled to have the exact measure or the exact weight, when we allow any variations from that weight it ought to be as a matter of sufferance and not as a matter of right.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER. I should like the Senator from Ohio to point out to me where he has it as a matter of right. I can not understand how this language can be twisted in any way except to allow reasonable variations or tolerances or exemptions upon application to the board, which consists of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator's question anticipates my argument somewhat. If he will bear with me just a moment, I will point it out. The language of the original bill as it passed the House is that "reasonable variations shall be allowed and tolerances shall be established." The Senate provides that in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture he is authorized to make rules where in his judgment exactness is not practicable; in other words, whether the rule should be adopted or not, should be lodged with the Government and not with the manufacturer.

The conference report goes even beyond the bill as it passed the Senate. Under the provisions of this conference report it places it within the power of the board which is designated by the law to formulate these rules to except anything that they see fit. This board, as I stated, is to be composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

It was urged on behalf of the manufacturers that all packages which sold at retail for 10 cents or less should be excepted from the provisions of the law. It was the judgment of the Committee on Manufactures of the Senate that that limitation should be made 5 cents, and we agree upon the language that it should apply to any packages which were less than 6 cents. But now note the language. Under this law, if the conference report is adopted, first, reasonable variations shall be permitted to the manufacturers as a matter of right, tolerances shall be established, but, more than that, this board has the right to establish any exemptions that it may see fit, because the language reads:

And tolerances and exemptions as to small packages shall be established by rules and regulations.

I can understand when there is a package, for instance, of flavors which sells for 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 cents there should be certain variations and there perhaps should be certain exceptions from the general rule. It does not even limit it to 10 cents. The manufacturers would have been contented if there had been an exception of all packages below 10 cents; but under this language as adopted by the conference committee they could exempt all cereals, they could exempt all flour, if they saw fit.

We are delegating to this commission absolutely the power to regulate this subject. It seems to me that fundamentally Congress is the power that should control this subject, and it should not be delegated except in the very narrow limit to the commission which is provided in the pure-food act.

It seems to me that under these circumstances it would have been much wiser to have adopted the provisions in the Senate bill which, where you find that it is not practicable to insist that a pound package shall have every ounce or every grain called for, would leave it to the administrative department to fix the rules within the limits laid down here, and hem that department in by certain exceptions.

Suppose this board in its wisdom sees fit to say a 50-pound sack of flour may absorb a given amount of moisture in a dry climate and a further amount of moisture in a wet climate, and this board says, "Well, we will not make this apply to flour, we will not have it apply to crackers, we will not have it apply to cereals." It seems to me that you are giving to the board a power which will, or could at least, defeat the very purpose of the law.

Dr. Wiley appeared before the committee and made a suggestion which, I think, has much in it in this, that he suggested many of these variations could be avoided if the package was made slightly in excess of the weight branded upon the package.

Mr. President, my thought is, first, that if there are any exceptions to be made under this rule Congress shall so provide that when it comes to the administration of the law rules can be adopted by the department to apply to each particular article, such as flour or cereals or crackers or what not. But I do not believe that it is the part of wisdom for the Congress to simply turn over absolutely to this commission the full power to control not only the administration, but what is in fact the legislation upon this subject.

I understand, of course, that I am not speaking technically, because the department, as has been held by our Supreme Court, have the right, under proper authority of Congress, to provide reasonable regulations with reference to certain matters which are in fact administrative.

For that reason, I believe that we ought to insist upon the amendments adopted by the Senate. If we can not agree, I should prefer to see this matter temporarily defeated, and let us take it up and see whether we can not place it in such form as will do even and exact justice both to the manufacturers and to the consumers. This is giving, it seems to me, entire discretion to the commission, which we ought not to grant.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is fighting a phantom in this case. I am free to confess that I very much prefer the bill as it was reported to the Senate; I think it expresses the idea of the law better than does the bill as it came from conference; but the conferees on the part of the House differed with us. There was perhaps some pride of authorship connected with it, and the conferees on the part of the Senate yielded to that, so far as the language is concerned; but, in my opinion, they accomplish the purpose of the bill just as fully and completely as they would have done by having the bill adopted as it came from the Senate committee.

The original bill—and I shall be very brief in stating its purpose—provided that if packages should be branded, the brands must be true and correct. That is the provision in a few words.

If in package form, and the contents are stated in terms of weight or measure, they are not plainly and correctly stated on the outside of the package.

The intent of this bill is to go further, and where goods are sold in package form to say that they must be branded, and, of course, they must be branded correctly; but realizing the difficulty of obtaining absolutely correct or net measure in all respects, it is provided:

That reasonable variations shall be permitted, and tolerances shall be established by rules and regulations made in accordance with the provisions of this act.

The Senate committee thought that this would be better expressed by lodging the responsibility in the Secretary of Agriculture to make rules and regulations. So they provided:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to establish rules and regulations permitting reasonable variations where in his judgment exactness is impracticable, and shall keep a record thereof.

To obviate the difficulty of applying it to packages of small value they provided:

That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to articles in packages or containers when the retail price of such article is 6 cents or less.

It was intended to be "less than 6 cents." That is a clerical error. The conference committee has provided simply—

That reasonable variations shall be permitted, and tolerance, and also exemptions, as to small packages shall be established by rules and regulations made in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act.

Section 3 of this act lodges the responsibility of making rules and regulations in a board consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

I say, Mr. President, if we can not lodge the responsibility for such things as this in a board consisting of men of the eminence that men must have attained to be appointed to Cabinet positions, we are in a very bad case. I am willing to allow it, and I think everybody else will be.

I have received many telegrams from people who are insistent upon this legislation, advising me that they are satisfied with the bill as it comes from the conference committee. I have just received a telegram within a half hour from the lady who is chairman of the food committee of the Consumers' League, who were insistent upon having the House provisions inserted instead of the Senate amendment. Mrs. Lakey telegraphs as follows:

Hon. GEORGE T. OLIVER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Accept tolerance clause, weights measures bill, quoted in your letter February 26.

ALICE LAKEY, Chairman Food Committee.

In my letter to her I informed her of the provisions of the conference committee report.

Mr. President, I think this bill accomplishes its purpose; I think it accomplishes the same result that was provided by the Senate amendment, and I hope the Senate will see fit to adopt the report.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that at 6 o'clock the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that at 6 o'clock the Senate stand at recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. OLIVER. In case this measure is not completed at that time that request will not displace it, I suppose?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. OLIVER. I hope it will be completed long before 6 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection the request of the Senator from Utah is agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, were it not that I am a member of the Committee on Manufactures and feel, therefore, a certain responsibility for legislation of this character, I would not detain the Senate a moment, but inasmuch as the question has arisen I feel that it is my duty to state my opinion with regard to the work of the conference committee.

In my judgment the bill as it has been reported by the conference committee would not be a valid law if it were enacted. I was not satisfied with the Senate amendment, as my associates upon the committee know. I thought it ventured very near at least to forbidden ground, but this proposal that we have before us is plainly invalid. We declare that every package shall be branded with its contents in weight, measure, or numerical count. Then we say that three men—eminent men, it is true—shall be authorized to exempt small packages from the operation of the law.

What is a "small package"? I do not think there is a Senator here who will affirm that we have given in this proposed proviso a guide to the board that will enable them to act within the law. There is no such thing absolutely as a "small package." A package may weigh one pound or it may weigh a hundred pounds, depending upon the character of its contents.

Mr. BACON. I will call the Senator's attention, if he will permit me, to the fact that there is a standard of smallness very generally recognized, to wit, as small as a piece of chalk. That is recognized as a standard of smallness.

Mr. CUMMINS. That would be just as definite as is this; but I am quite sure that if the matter should ever be decided by any court it would be held that we could not invest the board constituted here or named here with the authority to exempt small packages. Therefore we ought not to do it. We ought to pass a law that would accomplish the purpose that we have in view.

I believe, and I know the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] believes, that we ought to insist upon a legislative ascertainment and declaration of the packages that are to be exempt from the operation of the law.

Moreover, we authorized the board to grant tolerance as to small packages. I do not know what a "tolerance" is so far as the scope or the execution of the law is concerned. I have never been able to discover what the word "tolerance" means in this bill, nor do I believe there is any Senator here who can define the word "tolerance." We say that the three Secretaries may grant tolerances. What are "tolerances"?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I understand that the word is used in the sense that insubstantial variations will be tolerated or overlooked.

Mr. CUMMINS. However, Mr. President, we have already authorized "reasonable variations." That is somewhat indefinite, and yet I make no objection to that; but the provision as reported by the conference is as follows—and I will read it according to the punctuation that is found in the report itself:

That reasonable variation shall be permitted—

That is a declaration of the law, and I do not question its propriety—and tolerances and also exemptions as to small packages shall be established by rules and regulations made in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act.

I know that the Senator from Pennsylvania desires a bill that when enacted will remedy the evils which have been shown to exist, but I very much fear that if we enact this bill into law we will have jumped from the frying pan into the fire. I think our law will fail even of the purposes that it now accomplishes, and therefore I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that he recall the report of the committee of conference and see if, upon further suggestion to the members of the conference committee from the House, they can not agree upon some rule or guide that can be recognized and enforced.

Mr. KERN and other Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I do not like to object to requests which Senators desire to make, but we are going to take a recess at 6 o'clock. I do not know if there are other Senators who wish to speak on the pending measure. If not, I think we are ready for a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. [Putting the question.]

Mr. POMERENE. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report is agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, do I understand the conference report on the pending measure has been agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report has been agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. I called for a division, and immediately some one else rose and addressed the Chair. I should like——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear any request for a division. The Chair was watching the proceedings pretty carefully.

Mr. POMERENE. I was standing right back here and called for a division at once.

OKANOGAN RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 8575) to authorize the town of Okanogan, Wash., to construct and maintain a footbridge across the Okanogan River, and I submit a report (No. 1335) thereon.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. It is a bridge bill, and I hope to get it through at this session. It is very important.

Mr. BURTON obtained the floor.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the senior Senator from Ohio yield to his colleague?

SEAMEN IN AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. BURTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 23673.

Mr. POMERENE, Mr. KERN, and other Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is this—and I make it with no hostility to the motion of the Senator from Ohio, but because I think the matter presented by the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] should be settled before the other matter is taken up.

Mr. BURTON. I will give way immediately after my motion is acted upon.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I heard the Senator from Ohio ask for a division on the question when the Chair ruled that the conference report was accepted. I was about to ask for unanimous consent that the matter either now or later might be——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the motion made by the Senator from Ohio, and then the other matter may be taken up.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I wish to observe, respecting the motion tendered by the Senator from Ohio, that if it should prevail, it would lead to a very long discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable under the rules. The Senator from Ohio moves to take up a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 23673) to abolish the involuntary servitude imposed upon seamen in the merchant marine of the United States while in foreign ports and the involuntary servitude imposed upon the seamen of the merchant marine of foreign countries while in ports of the United States, to prevent unskilled manning of American vessels, to encourage the training of boys in the American merchant marine, for the further protection of life at sea, and to amend the laws relative to seamen.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I withdraw my observations. They had no relation to that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. I now yield, Mr. President. I think, in view of the confusion here, that I had better leave to the Chair the question of the person to whom I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Has the motion of the Senator from Ohio prevailed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been agreed to.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I was recognized some time ago——

Mr. BORAH. The question was never put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was stated from the Chair; but the Chair will observe that there has been for 10 days so much confusion in the Chamber that the business of the Senate is seriously interrupted. A Senator came to the desk to-day, within an hour, and complained that he was incorrectly recorded. The clerks oftentimes can not hear the responses distinctly. The Chair appeals to the Senate to be in order. The motion will be again put. The question is upon the motion made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BURTON. I yield to my colleague.

AMENDMENT TO FOOD AND DRUGS ACT.

Mr. POMERENE. I now move to reconsider the vote upon the conference report on House bill 22526.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say that upon the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], the Chair feels at liberty to reopen the matter and to put the question again.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I was going to suggest that course, because the Chair's attention for the moment was called to one side, and I heard the Senator from Ohio make the request for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I fully appreciate what the Chair is intending to do. I made the statement that I called for a division, and I do not like to have my word questioned in that kind of a way. I am not in the habit of making statements in public unless I feel that I am right, at least.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair trusts the Senator does not mean to apply that to the Chair. The Chair simply observed that he did not hear the motion.

Mr. POMERENE. No; but, Mr. President, the reason given by the Chair was that because of the fact that the Senator from Connecticut had made a certain statement the matter would be opened up. That was the matter to which I took exception.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether he thinks, in case we disagree to this report, there is any chance of coming anywhere near getting a report from either the Senate committee or the House committee?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I fear at this late date it can not be done. If the matter had come up a week ago I should have immediately suggested asking for a further conference, and insisting on our amendments. But at this time I doubt very much if we could get an agreement that would result in any legislation at all.

That is the way the matter stands. I prefer the bill as it was reported to the Senate. I would rather have it; but I think this, in other language, accomplishes the same purpose. It is a long step in the right direction, and is legislation that is very much needed by the public. I think we ought to adopt the conference report as it stands.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator one more question. Is the Department of Agriculture to determine which of the small packages can go without the stamp?

Mr. OLIVER. In each case that is to be done after inquiry and investigation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, in order to be exact, it leaves it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to except it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. POMERENE. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRIGGS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to inquire whether the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. CHILTON. Then I will withhold my vote, as I have a pair with that Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS (after having voted in the affirmative). I find that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], with whom I am paired, is absent. In ignorance of that fact I voted. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have already announced my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KERN (after having voted in the negative). I voted thinking that my pair, Senator BRADLEY, of Kentucky, had voted. I find he has not. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and will permit my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—28.

Brandegee	Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Root

So the report was agreed to.

MARY CATHCART RANSDELL.

Mr. BRIGGS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back Senate resolution 431, with an amendment, and I ask the attention of the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] to it. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mary Cathcart Ransdell, widow of Daniel M. Ransdell, late Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, a sum equal to 12 months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The amendment was, before the word "months," to strike out "12" and insert "6."

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the committee will not be adopted and that the resolution as originally presented will be adopted.

The resolution provided that the widow of the late Sergeant at Arms should be paid a year's salary, under the same rule under which widows of Members of the Senate are paid a year's salary. It seems to me that in these times, when we are voting away money by scores of millions of dollars for doubtful purposes, in a case of this kind, where a servant of the Senate has died—a man who served the Senate faithfully for 13 years, a gallant soldier, who has left a family in circumstances in which they need this money—there ought to be no quibble about the Senate generously voting to this woman a year's salary.

If the service had been short, as in the case of the Sergeant at Arms of the other House, who died after a few months' service, it would have been different. But here is a long service. No man here ever knew a knightlier, gentler, sweeter character than that of Mr. Ransdell. It seems to me that in appreciation of this long and faithful and courteous service there ought to be no hesitation in giving his widow this amount of money.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will ask the Senator if it is not true that during all this long service a very handsome salary has been paid?

Mr. KERN. Unquestionably that is true.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to state that it is the practice of the Senate, when an employee dies, to pay the relatives of the employee six months' salary. That rule is applied to all of the employees. I can see no reason why the same rule should not apply to an employee who receives $5,000 that is applied to an employee who receives $1,000. There is no more reason for giving the widow of Col. Ransdell a year's salary than the widow of any other employee of the Senate. I say this with as much respect and as great affection for Col. Ransdell as the Senator from Indiana or anyone else could have. It is simply for the purpose of treating the employees of the Senate and the officers of the Senate upon exactly the same basis.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas, whom I believe is a member of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, whether the rule that he has stated is a universal one. My recollection is that on more than one occasion the Senate has paid to the widows of employees a full year's salary.

Mr. BRISTOW. There have been a few exceptions made. If I remember rightly, as far as the records go—and they run back for probably half a century—there have been five exceptions. I will not state that as being absolutely accurate, but it is as clearly as I remember it.

Mr. KERN. I think it is true, I am so informed, that in the case of officers of the Senate a full year's salary has always been given.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is not correct.

Mr. KERN. When we apply the rule of reason to these things it will be difficult perhaps to find a reason for anything of the kind as that a year's salary should be given to the widow of a Member. Here is an elective officer of the Senate who served 13 years. It is an exceptional case. It would not furnish a precedent for anything that would be likely to happen in a hundred years. If gentlemen appreciate this service as it was rendered, as they claim to do, it seems to me they could not better express their sympathy than by voting this amount. It will not hurt anyone and it will, on the other hand, do a vast deal of good.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is a matter for the Senate to decide. If it wants to set the precedent of giving the widows of our deceased employees a year's salary, that is all right, but for one I am not in favor of treating the employee who receives $5,000 a year different from the employee who receives $1,000 or $2,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 6 o'clock having arrived, under the previous order of the Senate, the Senate will stand in recess until the hour of 8 o'clock.

The Senate thereupon (at 6 o'clock p. m.) took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m. on the expiration of the recess.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On February 28, 1913:

S. 6176. An act for the relief of Gibbes Lykes; and

S. 7385. An act to relinquish the claim of the United States against the grantees, their legal representatives and assigns, for timber cut on Petaca land grant.

PUBLICATION OF REVOLUTIONARY WAR RECORDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 271) to authorize the collection of the military and naval records of the Revolutionary War, with a view to their publication, which were, on page 1, line 3, after "That," to insert "within the limits of the appropriation herein made"; on page 2, line 1, to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five"; on page 2, line 2, to strike out "ten" and insert "seven"; and on page 2, line 3, after "Provided," to insert "That the aforesaid sums of money shall be expended, respectively, under the direction of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, and that they shall make to Congress each year detailed statements showing how the money herein appropriated has been expended and to whom: Provided further."

Mr. DIXON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its chief clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 271) to authorize the collection of the military and naval records of the Revolutionary War with a view to their publication, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28283) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LAMB, Mr. LEVER, and Mr. HAUGEN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28775) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. SHERLEY, and Mr. CANNON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

SEAMEN OF THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. BURTON. I understand that the naval appropriation bill is ready for consideration. I ask unanimous consent that the seaman's bill, the unfinished business, be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMOOT. Is the seaman's bill the unfinished business now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is by motion. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. O'GORMAN. What is the order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the recess was taken the Senate was engaged in the consideration of a resolution. Ordinarily that would come up, but the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] will move to take up the naval appropriation bill.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the action of the House of Representatives on the sundry civil appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28775) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, that the request of the House for a conference be granted, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. TILLMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

INTERSTATE SHIPMENT OF LIQUORS—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, when the question of passing the bill known as the Webb bill over the President's veto was up this afternoon I was called from the Chamber and had no opportunity to vote upon the bill.

Had I been present I should have voted to pass the bill the President's objections to the contrary notwithstanding.

I wanted to make that entry in the RECORD, because it is an important matter.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 28812, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 28812) making appropriation for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and the committee amendments be first considered. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; I suggest that all amendments be considered at the same time, paragraph by paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will be considered, and amendments of the committee and amendments from the floor will be entertained. The reading will be proceeded with.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the subhead "Pay of the Navy," on page 2, line 5, after the words "Naval Academy," to insert "who is hereby placed upon the same footing respecting restrictions upon allowances, including retirement, as the senior dental surgeon now at the Military Academy," so as to read:

Pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty; officers on waiting orders; officers on the retired list; clerks to paymasters at yards and stations, general storekeepers ashore and afloat, and receiving ships and other vessels; two clerks to general inspectors of the Pay Corps; one clerk to pay officer in charge of deserters' rolls; not exceeding 10 clerks to accounting officers at yards and stations; dentist at Naval Academy who is hereby placed upon the same footing respecting restrictions upon allowances, including retirement, as the senior dental surgeon now at the Military Academy.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to modify that amendment by inserting the word "now" after the word "dentist," in line 5, and in line 8, after the word "Academy," the words "who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and."

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to have the Senator explain just what this amendment does.

Mr. LODGE. Last year the naval appropriation act established a corps of dental surgeons in the Navy. It was a House provision, agreed to by the Senate, and became a law. At Annapolis there is a dentist who has been there for many years, who has done the entire work which, at the Military Academy at West Point, is performed by a dental surgeon regularly commissioned who has an assistant contract surgeon. He has been doing the work of two men. It was recommended by the department and agreed to by both committees that he should be retained as a dental surgeon. He could not enter before, because a provision about the corps limited the age of entrance naturally and properly to young men. This is to promote him to the Corps of Dental Surgeons. It was so provided in the act. That was the intention of Congress. By some interpretation of the department they have managed to prevent the intention of Congress from being carried out and have left him, after many years of service, without the position which Congress intended to confer and thought they had conferred upon him as a mere matter of justice, after so many years of service.

Mr. BRISTOW. I understand when the bill passed the Senate it provided for retirement at the age of 70. That was changed in conference, was it not?

Mr. LODGE. It was changed to 65.

Mr. BRISTOW. Changed to 65?

Mr. LODGE. I think so—the House provision.

Mr. BRISTOW. I thought it was changed to 62.

Mr. LODGE. I am not perfectly certain.

Mr. BRISTOW. The principal objection I have to these dental surgeons is that they are retired at an early age, and it simply loads the retired list of the Navy with men who are perfectly capable of attending to the kind of business they are employed to do. I do not intend to contend against this man being incorporated within the corps, because I think if he has been there for years——

Mr. LODGE. For many years.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is a very proper thing to do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We can not hear the Senator from Kansas over on this side.

Mr. BRISTOW. I was trying to find out at what age these dental surgeons are retired. When the Senate passed the bill last year it fixed the age of retirement at 70 for the dentists in the Navy. I think there was a radical change made in the conference, and that is what the Senator from Massachusetts was looking up.

Mr. LODGE. The retirement is the same as for officers of the Medical Corps of the Navy.

Mr. BRISTOW. I can not see why a dentist or physician should be retired at the age of 62 years and go upon retired pay. I should like to move to amend by inserting after "Academy," in line 8, the following:

That all dental surgeons shall be retired at the age of 70.

Mr. LODGE. I would suggest to the Senator that later in the bill, under "Bureau of Medicine and Surgery," there will be offered an amendment which is being prepared by the Senator from North Carolina and which is approved by the committee, treating the corps generally, and his amendment will be better there than at this point, which applies only to this one man.

Mr. BRISTOW. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 8, to strike out:

Hereafter the service of a midshipman at the United States Naval Academy, or that of a cadet at the United States Military Academy, who may hereafter be appointed to the United States Naval Academy or to the United States Military Academy, shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer in the Navy or in the Marine Corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 15, to strike out:

That so much of an act entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps," approved March 3, 1899, which reads as follows: "and that all officers, including warrant officers, who have been or may be appointed to the Navy from civil life shall, on the date of appointment, be credited for computing their pay, with five years' service," shall not apply to any person entering the Navy from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 15, to insert:

That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow in the accounts of disbursing officers of the Navy all payments heretofore made by them in accordance with orders or regulations of the Secretary of the Navy for commutation of subsistence to members of the Nurse Corps of the Navy at the rate therein specified, and that the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to hereafter allow members of the Nurse Corps of the Navy 75 cents per diem in lieu of subsistence when subsistence in kind is not furnished by the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 2, to insert:

That all officers of the Navy who, since the 3d day of March, 1899, have been advanced or may hereafter be advanced in grade or rank pursuant to law shall be allowed the pay and allowances of the higher grade or rank from the dates stated in their commissions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 6, to insert:

That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow in the settlement of the accounts of disbursing officers the amounts disallowed against certain officers of the Navy on account of promotion under the opinion of the Attorney General (27 Op., p. 251); and to reimburse the officers who have refunded to the United States the amount disallowed, in accordance with said opinion, and to pay them out of the appropriation "Pay of the Navy."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 15, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to make such readjustments as may be necessary to equalize the pay of classified employees of the navy yards and stations with the pay of employees of other Government departments performing similar duties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 20, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Paymaster John W. Morse, United States Navy, the sum of $46,491.95, being the amount stolen from United States funds by Pay Clerk Edward V. Lee, United States Navy, and charged against the accounts of the said John W. Morse, paymaster, on the books of the Treasury Department.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia and Mr. BRISTOW rose.

Mr. LODGE. I will explain that amendment if the Senator desires.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is what I want.

Mr. LODGE. This is a case which Senators may remember, where a paymaster's clerk robbed the safe at Habana and took some $50,000, a considerable portion of which was recovered. The matter went into court and the paymaster was entirely exonerated. It was like an ordinary case of robbery. He broke into the safe and took the money in the absence of the paymaster. The matter was brought up in a separate bill on the recommendation of the Navy Department, and it was passed by the Senate. It has been reported favorably by the House Naval Committee and is pending in the House. It is a mere matter of bookkeeping. It is to relieve this man from the charge against him on the books.

Mr. BRISTOW. What relation does the pay clerk have to the paymaster? Is the paymaster in charge of the office himself and is the clerk simply his assistant, or does the clerk take charge of a certain office under the general supervision of the paymaster?

Mr. LODGE. The paymaster's clerk is merely his assistant. He is not, I think, a bonded officer.

Mr. PERKINS. He is detailed from the department.

Mr. LODGE. He is detailed from the department. This man, as I said, opened the safe in the absence of the paymaster and robbed it and escaped on shore in Cuba.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have been told that in a number of instances the paymaster's clerk is the real paymaster and the paymaster himself gives little attention to the business.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no. This was on board ship, and the paymaster is there himself. He was not there, but he had taken every precaution. It was so found by the court. It was all tried by the court.

Mr. BRISTOW. I can see that the paymaster might be wholly blameless.

Mr. LODGE. The court found him wholly blameless and recommended that this credit be given on the books.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 8, after line 3, to insert:

The Auditor for the Navy Department is hereby authorized and directed to credit to the account of Pay Director John N. Speel, United States Navy, the sum of $263.54, now standing charged against him on the books of the Treasury Department, on account of an advance made by him to Paymaster's Clerk Edward V. Lee, United States Navy, who deserted from the service before the amount could be deducted from his salary.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Why was the advance made before it was due?

Mr. LODGE. This is a similar case, and this is the statement in reference to it:

STATEMENT OF PAY DIRECTOR JOHN N. SPEEL.

On the 23d of September, 1910, Paymaster's Clerk Edward V. Lee presented his orders for duty on board the U. S. S. Georgia and requested the sum of $500 advance. As it was my duty, under Naval Regulations (par. 1088), to make advances to officers of the Navy on their orders to sea duty, the amount requested was advanced in the usual manner. Mr. Lee deserted before he had served sufficient time to earn the amount advanced, less the allotment registered by him. The advance made was authorized by the regulations of the Navy, and I request to be relieved of the amount now standing against me on the books of the Treasury Department, in the sum of $263.54. This will require no appropriation whatever by Congress, and I simply ask that the Auditor of the Navy Department be authorized to credit my account with the amount above stated. Since the act of June 24, 1910, went into effect, recognizing paymaster's clerks as officers, a separate order was not deemed necessary.

JOHN N. SPEEL,
Pay Director United States Navy.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was not a voluntary advance, but one that he was obliged to make under the regulations?

Mr. LODGE. He was obliged to make it by law, and under the regulations which provide for advances to officers on sea service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 1, it is proposed to insert:

The President is authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint William E. Farrell, late a midshipman and ensign in the United States Navy, and to place him on the retired list as such with three-fourths pay to his credit: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to allow the payment of any salary or emolument to said William E. Farrell, except those that may accrue from the date of this act.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I propose this amendment with the approval of the chairman of the Naval Committee. The matter has been thoroughly investigated by the Naval Committee; and I send to the Secretary's desk the report made by that committee and ask that the Secretary read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

William E. Farrell was appointed midshipman January 29, 1904. He entered the Naval Academy and remained there until December 2, 1907, when he developed inflammatory rheumatism and afterwards tuberculosis of the left knee. After several operations at Annapolis, he was sent to Las Animas, Colo., where he is at present under the care of the Government, although out of the service. He is now on crutches and will always be crippled. He went into the service in good health, and his ailment was acquired while in line of duty. The essential facts in the case are stated in the following letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy:

JANUARY 20, 1912.

Referring to your letter of January 12, 1912, inclosing a bill (S. 4331) for the relief of William E. Farrell, and requesting for the committee the opinion of the department thereon, I have the honor to inform you that William E. Farrell was appointed a midshipman at the United States Naval Academy on June 29, 1904, and his resignation, while a member of the first or senior class, was accepted, to take effect January 18, 1910, by reason of the recommendation of the Surgeon General of the Navy, on the report of a board of medical survey in the case of Mr. Farrell, held in October, 1909, which board found him unfit for the naval service on account of tuberculosis of the left knee and femur, and lungs," contracted in the line of duty.

There is no provision of law which covers the conditions existing in the case under consideration, and while the department realizes the fact that the disease was contracted in line of duty, yet it feels constrained not to give its approval to special measures, particularly in view of the fact that the object sought is to place upon the retired list of the Navy one who is not now connected with the service.

Faithfully, yours,

BEEKMAN WINTHROP,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

It will be noted that the ground of the withholding of approval by the department is that there is no provision of law which covers the conditions existing in this case and that the beneficiary of the bill is not now connected with the service. Attention is called to the fact that the reason why Farrell is not now connected with the service is the disability contracted in line of duty, which is the very ground upon which the relief is sought.

A precedent for special legislation in a similar case is found in the case of Cadet J. Randolph Peyton, who was put upon the retired list by S. 7764, Sixtieth Congress, second session, under circumstances substantially similar to those in this case.

The committee recommends that the bill be favorably reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which embodies a provision reported by the House committee, but which went out in that body on a point of order, owing to a defect in the wording of the clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 3, after the numerals "$1,000,000," it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That the present construction of the law applying to leave of absence of per annum employees of the classified service of the clerical, drafting, inspection, messenger, and watch force at navy yards and naval stations shall hereafter apply to per diem employees of the classified service at such yards and stations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the subhead "Bureau of Navigation," on page 9, line 22, after the word "same," to insert "advertising for," so as to read:

Recruiting: Expenses of recruiting for the naval service; rent of rendezvous and expenses of maintaining the same; advertising for obtaining men and apprentice seamen; actual and necessary expenses in lieu of mileage to officers on duty with traveling recruiting parties, $130,000.

Mr. LODGE. The word "and" ought to be added after the word "for," and the semicolon stricken out, so that it would read "advertising for and obtaining." I move that amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, in the item of appropriation for expenses of recruiting for the naval service, on page 10, line 18, after the word "payment," to insert:

Provided, That authority is hereby granted to employ the services of an advertising agency in advertising for recruits under such terms and conditions as are most advantageous to the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 15, after the word "same," to strike out "$23,750" and insert "$25,250"; in line 16, after the words "international law," to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$2,000"; and on page 15, line 2, after the name "Rhode Island," to strike out "$26,850" and insert "$28,850," so as to read:

Naval War College, Rhode Island: For maintenance of the Naval War College on Coasters Harbor Island, and care of grounds for same, $25,250; services of a lecturer on international law, $2,000; services of civilian lecturers, rendered at the War College, $300; care and preservation of the library, including the purchase, binding, and repair of books of reference and periodicals, $1,300: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for clerical, inspection, drafting, and messenger service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, shall not exceed $10,250. In all, Naval War College, Rhode Island, $28,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Ordnance" on page 17, line 7, after the word "proposals," to insert:

Provided, That this restriction shall not apply to purchases of shells or projectiles of an experimental nature or to be used for experimental purposes and paid for from the appropriation "Experiments, Bureau of Ordnance": Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make emergency purchases of war material abroad: And provided further, That when such purchases are made abroad, this material shall be admitted free of duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 8, after the word "issue," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$150,000," so as to read:

For replacing Mark VI 6-inch guns with Mark VIII guns and repairing and modernizing the Mark VI guns for issue, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 16, after "$3,850,000," to insert "to be available until expended," so as to read:

Ammunition for ships of the Navy: For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ammunition for issue to ships, $3,850,000, to be available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Equipment," in the item of appropriation for equipment of vessels, on page 21, line 9, after the word "service," to insert "including the purchase of land as necessary sites for radio shore stations," so as to read:

Service and supplies for coast signal service, including the purchase of land as necessary sites for radio shore stations, instruments and apparatus, supplies, and technical books and periodicals required to carry on experimental and research work in radiotelegraphy at the naval radio laboratory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 14, after "$4,925,000," to insert "$75,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the survey and investigation by experimental tests of coal in Alaska for use on board ships of the United States Navy, and for report upon coal and coal fields available for the production of coal for the use of ships of the United States Navy or any vessel of the United States," so as to read:

Coal and transportation: Coal and other fuel for steamers' and ships' use, and other equipment purposes, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling the same, and for the general maintenance of naval coaling depots and coaling plants, water for all purposes on board naval vessels, including the expenses of transportation and storage of the same, $4,925,000, $75,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the survey and investigation by experimental tests of coal in Alaska for use on board ships of the United States Navy, and for report upon coal and coal fields available for the production of coal for the use of ships of the United States Navy or any vessel of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from California will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, line 14, after the word "same," it is proposed to strike out "$4,925,000" and insert "$5,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the subhead "Public works, Bureau of Yards and Docks," on page 27, line 10, after the word "crane," to insert "(limit of cost not exceeding"; in line 11, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$100,000"; and in line 15, after the name "Virginia," to strike out "$462,500" and insert "$252,500," so as to read:

Navy yard, Norfolk, Va.: Railroad tracks, extensions, $10,000; repairs, buildings, St. Helena, $25,000; improvements to water front, to continue, $50,000; paving and grading, to continue, $10,000; heating system, extension, $5,000; 150-ton crane (limit of cost not exceeding $100,000); dredging, to continue, $40,000; water system, extensions, $7,500; sewer system, extension, $5,000; lavatories and toilet facilities, $5,000; compressed-air system, extensions, $5,000; in all, navy yard, Norfolk, Va., $252,500.

Mr. LODGE. That amendment is incorrectly printed.

Mr. SWANSON. I offer the amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 10, after the word "crane," it is proposed to insert "(limit of cost not exceeding $300,000), $100,000."

Mr. LODGE. That is right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. On line 15, page 27, instead of the sum being $252,500, it ought to be $262,500. I move that amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, in line 15, of the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out "$252,000" and to insert "$262,500."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 27, line 19, after the word "berths," to insert "(to cost not exceeding $300,000)"; in line 20, after "$150,000," to insert "power plant equipment and distributing system, to extend, $35,000"; and in line 21, after the words "in all," to strike out "$159,000" and insert "$194,000," so as to read:

Navy yard, Charleston, S. C.: Paving and grading, to continue, $1,000; locomotive and crane shed, $5,000; remodeling dispensary, building No. 19, $3,000; foward torpedo boat berths (to cost not exceeding $300,000), $150,000; power plant equipment and distributing system, to extend, $35,000; in all, $194,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 13, to insert:

Naval station, Narragansett Bay, R. I.: For purchase of land for extension of landing facilities, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 4, to insert:

Marine barracks, Isthmus of Panama: Erection of barracks, quarters, and other buildings for accommodation of marines, $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Medicine and Surgery," on page 33, line 9, after the word "marines," to strike out "Provided, That hereafter no sites shall be procured or hospital buildings erected or extensions to existing hospitals made unless hereafter authorized by Congress," and insert "Provided, That the sum of $70,000 is appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the building of a new power plant at the Naval Hospital, Chelsea, Mass., said sum of money to be paid into the Treasury from the proceeds of sale of land authorized by the naval act of June 29, 1906," so to read:

Section 4810 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4810. The Secretary of the Navy shall procure at suitable places proper sites for Navy hospitals, and if the necessary buildings are not procured with the site, shall cause such to be erected, having due regard to economy, and giving preference to such plans as with most convenience and least cost will admit of subsequent additions, when the funds permit and circumstances require; and shall provide, at one of the establishments, a permanent asylum for disabled and decrepit Navy officers, seamen, and marines: Provided, That the sum of $70,000 is appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the building of a new power plant at the Naval Hospital, Chelsea, Mass., said sum of money to be paid into the Treasury from the proceeds of sale of land authorized by the naval act of June 29, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer an amendment to come in on page 35, after line 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, after line 3, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That a Navy Dental Reserve Corps is hereby authorized to be organized and operated under the provisions of the act approved August 22, 1912, providing for the organization and operation of a Navy Medical Reserve Corps, and differing therefrom in no respect other than that the qualification requirements of the appointees shall be dental surgeons and graduates of reputable schools of medicine or dentistry instead of "graduates of reputable schools of medicine," and so many of said appointees may be ordered to temporary active service as the Secretary of the Navy may deem necessary to the health and efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, providing the whole number of both Regular Corps and Reserve Corps dental surgeons in active service shall not exceed, in time of peace, 1 to each 1,500 of the said personnel, and no dental surgeon shall render service until his appointment shall have been confirmed by the Senate: Provided further, That Dental Corps officers of permanent tenure shall be appointed from the Dental Reserve Corps membership in accordance with the said provisions of the said act, and all such appointees shall be citizens of the United States between 22 and 30 years of age, of good moral character, of unquestionable professional repute, and before appointment shall pass satisfactory physical and professional examinations, and when appointed shall take rank and precedence in the same manner in all respects as in the case of appointees to the Medical Corps of the Navy, and shall receive corresponding pay and allowances and be entitled to retired pay: Provided, That their promotions shall be limited to six from the grade of assistant dental surgeon to the grade of passed assistant dental surgeon in each period of 5 years, and to three from the grade of passed assistant dental surgeon to the grade of dental surgeon in each period of 11 years.

That the provisions of the act approved August 22, 1912, which relate to the appointment of dental surgeons to the Navy Medical Reserve and Dental Corps are hereby repealed.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. If the Secretary will hand the amendment to me, I will state where I want it inserted. In the last line of the second proviso, after the word "and," insert "when they reach the age of 70 years," so that it will read "and when they reach the age of 70 years be entitled to retired pay."

Mr. PERKINS. Why should their retiring age be increased beyond that of other officers?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not think that dentists should be retired at the age of 62. Certainly, men in civil life not performing military duty, but who are attending to the ordinary affairs of life as other dentists are doing, should not be put on the retired list at the age of 62. I have been advised that some of these dentists have retired at the age of 62 and then set up offices and practiced for years whilst receiving retired pay from the Government. I do not think that such a practice is justified. This matter was taken up last year, as the Senator from California knows, and the Senate fixed the retiring age at 70 for dental surgeons.

Mr. PERKINS. Perhaps the Senate would like to have an opportunity to vote on the question again.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think it should be insisted on by the Senate.

Mr. PERKINS. So far as I can do so, I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the first paragraph of the line, after the word "and," where it appears the second time, it is proposed to insert "when they reach the age of 70 years."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PERKINS. For what purpose?

Mr. NELSON. I desire to submit a conference report on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield that the report may be submitted.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. NELSON. I present the conference report and will ask to have it taken up as soon as the naval bill is disposed of.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28180) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8, 11, 14, 22, 26, 28, 33, 38, 48, 49, 53, 57, 64, 66, 69, 77, 78, 79, 92, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 126, and 133.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 36, 37, 45, 46, 51, 52, 55, 58, 60, 61, 62, 63, 65, 67, 70, 72, 73, 74, 75, 80, 81, 82, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 94, 96, 97, 98, 99, 101, 103, 104, 106, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 114, 116, 117, 118, and 119, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the words "or city shall" and insert in lieu thereof the words "ar d City"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "; completing improvement of the channel up to the Main Street Bridge in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1333, Sixty-first Congress, third session, $235,700; in all $255,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed restore the sum stricken out, and in the first line of the amended paragraph strike out the word "Continuing" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Completing"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the sixth and seventh lines of the language proposed strike out the words "that the appropriation of $100,000 therein contained, namely," and at the end of the language proposed strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed as relieving the said Florida East Coast Railway Co. from the obligation of complying with the terms of its contract heretofore entered into with the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "session" insert the words "and subject to the conditions therein specified," and in lieu of the sum of "$1,100,000" insert "$900,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the language proposed, insert the following:

"Improving Houston Ship Channel, Texas: The Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for, or construct, two suitable dredging plants, to be used for the maintenance of the channel when completed under the existing contract authorized by the act approved June 25, 1910, to be paid for out of any unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made or authorized together with such additional appropriations as may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $200,000: Provided, That a like amount of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, being one-half of the estimated cost of said dredging plants, be contributed and furnished by the Harris County Ship Channel Navigation District, to be expended in connection with the $200,000 herein authorized to be appropriated for the purchase or construction of said dredging plants: Provided further, That before letting the contract for the construction of each dredging plant or beginning the work of its construction, said navigation district shall place to the credit and subject to the order of the Secretary of War, in a United States depository to be designated by him, the sum of $50,000, and shall satisfy him that the remainder of one-half of the cost of said dredging plant will be deposited in like manner from time to time as called for by him."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In the proposed amendment, before the words "C. B. Comstock," insert the word "General"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 42 and 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"Improving Brazos River, Tex.: Continuing improvement from Old Washington to Waco by the construction of locks and dams heretofore authorized, $250,000; continuing improvement and for maintenance by open-channel work from Velasco to Old Washington, $25,000; in all, $275,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment, before the words "C. B. Comstock," insert the word "General"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"Improving White River at Devall Bluff, Ark.: Completing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1259, Sixty-second Congress, third session, and subject to the conditions therein specified, $8,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

"Improving harbor at Arcadia, Mich.: For maintenance, including repair of the north pier, $20,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

"Improving Clinton River, Mich.: For maintenance, $10,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "$24,000, of which amount not exceeding two-thirds may be expended for the improvement of that portion of said river above and to the westward of Ogden Street Bridge, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 419, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed, insert the following: "which shall be considered extraordinary emergency work, and which may be done, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, by hired labor or otherwise, and without regard to limitation of hours"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed, insert the following: " ; completing improvement in accordance with plan numbered one in report submitted in House Document numbered thirteen hundred and nine, Sixty-second Congress, third session, $208,786; in all, $243,786"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Oregon," in the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following: "in accordance with the report submitted in House Document Numbered 13, Sixty-second Congress, first session," and omit the semicolon after the word "interest"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "channels," in the second line of the language proposed, in lieu of the word "for" insert the word "or," and in the third line, in lieu of the word "improved" insert the word "made"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agreed to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "Lynn Harbor and Saugus River, Mass., with a view to providing a channel 15 feet deep up to the bridge at East Saugus"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Creek" insert the word "Norfolk"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "Pollockville" insert the word "Pollocksville"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "Key West, Fla., for a harbor of refuge and a safe anchorage for vessels"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Bay," where it first occurs, insert the word "Florida"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "Ohio River above the dam at Louisville, Ky., with a view to protection against overflow caused by Government work"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "twenty-five" insert the word "twenty-one"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "River" insert the words "California and Arizona"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with amendment as follows: After the word "River" where it first occurs insert the word "California"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 125, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

"SEC. 8. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to receive from private parties such funds as may be contributed by them to be expended in connection with funds appropriated by the United States for any authorized work of public improvement of rivers and harbors whenever such work and expenditure may be considered by the Chief of Engineers as advantageous to the interests of navigation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 127, 128, 129, 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"SEC. 9. That in the preparation of projects under this and subsequent river and harbor acts, unless otherwise expressed, the channel depths referred to shall be understood to signify the depth at mean lower low water in tidal waters and the mean depth during the month of lowest water in the navigation season in rivers and nontidal channels, and the channel dimensions specified shall be understood to admit of such increase at the entrances, bends, sidings, and turning places as may be necessary to allow of the free movement of boats."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 131, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number "13" insert the numeral "10"; and the Senate agree to the same.

KNUTE NELSON,
WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
F. M. SIMMONS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

S. M. SPARKMAN,
JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
GEORGE P. LAWRENCE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator, Is this a final report?

Mr. NELSON. It is a final report.

Mr. BORAH. What are the amendments from which the Senate conferees have receded?

Mr. NELSON. Well, there are a number of them. The principal amendments from which we receded are seven. When the bill was put in conference the House conferees insisted that the conferees should not act upon it before those amendments were submitted to the House. I will read the amendments.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow us to proceed with the consideration of the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Idaho asked me a question.

Mr. BORAH. I will defer the question, then, until the naval bill is disposed of.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 28812) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have been so much engaged in other duties of late that I have paid no attention to the naval appropriation bill, and I now ask unanimous consent to return to page 25 that I may offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE). The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to return to page 25 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. I observe, Mr. President, that in dealing with navy yards there has been great generosity displayed toward certain yards, but painful impecuniosity toward the navy yard at Portsmouth, N. H. I was on the Naval Committee for a good many years, and I am afraid I made a mistake when I retired from it. For some reason or other the estimates for Portsmouth were very small this year. Only two items, aggregating $15,000, have found their way into the bill for that yard, while certain other navy yards have been allowed from $100,000 to $250,000.

There were only two other small items estimated for, and I move to insert them on page 25, line 21. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, line 21, after "$6,000," it is proposed to strike out "in all, $15,000" and insert the following:

Central administration building, $20,000; roadway to hospital, $7,000; in all, $42,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the subhead "Bureau of Supplies and Accounts," in the item of appropriation for provisions for the Navy, on page 36, line 4, after "$7,593,441.75," to insert "to be available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915," so as to read:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to commute rations for such general courts-martial prisoners in such amounts as seem to him proper, which may vary in accordance with the location of the naval prison, but which shall in no case exceed 30 cents per diem for each ration so commuted; and for the purchase of United States Army emergency rations as required; in all, $7,593,441.75, to be available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer an amendment on behalf of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That from and after the passage of this act all awards of contracts for provisions for the Navy shall be made by individual items, the contract for each item being awarded to the lowest responsible bidder.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, in the item of appropriation for maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, on page 36, line 23, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$520,000," and insert "$550,000," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for chemists and for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in the general storehouses, and paymasters' offices of the navy yards and naval stations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, shall not exceed $550,000; in all, $1,470,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 4, to insert:

Naval Academy dairy: For the purchase of the necessary land for the location of the Naval Academy dairy, at some point in the vicinity of Annapolis, Md., convenient for communication and for the transportation of dairy products from the location of the dairy to the Naval Academy, and for the transfer to new dairy site, and erection thereon, of buildings belonging to the present dairy, the repair and alteration of such buildings as may be found on the land to be purchased, and for all other necessary purposes connected with the establishment of a dairy on such land, $100,000: Provided, That the cost of said land shall not exceed $75,000: Provided further, That the amount appropriated for this purpose shall be treated as an advance to the midshipmen's store fund at the Naval Academy, to be ultimately repaid to the United States: And provided further, That expenditures hereunder shall be reported by the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts to the Secretary of the Navy in the same manner as now prescribed by law for the midshipmen's store fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Construction and Repair," in the item of appropriations for the construction and repair of vessels, on page 39, line 2, after the word "material," to insert:

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall deprive the Secretary of the Navy of the authority to cause the necessary repairs and preservation of the U. S. S. Constellation, Portsmouth, and Olympia: Provided further, That from and after the passage of this act all awards of contracts for provisions for the Navy shall be made by individual items; the contract for each item being awarded to the lowest responsible bidder.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment of the committee, on page 39, line 6, it is proposed to strike out:

Provided further, That from and after the passage of this act all awards of contracts for provisions for the Navy shall be made by individual items; the contract for each item being awarded to the lowest responsible bidder.

Mr. LODGE. That provision has been inserted as an amendment on page 36, after line 5. This amendment is to strike out the provision on page 39.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair observes that. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 40, after line 9, to insert:

Wrecking pontoon: For construction or purchase of a testing and wrecking pontoon for submarines, to be available until expended, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Naval Academy," at the top of page 44, to insert:

The President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, A. J. Corbesier, a swordmaster at the United States Naval Academy, to be a first lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps as an extra number, not in the line of promotion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 24 on page 43.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to insert, at the bottom of page 43, the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, after line 24, insert:

That professors who have or shall hereafter have served 25 years at the Naval Academy may, on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, be commissioned as professors of mathematics with the rank of lieutenant commander, to be additional to the number allowed by existing law: Provided, That for pay and other purposes service as an instructor or professor at the Naval Academy previous to being commissioned shall count as service in the Navy: Provided further, That 25 years of completed service at the Naval Academy shall be taken as fulfilling all legal requirements for appointment and commission, and that, for the purposes of this act, limitations as to age at the time of appointment shall not apply, nor shall age constitute a claim for retirement.

Nothing in the above provision shall operate to create a claim for back pay.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I am fortified in presenting this amendment by the opinion and letter of the Secretary of the Navy. A portion of it I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[No. 31.]

PROFESSORS AT NAVAL ACADEMY.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
Washington, January 17, 1913.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Referring to your letter transmitting, on behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, a bill (H. R. 27575) "providing that certain professors at the United States Naval Academy shall be commissioned as professors of mathematics with the rank of lieutenant commander," I have the honor to inform you that the Bureau of Navigation of this department, which has general supervision over the personnel of the Navy and, also, of Naval Academy affairs, has reported upon this bill as follows:

"(a) Four professors now at the Naval Academy would be eligible for commission on the passage of this bill, their length of service varying from 26 to 39 years.

"(b) Other civilian professors and instructors now at the academy would become eligible, if retained continuously in the service, as follows: 1 in 1919; 2 in 1925; 4 in 1928; 3 in 1929; 4 in 1931; 4 in 1933; 3 in 1934.

"(c) There are now 9 professors, 19 instructors; total 28, at the Naval Academy. The appropriations for the fiscal year 1914 provide for 6 less instructors, or a total of 22. Next year a further reduction to 16 is intended.

"A number of civilian professors and instructors will always be required at the Naval Academy as permanent assistants to certain heads of departments and to teach modern languages. At outside educational institutions provision is usually made for the retirement of professors at about 65 years of age, if they have served for 25 years or more; or after 25 years' service they may be pensioned for disability, or pensioned for the same cause after less than 25 years' service, when the disability is directly traceable to this service. Similar provision should be made for the professors at the Naval Academy who have already had long service or who may thereafter come within the same category.

"The bureau's opinion is that the bill proposed (H. R. 27575) would meet the requirements for the Naval Academy, and accordingly recommends favorable action."

The department concurs in the recommendation of the Bureau of Navigation.

Faithfully, yours, G. v. L. MEYER.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That bill is embodied in the amendment which I have offered. The purpose, Mr. President, is to improve the personnel of the instructors at the Naval Academy. It is not only my opinion, but the opinion of others interested in naval matters, that this would advance the general well-being of the Naval Academy. I trust the amendment may be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 13, before the word "members," to strike out "five" and insert "seven," so as to read:

Hereafter the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy shall consist of seven members of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the United States Senate and seven members of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the respective chairmen thereof, and the members so appointed shall visit the Naval Academy annually at such time as the chairman of the Board of Visitors shall appoint, and the Members of each House of Congress of said board may visit said academy together or separately as the said board may elect during the session of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Marine Corps," page 50, line 15, after the words "one draftsman, at," to strike out "$1,600" and insert "$1,800," so as to make the clause read:

In the office of the quartermaster: One chief clerk, at $2,000; 1 clerk, at $1,500; 2 clerks, at $1,400 each; 2 clerks, at $1,200 each; 1 draftsman, at $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 17, after the words "One chief clerk, at," to strike out "$1,400" and insert "$1,800," so as to make the clause read:

In the office of the assistant quartermaster, San Francisco, Cal.: One chief clerk, at $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 19, after the words "One chief clerk, at," to strike out "$1,600" and insert "$1,800," so as to make the clause read:

In the office of the assistant quartermaster, Philadelphia, Pa.: One chief clerk, at $1,800; 1 messenger, at $840; in the Quartermaster's Department, for duty where their services are required, 4 clerks, at $1,400 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps," on page 51, line 15, after "$890,000, to insert: "No law shall be construed to entitle enlisted men on shore duty to any rations or commutation therefor other than such as are now or may hereafter be allowed enlisted men in the Army: Provided, however, That when it is impracticable or the expense is found greater to supply marines serving on shore duty in the island possessions and on foreign stations with the Army ration, such marines may be allowed the Navy ration or commutation therefor: Provided, That hereafter so much of this appropriation as may be necessary may be applied for the purchase, for sale to officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees, of such articles of subsistence stores as may from time to time be designated and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy," so as to make the clause read:

Provisions, Marine Corps: For noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates serving ashore; subsistence and lodging of enlisted men when traveling on duty, or cash in lieu thereof; commutation of rations to enlisted men regularly detailed as clerks and messengers; payment of board and lodging of applicants for enlistment while held under observation, recruits, and recruiting parties; transportation of provisions, and the employment of necessary labor connected therewith; ice for offices and preservation of rations, $890,000. No law shall be construed to entitle enlisted men on shore duty to any rations or commutation therefor other than such as are now or may hereafter be allowed enlisted men in the Army: Provided, however, That when it is impracticable or the expense is found greater to supply marines serving on shore duty in the island possessions and on foreign stations with the Army ration, such marines may be allowed the Navy ration or commutation therefor: Provided, That hereafter so much of this appropriation as may be necessary may be applied for the purchase, for sale to officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees, of such articles of subsistence stores as may from time to time be designated and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 3, to insert:

Hereafter so much of this appropriation as may be necessary may be applied for the purchase, for sale to officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees, of such articles of subsistence stores as may from time to time be designated and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "increase of the Navy," on page 57, line 4, after the word "constructed," to strike out "one" and insert "two"; in the same line, after the word "first-class," to strike out "battleship" and insert "battleships," so as to read:

That for the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed two first-class battleships, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive af armor and armament, not to exceed $7,425,000.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, I desire to make a few observations in support of the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. President, there are two great purposes to be accomplished in the construction and maintenance of a Navy for this country. One is to prevent war, and the other, if war should come, to insure our safety against the attack of any great naval power.

In every emergency that has confronted this country, and in nearly every war, our Navy has protected and shielded our national honor, and except for which our country would not have the prestige and power which it now enjoys.

The Civil War was brought to a successful close in a large measure because the Federal Government was enabled to place a line of ships around the States which were engaged in war against the Federal Government, thus preventing the Confederacy from receiving the resources it much needed from other parts of the world. No country should delay preparation until involved in war, for it takes years to construct battleships. To prepare in time of peace for war is a measure of economy and safety. War is expensive; it means the destruction and exhaustion of the resources of the country. However much we may desire to escape war, we can not hope that we will always be able to do so. While we should cultivate a desire for peace, we would be too sanguine if we hoped to escape that which has befallen other nations. War may come at any time, and sometimes when least expected. If it should be our misfortune to be forced into a war, we can no longer select the place of battle as we could do in the early days of the Republic.

We now have possessions thousands of miles distant from our shores. While I consider it a great misfortune that our country should have been forced to take possession of the Philippine Islands and be burdened with the duty of administering their government, still our Government must, for the present at least, be dominant there, and so long as our flag floats above its public institutions we must protect it. While we retain these islands, we are under a sacred obligation to protect the people there and give them a good government.

In my opinion, by reason of such possessions, we have increased our danger of war, and have made it necessary to maintain a much larger Navy than we would have otherwise been required to do. We now have to sail the world over to protect our territory and commerce. We are pledged to the Monroe doctrine, not an international law—and the only way that other nations can be made to respect it is by always having at hand the means for its enforcement. The money the two battleships would cost might save us from war, and if we should be so unfortunate as to have it, they might save the expenditure of millions of dollars in the future. And in addition to that, they might save the lives of thousands of our citizens, many women from widowhood, children from orphanage, and the Government an expensive pension roll.

I believe that a navy is the greatest safeguard we can possibly have against war; it will minimize our danger of such conflicts. It gives us the greatest promise of peace. While Senators may differ as to whether or not a navy will have the effect of preventing war, we all must agree that when such a dire calamity has befallen the country it was naval engagements which have brought peace. Two naval engagements produced peace between this country and Spain, besides saving the lives of countless numbers of the youths of the land. One naval engagement in the Sea of Japan brought peace to Japan and Russia. While the President of the United States exerted the great power of his office for peace, and was instrumental in getting the Governments at war to consummate terms of peace, he would have been powerless to have done so except for the result of that naval engagement in which Japan's navy practically annihilated that of Russia.

In my opinion a large majority of our people want to see this country have an adequate navy. They are proud of the history of this country. They believe the only sure way to protect the character and dignity of the American name is by maintaining a large navy. Our countrymen recall with pride the names of Jones, Lawrence, Perry, Farragut, Dewey, and Schley, and many other of our illustrious naval heroes, whose deeds make bright the pages of our country's history.

Regardless of what may befall our Navy or our Nation, it can not obliterate those pages or diminish the pride of the American people in the deeds of valor of those who have fought our battles on rivers, lakes, and seas. The result of any war in which we may engage with any foreign country will be determined by engagements at sea. We do not need a large standing army, but we need a large navy.

During my service in the House of Representatives, which began 24 years ago, I favored suitable appropriations for our Navy. During that service I heard a very brilliant Member of the House oppose an appropriation for the Navy, and as an argument against it he urged that such advancements were being made in naval construction, that it was a waste of money to build ships, because they so soon become obsolete.

The argument did not then appeal to me, nor have I since thought well of it. If it were sound, then we should never have a navy, for the types of ships we may build from time to time may become obsolete. After the Battles of Manila Bay and Santiago I recalled with pleasure that I had in a small way contributed toward giving our country a sufficient navy to meet the then existing emergency. Notwithstanding the views which I have, I pray the time may come when universal peace may prevail and that the alarms of wars will not be heard in any country; but until universal peace is promised and guaranteed we can not neglect to maintain an adequate navy. It is an expensive establishment, but the cost is insignificant compared to the expense and calamities of war.

Since I have been a Member of this body I have voted for liberal appropriations for the Navy, and among my last official acts I want to be recorded as still favoring such appropriations. Let us not give up the ship.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think we want a roll call on this amendment, do we not?

Mr. LODGE. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, line 4, strike out the word "one" and insert "two" and strike out the word "battleship" and insert "battleships," so as to read:

That for the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed two first-class battleships, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $7,425,000.

Mr. ASHURST. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Crawford	Lea	Root
Bacon	Cummins	Lodge	Sheppard
Bankhead	Curtis	McCumber	Shively
Borah	Dillingham	McLean	Simmons
Brady	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Foster	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Bristow	Gallinger	O'Gorman	Smoot
Brown	Gardner	Oliver	Stone
Bryan	Guggenheim	Page	Sutherland
Burton	Hitchcock	Paynter	Swanson
Chamberlain	Jackson	Penrose	Thomas
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Thornton
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Pittman	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Poindexter
Crane	La Follette	Pomerene

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire the Secretary to read a short statement from the Navy Department, which I send to the desk, giving the reasons for the construction of two battleships.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from California that there is an amendment pending; but the document which the Senator from California sends to the desk will be read, without objection.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to amend the amendment of the committee by the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado submits an amendment to the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, line 4, after the word "constructed," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 13, on the same page, and in lieu thereof to insert:

One first-class battleship, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $7,425,000: Provided, That the money for the battleship herein authorized shall not be available unless said battleship shall be built in a Government navy yard.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the House provision.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask for the reading of the paper which I have sent to the desk.

Mr. LODGE. That amendment is simply the provision of the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is substantially the provision of the House bill. The Chair will state that the question is upon the amendment on page 57, line 4, to strike out the word "one" and to insert the word "two."

Mr. THOMAS. Is the amendment which I have offered in order at this time? If not, I desire to offer it later on; or, if it is in order, to have it voted on at the present time.

Mr. LODGE. I think, Mr. President, that we ought first to perfect the text before an amendment is offered to strike out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not hear the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I said that I thought the Senator's motion was to strike out and insert, although it is substantially the same language as the language of the House bill, and we must perfect the text before a motion to strike out and insert is in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Then this will come up later?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's amendment as a substitute will be in order after the text is perfected.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is in order to submit an amendment to a committee amendment, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut submits an amendment to the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, line 4, before the word "first-class," it is proposed to strike out the word "two" and to insert the word "three." [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will admonish the galleries that expressions of either approval or disapproval are contrary to the rules of the Senate, and the Chair hopes they will not be repeated.

The SECRETARY. And on page 54, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "$7,425,000" and to insert "$11,150,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether we had not agreed upon a naval program several years ago to build two battleships each year?

Mr. PERKINS. The Senate made no declaration on the subject, I will say, Mr. President.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The chairman of the committee says that no declaration was made in the Senate upon that subject. It may be that no declaration was made by formal vote of the Senate; but, so far as I was concerned, and I think so far as the country was concerned, it was considered that we had entered upon a program of building two battleships each year. Now I want to ask the chairman of the committee—if he has the information at hand, or if it is contained in the statement which he has sent to the desk, I will refrain from asking the question——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Connecticut that the Chair had overlooked the fact that the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] had sent a paper to the desk to be read. The paper will now be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATEMENT FROM THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

FEBRUARY 27, 1913.

The President has declared that "Until peaceful means for settling all international controversies are assured to the world, prudence and patriotism demand that the United States maintain a navy commensurate with its wealth and dignity."

This additional battleship is essential to our peace and prosperity. It is required if we would maintain our national prestige and is a part of the assurance of our national integrity. Its building, rather than being an expense to our people, should be regarded as a source of income in that its fabrication will furnish employment for thousands of workmen in practically all the allied trades throughout the entire country.

The command of the sea can only be attained through an adequate navy.

A battleship requires approximately three years for its construction. In time of actual or impending war the entire wealth of the United States would not permit of the purchase of such a vessel in the markets of the world.

The United States, with its wealth, its extensive coast line, the Panama Canal, the Monroe doctrine, can not be the first of the great world powers to deliberately reduce its naval strength; to do so is but to invite disaster.

The 13-inch guns of the Oregon, Massachusetts, and Indiana, and the 12-inch guns of the Iowa, Kearsarge, and Kentucky are of low velocity and short range when compared with batteries of the modern dreadnought. In a fleet action these vessels of ours would be annihilated by the modern high-powered vessel fighting from a range that would render them practically immune to any of our 12-inch or 13-inch shells.

By January 1, 1917, Germany will have 26 dreadnoughts in commission and the United States only 15, even if two are now appropriated for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] to the committee amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What I wanted to ask the chairman was for how many years have we fallen behind the program for two first-class battleships?

Mr. PERKINS. For one year.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Last year we omitted to carry out that program. So if the amendment which I have just sent to the desk should prevail, it would make up for the deficiency of last year.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator from Connecticut is correct.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is the reason why I have offered the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ASHURST responded to his name.

Mr. LEA. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment to the amendment be again stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would be out of order, a response having been made on the roll call.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think it is in order at almost any time for a Senator who is present and giving a fair degree of attention to inquire on a roll call what we are going to vote on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be again stated.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not object to a statement of the amendment to the amendment, but I had made a response on the roll call, and I simply call attention to the fact.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment proposed by Mr. BRANDEGEE to the amendment of the committee.

The calling of the roll was resumed.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] and refrain from voting.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). In the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], with whom I have a general pair, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FOSTER (after having voted in the negative). I wish to inquire if the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. FOSTER. I have a general pair with him, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have a pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. WEBB] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. WATSON] with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS].

Mr. PENROSE. I want to state, in explanation of my vote—and I want a record made of it—the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Bourne	Gallinger	Penrose	Sutherland
Bradley	Guggenheim	Perkins	Thornton
Brandegee	Lodge	Poindexter	Wetmore
Burnham	McLean	Root
Chamberlain	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Clark, Wyo.	Oliver	Smoot

NAYS—47.

Ashurst	Curtis	Kern	Pomerene
Bacon	Dillingham	La Follette	Sheppard
Bankhead	Fletcher	Lea	Shively
Borah	Gardner	McCumber	Simmons
Brady	Gore	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.
Brown	Jackson	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Newlands	Stone
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	O'Gorman	Swanson
Clarke, Ark.	Jones	Page	Thomas
Crawford	Kavanaugh	Paynter	Townsend
Cummins	Kenyon	Pittman

NOT VOTING—27.

Briggs	Dixon	Overman	Tillman
Catron	du Pont	Owen	Warren
Chilton	Fall	Percy	Watson
Clapp	Foster	Reed	Webb
Crane	Gamble	Richardson	Williams
Culberson	Gronna	Smith, Ariz.	Works
Cullom	Lippitt	Stephenson

So the amendment of Mr. BRANDEGEE to the committee amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, line 4, before the word "first-class," it is proposed to strike out "one" and insert "two."

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Again I announce the transfer of my pair from the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD (when his name was called). My colleague, the senior Senator from Texas, is absent on business of the Senate. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Mr. President, I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. ASHURST (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Arizona was called). I desire to announce that my colleague is absent from the Senate on important public business.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). Again announcing my general pair, I transfer it to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. WEBB], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I am assured that my pair, if he were present, would vote as I wish to vote, and I therefore feel at liberty to vote upon this measure. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 55, nays 16, as follows:

So the amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if I may be permitted a matter somewhat personal—in the way of privilege—I desire to state that I was unavoidably absent from the Chamber this afternoon when the vote was taken upon the question of the passage of the bill known as the Webb bill, the objections of the President notwithstanding. If I had been present I should have voted "yea." I was paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]; and he voted on the assurance that I would vote the same way he did.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 57, line 4, after the word "first-class," to strike out "battleship" and insert "battleships."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I submit the following proposed amendments:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 5, page 57, it is proposed to strike out the word "carrying" and insert "each to carry," so as to read:

two first-class battleships, each to carry as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Also, on line 8, after "$7,425,000," to insert the word "each," so as to read:

not to exceed $7,425,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Increase of the Navy," on page 57, line 9, after the word "Provided," to strike out "That the money for the battleship herein authorized shall not be available unless said battleship is built in one of the Government navy yards" and insert "That one of the battleships herein authorized shall be built in a Government navy yard," so as to read:

Provided, That one of the battleships herein authorized shall be built in a Government navy yard.

Mr. OLIVER. I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, which I will send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 13, page 57, after the word "yard," it is proposed to add:

If the estimated cost thereof is not more than half a million dollars above the price for which it can be built by contract.

Mr. OLIVER. I should like to have the amendment read as a whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as it would read if amended by agreeing to the amendment just read.

The SECRETARY. So that, if amended, the proviso will read:

Provided, That one of the battleships herein authorized shall be built in a Government navy yard if the estimated cost thereof is not more than half a million dollars above the price for which it can be built by contract.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to keep our navy yards busy—or one of them—if it does not cost too much money. The Government has had considerable experience in building battleships at very great cost to itself. As an example, the Florida and the Utah were sister ships. The Florida was built in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and her total cost was $6,299,295. Her sister ship, the Utah, of exactly the same type, built after the same plans, and identical with her in every way, cost $4,030,844, a difference in favor of the contract work of about $2,200,000. The New York, which was also built at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, was a sister ship of the Texas. The total contract price of the Texas was $5,830,000. The cost of the New York was $7,293,000.

That is not all, Mr. President. I will give, from the report of the Chief Constructor of the Navy, the cost of quite a number of ships that were built in navy yards and the amount that each one of them cost in excess of the sister ship that was built by contract at the same time and after the same plans.

The Connecticut was built in a navy yard at a cost of $374,000 more than the Louisiana, which was her sister ship.

The Florida, as I have said before, cost $2,269,000 more than the Utah.

The Jupiter cost $590,000 more than the Cyclops, which was her sister ship.

The New York cost $1,463,000 more than the Texas.

The Cincinnati cost $770,000 more than the formal proposals received from a contracting yard for the construction of the same ship.

The Maine cost $780,000 more than the limit of cost inside of which it was estimated that vessels of that type could have been contracted for.

Mr. O'GORMAN. May I ask where this information comes from?

Mr. OLIVER. This information comes from a communication sent to Congressman Foss, a Member of the House, by Rear Admiral Watt, the Chief Constructor of the United States Navy, dated the 25th day of this month.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Then it is authentic.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to say that if the Government is going to pay that much money for the purpose of having the ship constructed in her own yards, we are, in authorizing that, guilty of little less than a crime.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey and Mr. BACON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield, and to whom?

Mr. OLIVER. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey, who first rose.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should like to ask what evidence the Senator has that the ships built in the navy yards are not correspondingly better? The mere fact that we have saved a few dollars on the contract system does not prove that the product is necessarily as good. My own experience is, not as a shipbuilder but as a builder and an employer of men and a purchaser of material, that in 90 per cent of the instances where I have contracted I have been swindled; and where I have built my structure by day's work I have had a better building, and generally at a price not much in excess of the contract. And, even more, if there is an excess of a few hundred thousand dollars on the side of the vessel built by the Government the laborers and the mechanics have gotten the money, for, as a rule, 60 per cent of the cost at least is labor rather than material.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, in reply to that, I might ask the Senator from New Jersey what evidence he has that the Government-built vessels are better than the contract-built vessels?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have only my general experience.

Mr. OLIVER. I will not descend to that, but I will say this: In the first place, as a matter of fact, in actual service—this has been told me, and I have no doubt it may be verified by inquiry at the Navy Department—the Utah is infinitely superior in her action to the Florida. Furthermore, I will say that all of these vessels are built under Government supervision, under strict specifications. They must stand their trials. They must conform in every way to the requirements of the Government.

We can only assume that the contract-built ships are as good as the others, and as a matter of fact we all know that they are.

Mr. BACON and Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey addressed the Chair.

Mr. OLIVER. I yield now to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator if it is not true that in each of those instances the Government-built vessels were built under the eight-hour law as to the time of labor?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no doubt in the world that is true, Mr. President.

Mr. BACON. And as to the contract-built vessels, there were no such restrictions?

Mr. OLIVER. But in these ships those restrictions will apply.

Mr. President, I am only asking that we shall not spend more than $500,000 additional on this ship to be built in a navy yard. I really think that is sufficient to give up for the privilege of building our own ships in navy yards. If they can be built for the same price, or anything approaching the same price, I say it is the best plan to build them in the navy yards.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. OLIVER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. PAYNTER. I desire to ask the Senator whether the Navy Department has furnished any information upon the question of the relative value of the ships built by contract and those built in the navy yards?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I will say that I have no doubt that the ships built in the navy yards are just as good as the ships built by contract. I do not claim any superiority for the one over the other.

Mr. PAYNTER. What I was trying to find out was whether they were better than the others, in the opinion of the Navy Department.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no official information on the subject; but I understand that in actual practice, in this particular instance, the Utah works better than the Florida. But I will say, from my own experience with machinery, that that is a thing that is liable to happen. You can not tell the reason why in the case of two machines, two engines, built after exactly the same plans, running side by side, one will work easier than the other. Sometimes it may be called a matter of luck.

Mr. PAYNTER. Unless it is on account of the importance of keeping the navy yards going and in working condition, then, is there any good reason why we should pay a million or two dollars more for the same character of vessel in the case of the one built in the navy yard than in the case of the one we build under contract?

Mr. OLIVER. There is no reason whatever for favoring the one above the other. In either case we are giving employment to our own people; and what is the difference whether the men are employed in a Government yard or in a private yard? I say it is a little less than criminal to vote money away in this manner.

Mr. BACON. I will follow up my former inquiry by suggesting to the Senator that while there were formerly those differences in the hours of work of laborers employed on the one part by the Government and on the other part by the contractors, as to these ships all the work must be done under the eight-hour law, and consequently there will not be that difference which formerly existed.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I alluded a few minutes ago to the fact that they will all be built now under the eight-hour restrictions. Even with that, I am allowing in this amendment for an expenditure of $500,000 more on each one of these ships to have it built in a navy yard. My idea is that as one of these ships is to be built by contract, if the bid for that ship is $500,000 less than the estimated cost of the ship to be built in the Government navy yard, the second ship should be built by contract instead of in the navy yard.

Mr. BACON rose.

Mr. OLIVER. I yield.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he can state what was the length of hours of labor in the case of contract-built ships?

Mr. OLIVER. I assume, Mr. President, that they were built under the two-shift plan, which practically is 10 hours' work for each man.

Mr. BACON. There is a difference of 20 per cent in the labor, not allowing——

Mr. OLIVER. I grant that, but I am not providing here that both these ships shall be let by contract. I am only providing that if a ship can be built for half a million dollars less by contract than it can in a Government navy yard, both of them working under the eight-hour restriction, then I say it may be better that it should be built by contract. If Senators will stand here and vote down this proposition I say they are blind to the interest of their country.

Mr. SIMMONS and Mr. O'GORMAN addressed the Chair.

Mr. OLIVER. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to inquire of the Senator whether he does not think if the Government should go out of the business of shipbuilding, in that event the cost of building ships by private contract would be much greater than it is now?

Mr. OLIVER. No. There can not be more than two ships built in any one year, and with a half dozen big shipyards here, the competition is stronger and fiercer in that line of industry than in any other of the great industries of the country of which I have any knowledge. The Senator will certainly confess that these figures show it is not owing to Government competition that the shipyards have heretofore been able to build a ship at so much less cost than has the Government.

I yield now to the Senator from New York.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I want to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether in his opinion it is possible for any private shipbuilding company in this country at this time to construct a battleship cheaper than the Government can construct it in its navy yards, when it is remembered that under a statute which we passed a few months since it now becomes as necessary for the private constructor to employ his men upon an eight-hour basis as it is for the Government?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, the Senator's question is simply the same question put in a different shape that the Senator from Georgia asked a few moments ago. My reply is it may be that the requirement of the law, which was passed at the last session of Congress, putting all shipyards and all Government work under the eight-hour restriction will so increase the cost to the contracting shipyards that the Government can build a ship as cheaply as they can. But if that is true, then this amendment will not work, because I am allowing a leeway of half a million dollars on each ship. In other words, if the Government can come within half a million dollars of the private party, then the Government builds the ship. If it costs the Government half a million dollars more than it costs the private party, then award it by contract, as any reasonable, fair-minded business man would do.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Does not the Senator from Pennsylvania think it advisable that this great Government should have in operation at all times well-equipped and efficient shipyards? If so, they can only be maintained by allowing the Government shipyards to build at least a portion of the battleships that are constructed.

Mr. OLIVER. If the Senator from New York and his party associates are willing to pay the piper, then let them do it.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will answer that question. I rose to ask the same question the Senator from New York asked, and I desire to have it a little more direct in order that we may apply the Senator's reasoning to the conclusion which he wishes us to agree with him in.

If the Government should adopt the policy finally of building all its ships under the contract system, is it not true that the shipyards now equipped for the purpose of building ships must be dismantled, and would not the Government in the course of a few years be without any shipyard capable of building a battleship? Does the Senator think that it is proper that the Government should be put in that position? Is not a necessary consequence of the abandonment of those yards finally dismantling them and giving them up altogether?

Mr. O'GORMAN. And put the Government at the mercy of private shipbuilders.

Mr. OLIVER. I hope the Senator from New York will allow me to answer the Senator from Georgia. The Senator from Georgia uses the plural when the singular would answer better, because there is only one Government yard where ships can be constructed to-day, and that is the Brooklyn Navy Yard, adjoining the residence of the Senator from New York. There is no other navy yard——

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. OLIVER. I insist on completing my sentence.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Will the Senator permit a correction? I am quite confident the Senator is not well advised as to the capacity of the Government shipyards. I think there is a shipyard in the State of Virginia that can build any one of these battleships just as well as the private concern in Pennsylvania, if it should secure one or both of these ships.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, if that is the case it does not tally with my information. I understand that the Brooklyn Navy Yard is the only navy yard in the country that has the facilities for building these battleships.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Let me ask the Senator, did not the Mare Island shipyard in California build the Oregon? Did not the Government shipyard in California build the battleship Oregon?

Mr. OLIVER. The Oregon was built at the Union Iron Works, in San Francisco. Am I not right?

Mr. PERKINS. That is right.

Mr. OLIVER. The Philadelphia Navy Yard is a mere repair shop. The Brooklyn Navy Yard could be kept busy from one year's end to the other in repairs and in dock-yard work. It is not necessary to allow these navy yards to fall into disuse. It is not necessary to build ships in them. They could be used to the limit for repairs. I think I am within the limit in saying that there is not a single navy yard from one end of the country to the other in which a battleship can be built, except the Brooklyn Navy Yard. I am absolutely right on that. I know it is the case in regard to Philadelphia.

Mr. SMOOT. The modern battleship.

Mr. OLIVER. I am speaking of the modern battleship. Some of the smaller ships might be built here and the men kept busy.

The proposition before us, Mr. President, is just this: Are we ready to pay from 10 to 20 per cent more for one of these battleships than we do to the other for the privilege simply of saying it was built in a Government navy yard?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is very important for the welfare of the Navy, and, as I look at it, for the proper protection of the United States, that we should have our Government yards able to build all kinds of ships for the Navy. We should never be left at the mercy of private yards. On the other hand, it would be a great misfortune if we had no private yards to turn to in time of emergency. It is in the interest of the Government that both should be maintained.

I think I am correct in saying that there is only one yard that can build the great battleships we are now building. But that does not affect the argument. The Norfolk yard, with such additions as are now being made in some of the provisions of this bill, will be able to build a battleship, if it is not already in a position to do it. The Boston yard, with the addition of a crane, such as we are giving to the Norfolk yard this year, has a dock large enough to build a battleship if properly supplied with slips and gantry cranes.

I regard it as very important to give work to these large yards, and I regard it also as important that the private shipyards should have a share of the Government work. It does not make me unhappy to think that American citizens are making money in shipbuilding; I have no objection to their making it if they can earn money in that way honestly. I should be very sorry to see either injured by any of our arrangements.

I am inclined to believe that under the present eight-hour system, which is now extended to private yards as well as to Government yards, the difference in cost, which has been very much reduced, is still somewhat in favor of the private yard.

I do not myself believe that if the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania is adopted it would make any difference as to the building of the ship. I think it will be built in the Government yard. I do not think there is any such difference as the increase in cost mentioned. I have not compared the figures since the eight-hour law went into effect in the private yards, but I have no idea that there would be such a gap between them. I think it is very well to build one battleship in the Government yards and allow the other great yards of the country to enter into competition. There is one in Virginia, one in Pennsylvania, and there is one in my State.

I think there is one in Delaware capable of building a big ship, but of that I am not sure. There is a very large yard certainly in Maryland capable of building anything short of a big battleship. I think it is well that those yards should have an opportunity to receive work also. Of course on the Pacific coast there is also an opportunity to build.

I see no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, because I do not think it would have the effect or take any work away from the Government yards. But I think it is important that we should have one battleship built by the Government and the other open to competition among the great yards of the country.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. May I ask the Senator a question? Does not the Senator think a provision of this kind would be an incentive, possibly, to more economical management on the part of the Government in building the ships?

Mr. LODGE. There is no question, Mr. President, that it is for the interest of the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. In view of that, is not this a good proposition?

Mr. LODGE. It is.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. To put them on their guard.

Mr. LODGE. I think it would have an excellent effect because it would make it the interest of the officers in charge of those yards and the great body of men employed to give the best and quickest work, which means the lowest cost. I believe competition between Government yards and private yards is extremely valuable to the Government of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It is my judgment that a proposition of this kind would have a tendency to help the Government in battleship building by letting it be known that there is some competition in the building of ships.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I think so.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I believe the proposition is a good one and a healthy one.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not very much interested in the competition between Pennsylvania and New York, but there is a disposition apparently to attribute the expensiveness to the eight-hour law or to the change which it would effect. There was plenty of evidence before the committee when it had under consideration the eight-hour bill to show that it would enlarge the expense very little. In fact, one of the great shipbuilders of England, who gave a statement which we secured, disclosed the fact that he built more cheaply under the eight-hour system than he did under the longer day system. It is apparent to anyone why it is that it is more expensive on the part of the Government to build; it is that the Government can not get the same amount of work out of parties that individuals can. But that is not due to the shortening or the lengthening of the day; and the statute which has been passed will have very little effect with reference to the expense.

Mr. LODGE. I think it has had more effect in putting the Government yards and private yards on a level. I think it has made their cost moderate and it has equalized their cost. Certainly in most of the yards I have inquired into the bids were lower under the nine-hour day than they are under the eight-hour day.

Mr. BORAH. I see why that can be, but we had plenty of evidence to the effect that it was not necessary it should be.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator; in the long run I do not believe it will add to the cost, but it has tended to equalize the cost between the Government yards and the others.

Mr. SMOOT. The great difference between the cost of the Florida and the Utah, amounting to over $2,250,000, certainly could not have been due to labor alone, because I believe the whole of the labor in the building of the Utah would hardly amount to $2,250,000. Therefore, there is more than the labor question involved in the difference between the cost of building a battleship by the Government and in private yards.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, in view of the fact he has suggested a difference of half a million dollars between the work by the Government and by a private party—even in view of the eight-hour law obtaining—as he is an experienced machinist and has some knowledge of this business, to what does he attribute the marvelous difference we have as between the private corporation and the Government in building these vessels? It might be of interest to those of us who have these things in charge to know.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, it is a very long proposition. Unfortunately, we all know as a rule it costs the Government, for one reason or another, and it costs any Government, I think, more than private parties to do the same kind of work. I do not charge it to mismanagement. I rather think that the Government officials are bringing their cost down. It may be, and I rather hope it will be, that when the bids come in for these battleships it will be found that, although I do not believe they can come down as low as private parties, they will come down so that there will not be a half million dollars difference, and perhaps there will not be half of that amount. If so, then I would say build in the Government yards.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator if he attributes to any great extent the difference between the private corporation and the Government to the cost of material to the Government? Is that material?

Mr. OLIVER. No; not at all; I do not think it makes a difference. My experience is that the Government gets its material of all kinds just as cheaply as any individual can get it. The Government's business is well looked after in that respect.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But in the matter of managing labor and in the application of economic business rules the Government is not so strict.

Mr. OLIVER. It is the difference between a man looking after his own business and having a lot of hired men to look after it. There is the whole business.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. OLIVER. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. It may be of interest in connection with what the Senator from Pennsylvania has just stated in reference to the difference in the prices between the Government yards and the private yards, and I think it is entirely proper, to read a statement from an address by Mr. CALDER, February 26, in which he says:

> Only last week bids were asked for by the Navy Department for the building of the battleship Pennsylvania, with the result that the Newport News Shipbuilding Co. bid for the building of the Pennsylvania $7,275,000, and the New York Navy Yard bid on exactly the same plans, for exactly the same ship $7,303,000, or $28,000 more than the bid of the Newport News Shipbuilding Co.

Showing that the bids between the Government yards and private yards are getting very close together.

Mr. LODGE. Very close.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, may I supplement what has been stated by the Senator from Washington with this fact? In the estimate of the New York Navy Yard, which was only $28,000 in excess of that of the private shipyard, there was embraced an item of $860,000 for overhead charges in the shipyard in Brooklyn. Those charges would be borne by the Government whether or not the yard was kept up to a high state of efficiency; whether the battleship was built there or not, there would be the same charge. If that $860,000 should be eliminated from the bid of the New York Navy Yard, the fact would be that the Government shipbuilding yard would build the Pennsylvania for nearly $700,000 less than the bid that was offered by the private shipbuilders.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, the Senator from New York certainly is not ignorant enough of business customs not to know that in private enterprises overhead charges are included with costs, just the same as they are to the Government. In making a bid upon a ship a shipyard has to consider all of those things; and if the Government practice is becoming so much better that they can get toward the same cost as the private parties, then the amendment which I offer will not be operative and can do no harm.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The harm, Mr. President, might be this: If the private shipbuilding interests in this country could enter into a combination to build both of these battleships, even at a loss, they would demoralize and paralyze the Government shipyards and help to put them in a state of utter inefficiency, and then leave the Government at the mercy of the private shipbuilders of the country.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, if the big concerns of the country enter into combinations to give us anything cheaper than we are getting it to-day, then let them come along and make their combinations; but that is not what they make combinations for. The combinations are made for the purpose of raising prices and not for the purpose of bringing them down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will again be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, line 13, after the word "yard," it is proposed to insert:

If the estimated cost thereof is not more than half a million dollars above the price for which it can be built by contract.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I again transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. WEBB], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to announce for the day the pair of my colleague [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS].

Mr. FOSTER (after having voted in the negative). The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], with whom I have a general pair, is absent on business of the Senate, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SHIVELY. I desire again to announce that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM].

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 30, as follows:

So Mr. OLIVER's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Colorado if he desires to offer a substitute?

Mr. THOMAS. If it is in order, I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is in order.

Mr. LODGE. If I may be heard, Mr. President, on the point of order, I do not think the amendment can be offered as in Committee of the Whole. That amendment provides for doing exactly what the Senate has voted not to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not for the Chair to determine as to the phraseology of the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. It proposes simply to restore the House provision, which we have amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To avoid a controversy, the Chair suggests that the Senator withhold the amendment until the bill gets into the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. My only purpose is to be heard on the amendment before the bill is passed.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 57, after line 19, to insert:

One transport, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $1,850,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 21, to insert:

One supply ship, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $1,425,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 24, after the word "Navy," to strike out "shall" and insert "may"; and in the same line, after the word "build," to strike out "the battleship authorized in this act in such navy yard as he may designate; and shall build," so as to read:

The Secretary of the Navy may build any of the other vessels herein authorized in such navy yards as he may designate, should it reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents thereof, bidding for the construction of any of said vessels, have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding, the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said vessels.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

Increase of the Navy; armor and armament: Toward the armor and armament for vessels heretofore and herein authorized, to be available until expended, $11,508,309.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I desire to propose an amendment at that particular point, which I now send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, line 7, after the numerals, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall forward to Congress at the earliest practicable date a full report of all bids received by him relating to the purchase of armor, ship plates, and structural steel for the battleship or dreadnought purported to be named, when completed, the Pennsylvania, and that the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed not to award any contract for the purchase of steel, armament, armor, or ship plates until further directed by Congress.

Mr. LODGE. I shall have to ask that the amendment be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. That, Mr. President, of course would arrest the building of the ships authorized under this bill. It is clearly general legislation, and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before the Presiding Officer gives his ruling upon the point of order, I wish to be heard on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. With some reluctance I differ from the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], whose vast experience upon these matters gives him quite sound judgment; but I am unable to see that the point of order will lie, and believe after I have made a short statement, the necessity for, and the pertinency and propriety of, my amendment will become apparent.

I purpose that the amendment shall be retroactive in its character and relate to the bids which were opened about 10 days ago by the Secretary of the Navy.

The Armor Plate Trust is composed of the Carnegie Steel Co., of Homestead, Pa., subsidiary of the United States Steel Co.; the Bethlehem Iron & Steel Co., of Bethlehem, Pa.; and the Midvale Steel Co., of Philadelphia, Pa.

Bids were opened about 10 days ago by the Secretary of the Navy for approximately 8,000 tons of armor plate for the dreadnought Pennsylvania. These companies mentioned above were represented here by President Dinkey, of the Carnegie Co.; Vice President Johnston, of the Bethlehem Co.; and Vice President Petrie, of the Midvale Co. These gentlemen all stopped at one of the leading hotels here and were frequently in conference. As a consequence, when the bids were opened it occasioned no surprise to find that the bids did not vary a dollar a ton between the three companies and that the bids were in fact $25 a ton more than the price received by these companies on the last previous contract. In view of this apparent collusion of these three companies, comprising the Armor Plate Trust, it is inadvisable that the contract should be awarded without investigation. As it requires about three years to build a battleship, armor plate will not be needed for at least a year, and therefore no harm can come from a delay of a few weeks until this matter can be investigated.

I should like to have a vote at some time during the evening upon my proposed amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I have not the slightest objection to the inquiry which the Senator from Arizona proposes, but I do not want to arrest and delay the building of the ships. It takes a long time to construct a ship. The getting out of the designs on which the bids have to be based is a matter not of weeks, but often of months; then the bids take a long time. There will be ample opportunity for this inquiry to be made. All I object to in the amendment is the holding up of the ships which have been authorized. It would result, after ships have been started by the Government, in paralyzing the yard, and it seems to me that a proposition of that kind, which goes to the entire building of the ships, is new legislation, which fixes the time in which the ships shall be built.

Mr. ASHURST. As I said before, the armor plate called for in the bids will not be needed for nearly a year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] makes the point of order that the amendment is obnoxious to Rule XVI, it being general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the point of order be submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is so clear to the Chair that he feels it is incumbent on him to rule, and he sustains the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. The increase of one ship, made by the decisive vote of the Senate, necessitates a change in one or two of the totals.

On page 58, line 23, I offer an amendment, merely to make it correspond to the two ships instead of one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 58, line 23, it is proposed to strike out "$18,230,728" and insert "$21,768,228."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 59, I offer the following amendment:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, line 3, it is proposed to strike out "$370,000" and insert "$490,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Also the following.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "$11,508,309" and insert "$15,618,913."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Also the following.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "$33,462,312" and insert "$41,230,416."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in Committee of the Whole, open to amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer an amendment to come at the end of the bill——

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me to make a request?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I think I have made it before; but if not, I now make the request that the clerks may be authorized to correct the totals in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order has been already made. The Senator from Kansas offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

That any officer of the United States Navy who served creditably during the Civil War and whose name is now borne on the list of retired officers of the Navy shall have the benefit of all laws in the same manner and to the same extent as though such officer had been retired for disability incident to the service: Provided, That no increase of pay or allowance shall accrue prior to June 29, 1906.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I do not quite understand the purpose of that amendment being offered at this time. It is rather late; and to obviate the necessity of asking the Senator from Kansas to enlighten me, I will make the point of order that it is general legislation.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the Senator will withhold that point.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. No; I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is made that it is general legislation. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. After consulting with the chairman of the committee and other members, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, after line 8, it is proposed to insert the following as a new paragraph:

That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint Worthington Goldsborough upon the retired list of the Navy in the grade of rear admiral of the lower number, from October 9, 1899.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say that this is a man who has served in the Navy for over 50 years. He is now over 80 years of age. It is merely a compliment to him. There are precedents for it, and after consultation with quite a number of people we thought it would be a very nice thing to do for him in his old age.

Mr. BRISTOW. Is he on the retired list of the Navy now?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. He is subject to duty as a paymaster.

Mr. BRISTOW. Is he on the retired list?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I think he is.

Mr. BRISTOW. At what rank was he retired?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. A paymaster of the Navy.

Mr. BRISTOW. And it is proposed to make him a rear admiral?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That is the proposition.

Mr. BRISTOW. Is not that rather unusual?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I think not.

Mr. BRISTOW. How long has he been on the retired list?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I am unable to say.

Mr. JACKSON. Seventeen years.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that the proposed amendment be restated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again reported.

The Secretary again read the proposed amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I make the point of order that that involves legislation, and also involves an appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained, on the ground that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer an amendment, to come in on line 11, page 8.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, after line 11, and after an amendment already inserted at that place, it is proposed to insert:

That Thomas Harrison, a clerk in class 4 at the United States Naval Observatory, now over 80 years of age, who has served in the Naval Observatory for 60 consecutive years, be retired from the service, and that in consideration of his long and faithful service he be paid the sum of $100 per month during the remainder of his natural life.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, that is practically putting this civil employee on a pension roll at $100 a month, is it not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is retiring him, putting him upon the basis of a retired naval employee. It may be called a pension; it may be called by any other name. The case is a very exceptional one, the only case I know of in the Navy in which an employee has served consecutively over 60 years. The man is now over 80 years of age, and the alternative which confronts the Government is to turn him out without a dollar, or to recognize his exceptionally long service by retiring him upon part pay. He now draws $1,800 a year.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to say that he is simply a civil employee?

Mr. POINDEXTER. He is a clerk attached to the Naval Observatory.

Mr. SMOOT. And the Senator's proposition is to give him a hundred dollars a month for the balance of his life?

Mr. POINDEXTER. For the balance of his life.

Mr. SMOOT. I make the point of order that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know whether it has been corrected or not, but, on page 7, at the end of line 3, there is a typographical error. The letter "s" has been displaced after the word "employee." It appears at the end of the next line. It should be corrected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The correction will be made. Are there further amendments as in Committee of the Whole? If not the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, is my amendment now in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. LODGE. Have the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole been concurred in?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have not yet been concurred in.

Mr. THOMAS. I send my proposed amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, line 4, after the word "constructed," it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert:

One first-class battleship carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $7,425,000: Provided, That the money for the battleship herein authorized shall not be available unless said battleship shall be built in a Government navy yard.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the amendment which has just been read is designed to restore the bill to its original condition, or as it came from the House to the Senate. It provides for the building of one battleship instead of two.

Individually, I am not in favor at this time of building any additional vessels of this class; but I am perfectly willing to accept the provision made by the House, in view of the short interval between now and the adjournment of this Congress and the consequent difficulty of properly considering the many aspects of the subject.

The leading nations of the world have been for some time engaged in a mad competitive race of naval construction. The principal cause of this condition lies in the fact that each seems to labor under the apprehension that the others will outstrip it in that race unless it makes continued and increased exertions in the same direction.

Apart from the apprehension which is caused by the number of ships in construction by other countries, the principal reason assigned for this enormous increase in the naval armaments of the world is that it is necessary for the protection of the respective countries from the hostile designs of others and for the promotion of peace; that if any of these nations become laggards in the race their exposed frontiers and known weaknesses will invite invasion, aggression, or the assumption of such rights, actual or pretended, or the making of such demands as will result in war which in turn will result in disaster.

Another reason given for the construction of a great and constantly increasing Navy in this country is, that it is essential to our enforcement of the principles of the Monroe doctrine, and that without a great array of battleships of the most complete and modern design, construction, and equipment, that doctrine may at any time be imperiled, if indeed it would not be entirely overthrown. Hence it is said that we must, for these imperative reasons, expend large sums of money every year for the construction of huge instruments of naval conflict, and that it is not only a duty, demanded by the impulse of patriotism and the imperative law of self-defense, for us to do this, but that a failure to recognize and perform the obligation would fall little short of treason to the Republic.

If these reasons were actual, if they were well founded, there would be ample justification for these expenditures and appropriations; the necessity resting upon the Congress of the United States requires the expenditure as the supreme requirement of the hour. But I deny their soundness. It must be confessed, Mr. President, that they have been very effective, and may continue to be effective for the purpose in hand. When they cease to be so, others may be suggested along similar lines, having for their purpose the same ultimate result.

It has been said here that we must have a great Navy; that, as a first-class power we must take our rank and keep it among the nations of the earth, because our position imposes obligations that can not be sustained if we are not at all times fully prepared for possible ruptures with other nations. The point seems to be ignored, Mr. President, that we have a great Navy, or else the vessels which we have constructed have become obsolete in design and no longer effective in their equipment.

And if that be true, then it must follow that those which we now propose to construct must in due course of time, and probably before they are completed, become equally ineffective for the purposes for which they are built. The bill, as it came from the House, makes appropriations aggregating $146,818,364.53. That is an excess over the last appropriation of $23,666,825.78. Of this sum $46,000,000 are devoted to the completion of vessels heretofore authorized, not for new construction, but for the construction of vessels heretofore authorized and which are presumably in process of construction, some of them, perhaps, more nearly advanced to completion than others. For the new vessels for which this act makes provision there is appropriated $18,946,325, leaving a balance to be appropriated in future years for their completion of $27,477,600. This illustrates the constantly increasing demand upon the public revenues in order to keep pace with this constantly increasing race between the nations for supremacy upon the sea.

We have expended for the construction of vessels during the past 10 or 15 years, inclusive of the cost of completion of those which are now unfinished, something like $250,000,000. I therefore maintain that we either at present have a first-class Navy sufficient for all purposes of the present, the immediate future, or else we have made all this huge expenditure practically without result.

If, on the other hand, we have secured a considerable Navy, then may it not be better policy to complete the unfinished vessels, and particularly for some reasons to which I will advert a little later on, than at present increase the burdens of the tax payers by making provision for two battleships at a cost of considerably over $16,000,000 apiece?

My information is, Mr. President, that the American Navy consists of 277 vessels of all kinds, of which 38 are battleships; 33 of these are in commission. We have 11 armored cruisers; we have 63 submarines, of which 47 are in service; we have 28 torpedo boats and 54 destroyers, with 5 battleships uncompleted and in process of construction.

I shall not attempt at this late hour to make any comparison between the number of our vessels, the size and efficiency of their guns, or any other comparisons even of the most general nature with those of other countries, because the hour is too late to justify it. But I want to call attention to the fact that our Navy, small and inefficient as a great many people seem to think and as a great many Senators contend, is not so deficient as is their equipment in officers and in men. We lack 3,000 officers for the vessels already constructed, and our deficiency in men amounts to 6,000. So of the Navy which we have, the number of men necessary and essential to its operation and efficiency is sadly lacking. Three thousand naval officers represent a number which would require our naval school 20 years to fill from the graduates with which it annually supplies the country. Besides, there is the deficiency of 6,000 men in these times of peace. If a large Navy is essential for the purpose of insuring peace, our deficiency in officers and men is a grave one, and it justifies the inquiry where we are going to obtain the men and the officers for our unfinished battleships, to say nothing of these two battleships after they shall have been constructed.

Now, Mr. President, would it not be well to attempt, through our appropriation bill and by the exercise of other agencies, to man the vessels that we already possess before we construct others, which must be ineffective and useless because they can not be supplied with officers and marines?

It seems to me that under these conditions every element of good business principles and business judgment would suggest a suspension of our policy of shipbuilding until we shall have thoroughly manned and officered the vessels that we already have builded. By this process only can we place our Navy in the very highest state of efficiency. When the vessels uncompleted shall have been finished, and for which large appropriations are carried by this bill, then, Mr. President, some provision must be made for officering and for manning them, or our condition will be quite as helpless with as without them.

I am entirely ignorant of the causes of this situation or of the efforts which may have been made to remedy it. There are those in this Chamber who, of course, are better posted than I am as to why we have not the officers and the men that are necessary for the vessels which are in commission; but certainly every element of business precaution and of wise administration requires that instead of increasing the number of our vessels for which we have no men and no officers, we should make provision, and make it at once, for supplying the latter. This is the requirement of to-day. Let us place the vessels which we have in a high state of efficiency. This is the duty of the present; we only increase it by postponing its performance to the building of more battleships.

Then there is the matter of transports. A navy, in order to be at all effective when needed, requires a fleet of transports of sufficient capacity at all times for the demands of the fighting arm. In other words, a navy without such transports is virtually like a railway without any freight equipment.

Mr. President, I shall occupy no more time in a further discussion of facts and figures.

I therefore turn, Mr. President, to another phase of the subject. The total appropriation for the Agricultural Department, which I consider the most important of all the departments of the Government at this time, is just about the equivalent of the cost of one battleship. We spend upon each of these great monsters of destruction $16,000,000 to $18,000,000, which, we are told, become to a large extent useless, if not obsolete, by the time they are completed. But a department which covers the continent, which relates to the oldest of human industries, which is converting it from an occupation into a science, which provides for man in all his relations in life, the pursuit upon which we all depend for existence, whose development constitutes the greatest asset of the future, knocks at the doors of the Congress of the United States for its annual appropriations and obtains only as much as is appropriated for the building of a single modern battleship useless before completion.

Mr. President, it is my firm conviction that the greatest guarantee of peace to any country is the development of its great agricultural and pastoral interests. From that development comes that yeomanry without which no nation can be great. There is the nursery of the men who after all must bear the brunt of battle and of conflict when it comes, and without whom all the navies in the world are as nothing. There is the ultimate source of our dependence not only for peace but for victory in the event of war.

And if we would give to this great department every facility for promoting the pursuits of agriculture in their varied forms to the end that every acre within our domain susceptible of cultivation may be made productive and habitable, if we would multiply families and anchor them to the soil, if we would maintain and promote the best guaranty of peace that any nation can enjoy, we should exalt the Agricultural above the Naval Department and multiply plowshares instead of battleships.

Navies are an essential, but an essential only, to the equipment of this Republic. When I consider that the millions upon millions of unproductive acres of this country might be brought into cultivation through improved methods and by increasing immigration, and that the populating of their vacant spaces constitutes the highest possible safeguard against all danger to this country, whether that danger comes from foes without or from foes within, I am amazed that we give it less consideration than any other of our great departments.

I do not mean to be understood, Mr. President, as unduly criticizing the niggardliness of the Government in this direction, for perhaps that department is given practically what its present requirements demand; but I want to institute a comparison between the few millions that are spent in that direction and which must necessarily be beneficial to all classes and conditions of men with the many millions that are annually devoted to the construction of these huge engines of war, the multiplication of which is defended by the pretense that they are essential to the peace and the welfare of the Nation, and without which we may be exposed to the perils of war because of the huge naval aggregations of Germany and of England and of France across the Atlantic and of Japan across the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. President, I have not observed that the existence of huge navies has tended particularly to the promotion of peace. It is not my reading of history that they lead nations away from war and from rumors of war. There is nothing in the events of the past 50 years to justify that conclusion. On the contrary, these huge aggregations of battleships are more apt to provoke hostilities than to prevent them. The man upon the streets who is armed is the man likely to seek a quarrel, and nations are simply aggregations of individuals. We are more liable to encounter the belligerency of the great powers of the world, or some of them, as they are more likely to encounter ours because of this mad race for supremacy in naval building competition than would otherwise be the case.

It is a singular thing in this connection that wars and rumors of wars are in these days coexistent with proposed appropriations for the building of battleships. Just about the time that Congress begins to consider this question we become apprehensive. Somebody imagines that Japan is threatening or menacing our possessions in the Orient. Some one else declares, or the newspapers announce, that Germany's intention to colonize in South America are assuming definite form. On the other hand, we hear of possible hostilities with Great Britain, and France comes in for her share of implied threat against the peace and welfare of this country. It is only when we are about to determine the number of battleships that we are to build, or whether we shall build any, that neighboring nations and those across the sea begin their menaces and mutterings of hostility toward us and our outlying possessions. One would think, Mr. President, that of all times this would be the occasion when, if such intentions exist, they would be concealed or suppressed, because, if it be true that this slumbering hostility between the nations exists, common prudence would dictate it be allowed to slumber and thus suppress an increased armament instead of making it inevitable by a disclosure of their real purposes.

These war scares, Mr. President, are merely a part of the general plan that lies at the foundation of our policy regarding battleship construction. They serve to promote the policy of providing for two battleships every year by appealing to our anxieties and apprehensions. These exposures of hostile designs and aggressive policies come in convenient and recurring seasons. They can be predicted as accurately as we can predict the changes of the moon.

I know, Mr. President, of no war cloud now in existence or of any that has appeared upon the American horizon since the close of the Spanish-American War. I have heard, we all have heard, of secret preparations that are said to be making across the Pacific, of alliances between Japan and Great Britain, of Germany's intentions, and of a possible concert of all Europe against America. We hear of them when the Naval Committee of the House begins its work upon the naval appropriation bill. They follow it through that House and accompany it to the Senate. Their potential influence is active until the bill becomes a law. They are then laid away, are carefully preserved from injury, and brought out again and again for public inspection whenever battleship construction becomes a topic of congressional action.

But, Mr. President, as I have stated, these hobgoblins have nothing about them that is substantial, except as they constitute an asset of the great shipbuilding concerns which are interested in securing the contracts for naval construction, out of which they accumulate, and hope to keep on accumulating, millions of dollars.

Some time ago a serious rupture occurred between France and Germany, each a great naval power, the naval strength of Germany being superior to that of France. It was known as the Morocco situation. The news accounts every day were freighted with information as to the respective merits of the controversy, as to the time when hostilities would probably commence, as to the certainty or the uncertainty of the outcome. Germany began warlike preparations, and France likewise. The peace of the world was seriously menaced; but did the great navies of either of those countries constitute an agency for the continuance of peace or the prevention of hostilities? Was Germany able to dictate onerous terms to France because she had more ships and more guns? Was France cowed into any sort of surrender or concession because her's was the inferior naval equipment?

Why, Mr. President, the very fact of the existence of these conditions was the surest indication of an open outbreak. Each was prepared for war and wanted it because they were prepared. The breach was closed, but by what agency? That which prevented a collision between those nations was not their navies; it was not their armies, although divided simply by a land and river frontier. Germany with her 600,000 soldiers, France with her more than half a million, confronted each other across a boundary line scarcely as wide as the length of this Capitol. Their armies are equipped and continued at enormous public expense, for the preservation of peace, it is said; and yet we know that the very fact that those armies exist constituted at that time, as they have before and have since, the principal menace—the direct menace, I may say—to the peace of Europe.

Mr. POINDEXTER. He is a clerk attached to the Naval Observatory.

Mr. SMOOT. And the Senator's proposition is to give him a hundred dollars a month for the balance of his life?

Mr. POINDEXTER. For the balance of his life.

Mr. SMOOT. I make the point of order that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know whether it has been corrected or not, but, on page 7, at the end of line 3, there is a typographical error. The letter "s" has been displaced after the word "employee." It appears at the end of the next line. It should be corrected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The correction will be made. Are there further amendments as in Committee of the Whole? If not the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, is my amendment now in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. LODGE. Have the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole been concurred in?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have not yet been concurred in.

Mr. THOMAS. I send my proposed amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, line 4, after the word "constructed," it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert:

One first-class battleship carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $7,425,000: Provided, That the money for the battleship herein authorized shall not be available unless said battleship shall be built in a Government navy yard.

Apart from the apprehension which is caused by the number of ships in construction by other countries, the principal reason assigned for this enormous increase in the naval armaments of the world is that it is necessary for the protection of the respective countries from the hostile designs of others and for the promotion of peace; that if any of these nations become laggards in the race their exposed frontiers and known weaknesses will invite invasion, aggression, or the assumption of such rights, actual or pretended, or the making of such demands as will result in war which in turn will result in disaster.

Another reason given for the construction of a great and constantly increasing Navy in this country is, that it is essential to our enforcement of the principles of the Monroe doctrine, and that without a great array of battleships of the most complete and modern design, construction, and equipment, that doctrine may at any time be imperiled, if indeed it would not be entirely overthrown. Hence it is said that we must, for these imperative reasons, expend large sums of money every year for the construction of huge instruments of naval conflict, and that it is not only a duty, demanded by the impulse of patriotism and the imperative law of self-defense, for us to do this, but that a failure to recognize and perform the obligation would fall little short of treason to the Republic.

If these reasons were actual, if they were well founded, there would be ample justification for these expenditures and appropriations; the necessity resting upon the Congress of the United States requires the expenditure as the supreme requirement of the hour. But I deny their soundness. It must be confessed, Mr. President, that they have been very effective, and may continue to be effective for the purpose in hand. When they cease to be so, others may be suggested along similar lines, having for their purpose the same ultimate result.

It has been said here that we must have a great Navy; that, as a first-class power we must take our rank and keep it among the nations of the earth, because our position imposes obligations that can not be sustained if we are not at all times fully prepared for possible ruptures with other nations. The point seems to be ignored, Mr. President, that we have a great Navy, or else the vessels which we have constructed have become obsolete in design and no longer effective in their equipment.

And if that be true, then it must follow that those which we now propose to construct must in due course of time, and probably before they are completed, become equally ineffective for the purposes for which they are built. The bill, as it came from the House, makes appropriations aggregating $146,818,364.53. That is an excess over the last appropriation of $23,666,825.78. Of this sum $46,000,000 are devoted to the completion of vessels heretofore authorized, not for new construction, but for the construction of vessels heretofore authorized and which are presumably in process of construction, some of them, perhaps, more nearly advanced to completion than others. For the new vessels for which this act makes provision there is appropriated $18,946,325, leaving a balance to be appropriated in future years for their completion of $27,477,600. This illustrates the constantly increasing demand upon the public revenues in order to keep pace with this constantly increasing race between the nations for supremacy upon the sea.

We have expended for the construction of vessels during the past 10 or 15 years, inclusive of the cost of completion of those which are now unfinished, something like $250,000,000. I therefore maintain that we either at present have a first-class Navy sufficient for all purposes of the present, the immediate future, or else we have made all this huge expenditure practically without result.

If, on the other hand, we have secured a considerable Navy, then may it not be better policy to complete the unfinished vessels, and particularly for some reasons to which I will advert a little later on, than at present increase the burdens of the tax payers by making provision for two battleships at a cost of considerably over $16,000,000 apiece?

My information is, Mr. President, that the American Navy consists of 277 vessels of all kinds, of which 38 are battleships; 33 of these are in commission. We have 11 armored cruisers; we have 63 submarines, of which 47 are in service; we have 28 torpedo boats and 54 destroyers, with 5 battleships uncompleted and in process of construction.

I shall not attempt at this late hour to make any comparison between the number of our vessels, the size and efficiency of their guns, or any other comparisons even of the most general nature with those of other countries, because the hour is too late to justify it. But I want to call attention to the fact that our Navy, small and inefficient as a great many people seem to think and as a great many Senators contend, is not so deficient as is their equipment in officers and in men. We lack 3,000 officers for the vessels already constructed, and our deficiency in men amounts to 6,000. So of the Navy which we have, the number of men necessary and essential to its operation and efficiency is sadly lacking. Three thousand naval officers represent a number which would require our naval school 20 years to fill from the graduates with which it annually supplies the country. Besides, there is the deficiency of 6,000 men in these times of peace. If a large Navy is essential for the purpose of insuring peace, our deficiency in officers and men is a grave one, and it justifies the inquiry where we are going to obtain the men and the officers for our unfinished battleships, to say nothing of these two battleships after they shall have been constructed.

Now, Mr. President, would it not be well to attempt, through our appropriation bill and by the exercise of other agencies, to man the vessels that we already possess before we construct others, which must be ineffective and useless because they can not be supplied with officers and marines?

It seems to me that under these conditions every element of good business principles and business judgment would suggest a suspension of our policy of shipbuilding until we shall have thoroughly manned and officered the vessels that we already have builded. By this process only can we place our Navy in the very highest state of efficiency. When the vessels uncompleted shall have been finished, and for which large appropriations are carried by this bill, then, Mr. President, some provision must be made for officering and for manning them, or our condition will be quite as helpless with as without them.

I am entirely ignorant of the causes of this situation or of the efforts which may have been made to remedy it. There are those in this Chamber who, of course, are better posted than I am as to why we have not the officers and the men that are necessary for the vessels which are in commission; but certainly every element of business precaution and of wise administration requires that instead of increasing the number of our vessels for which we have no men and no officers, we should make provision, and make it at once, for supplying the latter. This is the requirement of to-day. Let us place the vessels which we have in a high state of efficiency. This is the duty of the present; we only increase it by postponing its performance to the building of more battleships.

Then there is the matter of transports. A navy, in order to be at all effective when needed, requires a fleet of transports of sufficient capacity at all times for the demands of the fighting arm. In other words, a navy without such transports is virtually like a railway without any freight equipment.

Mr. President, I shall occupy no more time in a further discussion of facts and figures.

I therefore turn, Mr. President, to another phase of the subject. The total appropriation for the Agricultural Department, which I consider the most important of all the departments of the Government at this time, is just about the equivalent of the cost of one battleship. We spend upon each of these great monsters of destruction $16,000,000 to $18,000,000, which, we are told, become to a large extent useless, if not obsolete, by the time they are completed. But a department which covers the continent, which relates to the oldest of human industries, which is converting it from an occupation into a science, which provides for man in all his relations in life, the pursuit upon which we all depend for existence, whose development constitutes the greatest asset of the future, knocks at the doors of the Congress of the United States for its annual appropriations and obtains only as much as is appropriated for the building of a single modern battleship useless before completion.

Mr. President, it is my firm conviction that the greatest guarantee of peace to any country is the development of its great agricultural and pastoral interests. From that development comes that yeomanry without which no nation can be great. There is the nursery of the men who after all must bear the brunt of battle and of conflict when it comes, and without whom all the navies in the world are as nothing. There is the ultimate source of our dependence not only for peace but for victory in the event of war.

And if we would give to this great department every facility for promoting the pursuits of agriculture in their varied forms to the end that every acre within our domain susceptible of cultivation may be made productive and habitable, if we would multiply families and anchor them to the soil, if we would maintain and promote the best guaranty of peace that any nation can enjoy, we should exalt the Agricultural above the Naval Department and multiply plowshares instead of battleships.

Navies are an essential, but an essential only, to the equipment of this Republic. When I consider that the millions upon millions of unproductive acres of this country might be brought into cultivation through improved methods and by increasing immigration, and that the populating of their vacant spaces constitutes the highest possible safeguard against all danger to this country, whether that danger comes from foes without or from foes within, I am amazed that we give it less consideration than any other of our great departments.

I do not mean to be understood, Mr. President, as unduly criticizing the niggardliness of the Government in this direction, for perhaps that department is given practically what its present requirements demand; but I want to institute a comparison between the few millions that are spent in that direction and which must necessarily be beneficial to all classes and conditions of men with the many millions that are annually devoted to the construction of these huge engines of war, the multiplication of which is defended by the pretense that they are essential to the peace and the welfare of the Nation, and without which we may be exposed to the perils of war because of the huge naval aggregations of Germany and of England and of France across the Atlantic and of Japan across the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. President, I have not observed that the existence of huge navies has tended particularly to the promotion of peace. It is not my reading of history that they lead nations away from war and from rumors of war. There is nothing in the events of the past 50 years to justify that conclusion. On the contrary, these huge aggregations of battleships are more apt to provoke hostilities than to prevent them. The man upon the streets who is armed is the man likely to seek a quarrel, and nations are simply aggregations of individuals. We are more liable to encounter the belligerency of the great powers of the world, or some of them, as they are more likely to encounter ours because of this mad race for supremacy in naval building competition than would otherwise be the case.

It is a singular thing in this connection that wars and rumors of wars are in these days coexistent with proposed appropriations for the building of battleships. Just about the time that Congress begins to consider this question we become apprehensive. Somebody imagines that Japan is threatening or menacing our possessions in the Orient. Some one else declares, or the newspapers announce, that Germany's intention to colonize in South America are assuming definite form. On the other hand, we hear of possible hostilities with Great Britain, and France comes in for her share of implied threat against the peace and welfare of this country. It is only when we are about to determine the number of battleships that we are to build, or whether we shall build any, that neighboring nations and those across the sea begin their menaces and mutterings of hostility toward us and our outlying possessions. One would think, Mr. President, that of all times this would be the occasion when, if such intentions exist, they would be concealed or suppressed, because, if it be true that this slumbering hostility between the nations exists, common prudence would dictate it be allowed to slumber and thus suppress an increased armament instead of making it inevitable by a disclosure of their real purposes.

These war scares, Mr. President, are merely a part of the general plan that lies at the foundation of our policy regarding battleship construction. They serve to promote the policy of providing for two battleships every year by appealing to our anxieties and apprehensions. These exposures of hostile designs and aggressive policies come in convenient and recurring seasons. They can be predicted as accurately as we can predict the changes of the moon.

I know, Mr. President, of no war cloud now in existence or of any that has appeared upon the American horizon since the close of the Spanish-American War. I have heard, we all have heard, of secret preparations that are said to be making across the Pacific, of alliances between Japan and Great Britain, of Germany's intentions, and of a possible concert of all Europe against America. We hear of them when the Naval Committee of the House begins its work upon the naval appropriation bill. They follow it through that House and accompany it to the Senate. Their potential influence is active until the bill becomes a law. They are then laid away, are carefully preserved from injury, and brought out again and again for public inspection whenever battleship construction becomes a topic of congressional action.

But, Mr. President, as I have stated, these hobgoblins have nothing about them that is substantial, except as they constitute an asset of the great shipbuilding concerns which are interested in securing the contracts for naval construction, out of which they accumulate, and hope to keep on accumulating, millions of dollars.

Some time ago a serious rupture occurred between France and Germany, each a great naval power, the naval strength of Germany being superior to that of France. It was known as the Morocco situation. The news accounts every day were freighted with information as to the respective merits of the controversy, as to the time when hostilities would probably commence, as to the certainty or the uncertainty of the outcome. Germany began warlike preparations, and France likewise. The peace of the world was seriously menaced; but did the great navies of either of those countries constitute an agency for the continuance of peace or the prevention of hostilities? Was Germany able to dictate onerous terms to France because she had more ships and more guns? Was France cowed into any sort of surrender or concession because her's was the inferior naval equipment?

Why, Mr. President, the very fact of the existence of these conditions was the surest indication of an open outbreak. Each was prepared for war and wanted it because they were prepared. The breach was closed, but by what agency? That which prevented a collision between those nations was not their navies; it was not their armies, although divided simply by a land and river frontier. Germany with her 600,000 soldiers, France with her more than half a million, confronted each other across a boundary line scarcely as wide as the length of this Capitol. Their armies are equipped and continued at enormous public expense, for the preservation of peace, it is said; and yet we know that the very fact that those armies exist constituted at that time, as they have before and have since, the principal menace—the direct menace, I may say—to the peace of Europe.

But while these nations were confronting each other in martial and naval array did anyone, even in the wildest moments of excitement, make any reference to the existence of these huge armaments as an agency of peace or as a preventive of war? Not at all. We know that Germany intended to strike, but was prevented by the protest of a large portion of her own people, Mr. President, who in that great crisis saved the peace of the world.

I hold no brief for the Socialists of this or any other country. I am neither wedded to their doctrines nor prejudiced against their sincerity of purpose; but justice requires the statement that the Socialist-Democrats of Germany, through their press and at their mass meetings, prevented the outbreak of hostilities between those two nations by serving notice upon the rulers of their own country that it should not occur. Not the navies nor the armies, nor both combined, but the determined spirit of a progressive people united by a common purpose stood between the nations and lifted high the white banner of peace. The men and the women of one of these nations, the bearers of its burdens and the fighters of its battles, served notice upon its rulers that no cause for war existed; that their blood should not be shed to gratify the ambitions of rulers or to display the prowess of modern armaments. Not the navies or the armies, not the treasuries, not statecraft or diplomacy, but the thunder tones of human protest voiced by millions of men, proclaiming human brotherhood and the useless sacrifice of blood and treasure, became the agency which preserved the equilibrium, tided over the crisis, and enjoined what would have been perhaps the bloodiest war of history.

Mr. President, there is another element which prevents modern nations from appealing to armed conflict with each other; I refer to the tremendous public debt of the great powers. The people of Great Britain, of Germany, of France, and of Japan are groaning under a burden of public obligations so colossal that the mind of man staggers in its attempted contemplation of their aggregate amount; and the interest annually wrung from the earnings of the people is of itself so stupendous in amount as to make the most reckless of rulers hesitate before plunging his nation into a course which inevitably increases the national obligations. I am no believer in huge national indebtednesses, but we must recognize they constitute an element which makes for the peace of the world.

Talk about Germany going to war with the United States unless we spend millions upon millions in the building of battleships to prevent it, or about Japan attempting to invade our Pacific shores, bent either upon conquest or upon revenge. Why, Mr. President, nations in these times can only conduct great wars at enormous expense, and most of them have reached the limit of the burden. All the navies in the world are powerless in the presence of these mighty conditions to seriously affect the continued amity of the great powers.

A distinguished gentleman said a few days ago that we must build a great Navy because "the Monroe doctrine has advanced across the Pacific, whether we would or whether we would not," and for the maintenance of the principles of that doctrine in the Orient we must continue to expand our naval armament until the desired number has been constructed, which, I think, is placed at 41 battleships of the line.

Mr. President, when the Monroe doctrine passes beyond the shores of America it ceases to be the Monroe doctrine. Call it what you will, it is no longer that. In his famous letter to Mr. Monroe Mr. Jefferson emphasized the corresponding obligation resting upon this Nation by virtue of its announcement of that doctrine; that we would keep our hands off the affairs of all other countries and confine our diplomacy, so far as regards that doctrine, to the Western Hemisphere. He who asserts that the Monroe doctrine is consistent with any foreign policy that carries it to the Old World either does not understand its nature or else, in his enthusiasm, he proposes to utilize it for purposes wholly inconsistent with the conditions which gave it birth.

Mr. President, I believe I am as patriotic as the average man; I believe I have as much concern for my country as any Member of this body; I believe I am actuated by as high impulses of duty as any of my colleagues. They are better informed as to many of the relations between this and other Governments, and also as to the extent to which our naval equipment should be carried, but they are in no respect better qualified to pass upon the fundamental proposition as to whether these great expenditures are essential to our peace, our welfare, or our dignity.

I believe that the modern spirit of commercialism is behind these great appropriations, and particularly those which relate to the Navy, and that it is these interests which constantly clamor for more and more vessels and constantly increase the amount of our appropriations for naval purposes, until they have swelled beyond those of any other nation in the world, England alone excepted.

Something was said here to-night about the cost of the construction of these vessels and the consequent desirability of having them constructed by private concerns. Economy, Mr. President, is a relative term. What one man considers to be economy another regards as something entirely different. What one man regards as extravagant another regards as economy. Some of us are willing to swell this appropriation beyond the $150,000,000 and insist that it is economy; some of us shy at the possibility of an increased cost of the construction of these structures by the Government itself as compared with the cost of their construction by private concerns.

Mr. President, I believe the Government should build all its vessels. I believe that if it will build all of its vessels and if its navy yards have not sufficient capacity, if it will increase that capacity to the end that it may construct its own naval equipment the craze for these many and continuing appropriations for other and newer vessels will die out, as it ought to. In other words, the moment the Government does its own construction, the pressure brought to bear upon us for the continued extravagances of naval architecture will be brought within reasonable and proper limits.

I do not believe, therefore, that where the Government can possibly do it, any of these vessels should be constructed by private parties.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] called attention to the fact here to-night that the construction of armor plate is controlled by three huge concerns, and that these, by combination, have recently presented a bid to the Government for the armor plate required by the Pennsylvania for exactly the same figure and one which is $25 per ton in excess of the bids hitherto made. I do not believe the Senate is surprised at the fact. It is the natural consequence of this inordinate appetite for battleship construction which grows by what it feeds upon.

Mr. President, sometime ago—I think it was in 1894—Congress found it necessary to make an investigation as to the cost of armor plate and as to the profits made upon it by sales to the Government. That was a House committee in 1894.

It reported to the House of Representatives that the Carnegie Steel Co. was making armor plate at a cost of $20 a ton, and selling it to Russia at $249 a ton, but was supplying the United States with the same armor plate at from $520 to $700 a ton. Apart from the enormous profit disclosed by these figures, we perceive the common custom of modern times which gives the foreigner the benefit of lower prices as against the domestic consumer. There can be no question that as long as we permit the construction of these vessels by private parties those combinations will be encouraged which the Senator from Pennsylvania declared existed for the purpose of increasing instead of lowering prices, and peace must be assured to this country if they are to be credited through the multiplication of its millionaires and of its combines.

Mr. President, I have said all I care to say, in a somewhat rambling manner and without much previous preparation, upon what seems to me the most important feature of this bill. Let us accept the House bill as to one battleship and make arrangements for its completion, complete those that are now in the process of construction as soon as possible, consider the matter of tranport equipment, and obtain as soon as possible the officers and the men that are necessary properly to arm the vessels that we have and those which are now in the process of building.

There is just one other feature of the bill to which the amendment is offered that I want to speak of for a moment. It was pretty well illustrated by the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut that we should have three battleships instead of two, at an aggregate cost of somewhere in the neighborhood of $50,000,000. In other words, it proposed to swell the bill, large as it is, by adding to the number of battleships, in addition to the other increases that appear in the bill as reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

If our expenses can be increased—and they can be only by congressional action—the difficulties presented to the task of reducing taxation are magnified. In other words, if our expenses are upon a rising scale our attempted reduction of taxation becomes practically impossible unless we are prepared to face and encounter deficiencies. We can only carry out the Nation's will as expressed at the polls, reduce our tariff schedules by revising them downward, and otherwise relieve the people of the burden of taxation resting upon their shoulders by prosecuting a system of economy in public administration and expenditure. As a consequence, those of us on this side of the Chamber who after next Tuesday will represent the national administration should see to it that in all these appropriations the limit of aggregate amounts should be made as small as possible, lest otherwise our financial legislation shall prove abortive and our entire system of financial reform discredited.

I do not charge—at least, I do not intend to charge—that the suggestion of three battleships had any such purpose in view. I merely say that the general tendency I have observed here to constant increases in the amounts of appropriations must necessarily make more difficult the task of reducing taxation. The scarcest thing in Washington is a reduction here of the amount of appropriations reported by the House of Representatives to us. The scale is always upward; amounts increase and multiply as we consider and reconstruct and ultimately enact or pass these measures.

Because there is no need of this outlay, because it is an increased expenditure which makes our task of reduction of taxation more difficult, we should confine ourselves to the one battleship, and serve notice that hereafter these expenditures and appropriations shall not go above a certain limit under any except the most extraordinary and exigent circumstances.

I therefore hope the amendment which I have offered will be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Curtis	Martin, Va.	Root
Bankhead	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard
Brady	Foster	Myers	Shively
Brandegee	Gallinger	Nelson	Simmons
Bristow	Gamble	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Gore	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.
Burnham	Jackson	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Burton	Johnson, Me.	Owen	Smoot
Chamberlain	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Stone
Chilton	Jones	Penrose	Swanson
Clapp	Kavanaugh	Percy	Thomas
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Perkins	Thornton
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Pittman	Townsend
Crawford	Lea	Poindexter
Cummins	Lodge	Pomerene

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in order to expedite business, I move that the Senate request a conference with the House on the amendments of the Senate to the bill just passed, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. PERKINS, Mr. PENROSE, and Mr. TILLMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 28180) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. If the Senator will withhold his motion for a moment, I desire to present a bibliography of the eight-hour day, and I ask that it be printed as a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the paper?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Merely a bibliography of the eight-hour day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 1, 1913, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 28, 1913.

The House met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee our Father in heaven that though the Members of this legislative body come from widely different sections, representing widely different interests and political views, that respect and courtesy each for the other prevail in a large degree, that friendships are formed which lift them above party affiliations, sectional differences, commercial interests. Grant that these manly qualities may prevail in each successive Congress. That the spirit of brotherly love, patriotism, and statesmanship may ever be in the ascendency and thus reflect credit upon a representative Government, and we will ascribe all praise to Thee our God and our Father. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

The SPEAKER announced that he had received a communication from the secretary of state of Nevada, certifying a copy of the assembly joint and concurrent resolution ratifying the amendment of section 3 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States of America, providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, on day before yesterday, at the request of my colleague, Mr. COLLIER, unanimous consent was given for printing as a document a report of Maj. J. E. Normoyle, of the Quartermaster's Department, relating to the flood conditions in Mississippi last year. Subsequently it was ascertained that there were some illustrations that ought to be printed, and there was some doubt as to whether the original order would authorize the printing of those illustrations. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the original order be so modified as to authorize the printing of the report with the illustrations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to modify the order relating to the printing of the report of Maj. Normoyle so that the report may be printed with the illustrations. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a valuable letter from Mayor Brand Whitlock, of Toledo, on the now rampant military spirit, and especially in commendation of the patriotic course of President Taft touching the revolution in Mexico. Brand Whitlock is known as a scholar and author and a profound student of sociology.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from Brand Whitlock on the subject of the Mexican imbroglio; is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICES,
The City of Toledo, February 26, 1913.

Gen. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR GEN. SHERWOOD: I have your note asking me if I could help you with a letter against wasting $32,000,000 on two more useless battleships. I am not sure that anything I can say on that subject will be of any use in stopping the construction of battleships. If it would, I should say a good deal, for of course it is all but a part of the vast and amazing superstition of war. They say that we must have battleships to protect us. To protect us from whom? No other nation is going to invade ours that I know of, and if they do the military tactics required to make the invasion a failure are very simple; all we have to do is to march west in good order, and about the time the invading force gets out to Kokomo, Ind., and its commanding general is informed that we can keep marching on indefinitely in that direction for about five times that distance before we march into the Pacific Ocean, I am sure he would be so discouraged that he would either turn around and go home or else become naturalized as a citizen and in a few years run for governor or United States Senator. Of course, if we had any ships of commerce on the sea, we might need some battleships to protect them; but we haven't any; and if our friends, the protectionists, continue to be as influential in the country as they have been in my lifetime we are not likely to have any. Protection drove our commerce and our flag from the seas, and if its beneficiaries want more battleships to look at let them build them with some of the money they made out of that policy.

I have spoken of war as a superstition, and I think it is just that. When I was in Europe last fall I saw those ugly gray battleships at target practice everywhere, and everywhere people were talking about going to war. A sailor on the boat deck of the Lusitania told me one afternoon that he was very anxious for England to go to war with Germany. When I asked him what Germany or the Germans had ever done to him, he could not tell for the life of him. And in Berlin a sergeant in the reserves told me he was anxious to get to war with England, although, as he said, he had a large family to support, and he could not tell anything that the English had ever done to him. These poor devils, of course, are but the dupes of those who wish to bring on wars for selfish purposes, usually for the sake of some commercial advantage, and our Nation surely should not aid in keeping up this foolish superstition. I suppose that as long as there are some nations in the world who want to go to war, and so long as there are commercial interests that will keep up revolutions in Mexico and Central and South America, we shall need a navy and an army to do police duty and keep the peace in this hemisphere, for which, under the Monroe doctrine, I suppose we are responsible; but I know of no reason for going beyond this need. Building battleships is like taking boxing lessons—they put you in that sort of mind where you are spoiling for a fight all the time, and that isn't a good frame of mind for a man or a nation to be in; and so I hope they will try and get along without any more battleships. Somebody will get hurt surely if they keep on building them.

In this connection I think we should all feel pretty proud of President Taft for the good sense he has shown during this Mexican riot. I have no doubt that he has had to resist very strong interests in behalf of intervention, and I feel that he is entitled to the greatest credit for the poise and equanimity and good sense he has shown in what to him was no doubt an exceedingly difficult situation.

Yours, sincerely, BRAND WHITLOCK.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Stuart, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 28283. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 27148) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. BOURNE, Mr. PENROSE, and Mr. BANKHEAD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 28766) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improving of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. CULBERSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 8178) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, and I ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri calls up the conference report on the bill S. 8178, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1587).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the act (S. 8178) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 6.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2, 3, 4, and 5, and agree to the same.

JOE J. RUSSELL,
J. A. M. ADAIR,
CHAS. E. FULLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
BENJ. F. SHIVELY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1, the case of E. Belle Piatt (S. 531): The House struck this item from the bill on the grounds that the widow did not marry the soldier until long after 1890. From the evidence submitted to the Senate committee and also to the conferees, it appears that she nursed and cared for the officer, who had a most gallant service, during a most trying period of his life and at a time when a cancer of the face was most offensive. In view of the splendid record of the soldier and the exceptional circumstances in the case the House recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 2, the case of Jerome McWethy (S. 2630): In this case the House reduced the amount allowed by the Senate from $40 to $30, on the grounds that the soldier's services do not warrant a higher rate. The Senate recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 3, the case of Cyrus N. Lyons (S. 7207): The beneficiary has died and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 4, the case of Josephine M. Perry (S. 7311): The beneficiary has died since the bill passed the Senate and the Senate recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 5, the case of Oscar B. Vibert (S. 7313): The beneficiary has died since the bill passed the Senate and the Senate recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 6, the case of Susan J. Littlefield (S. 7576): The House struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the widow was not the wife of the soldier during his service and that there was nothing exceptional in the case. Upon reconsideration it is found that she is in very delicate health, and the House recedes from its amendment.

CHAS. E. FULLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill S. 8274, to grant pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri calls up the conference report on the bill S. 8274, and asks that the statement be read in lieu of the report; is there objection?

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1588).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the act (S. 8274) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, and 5.

CHAS. E. FULLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
BENJ. F. SHIVELY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1 is the case of John Murphy (S. 1034), in which the House reduces the amount allowed by the Senate from $40 to $30. The soldier is badly disabled, and the rate of $40 has been allowed in some similar cases. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 2 is the case of Jane Starrett (S. 5281): The Senate allowed $12 per month. The House struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the marriage with the soldier, William Starrett, occurred long after 1890. But the evidence shows that the widow was the wife of two soldiers of the Civil War, both of whom had good service, and that she was married to one of them prior to the war. The House recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 3, the case of John H. Howlett (S. 6032): The item was stricken from the bill for the reason that the records of the War Department show that the soldier did not serve the full 90 days required. It appears, however, that he actually served some little time longer than that, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 4, the case of Charlotte Lewis McMahon (S. 6900): This item passed the Senate at $12 per month. The House struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the widow was not the wife of her first soldier husband during his service and did not marry the second soldier until long after 1890. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendment No. 5, the case of Mary M. Croft (S. 7710): The House reduces the amount allowed in this case to $12, for the reason that the pensioner had not been granted a pension at the bureau. But since the passage of the bill in the Senate the Pension Bureau has accepted the proof and granted her a pension of $12 per month. The House recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 6, the case of Charles Herbstreith (S. 7995): The House struck this item from the bill on the grounds that the claimant had not exhausted his resources at the Pension Bureau. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendment No. 7, the case of Harvey T. Smith (S. 8049): The House struck this item from the bill on the grounds that the soldier did not enlist until March, 1865, and if his disabilities of service origin have increased he could get relief from the bureau. The Senate recedes from its disagreement.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 8314) to grant pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri calls up the conference report on the bill S. 8314, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1589).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the act (S. 8314) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1 and 2 and agree to the same.

CHAS. E. FULLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
BENJ. F. SHIVELY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1 reduces the amount allowed in the Senate bill from $24 to $20. This is the case of Sarah E. McCann (S. 1572). Twenty dollars is the amount usually allowed in similar cases and the Senate recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 2 strikes out all of lines 9 to 12, inclusive, the case of Joseph Johnson (S. 5941). The soldier did not enlist until March, 1865, and had a very short service. The item was stricken out by the House committee in the belief that the general law would afford him the relief his services warrant. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendment No. 3 strikes out all of lines 7 to 10, inclusive, the case of William L. Sheaff (S. 8144). The House struck the item from the bill on the grounds that it is a second special act, but upon reconsideration the testimony shows the claimant to be wholly broken down and crippled and the House recedes from its amendment.

INDIANS OCCUPYING RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill S. 5674, for the relief of Indians occupying railroad lands. I ask that the conference report be read, as the statement is much longer than the report.

The Clerk read the conference report as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1564).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5674) for the relief of Indians occupying railroad lands, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed by the House insert the following: "situated within the States of Arizona, New Mexico, or California;" and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed by the House insert the following: "within a period of three years after the approval of this act;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed by the House insert the following: "and have patented to it other vacant nonmineral, nontimbered, surveyed public lands of equal area and value situated in the same State, as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the total area of the land that may be exchanged under the provisions of this act shall not exceed 3,000 acres in Arizona, 16,000 acres in New Mexico, and 5,000 acres in California"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of Indians occupying railroad lands in Arizona, New Mexico, and California;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JNO. H. STEPHENS,
CARL HAYDEN,
CHAS. H. BURKE,
Managers on the part of the House.

ROBERT J. GAMBLE,
CHARLES CURTIS,
W. J. STONE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The Senate recedes from the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the amendment of the House No. 1, on page 1, line 4, of the bill and after the word "authorized" add the words "in his discretion," which leaves some discretionary power to the Secretary of the Interior as to whether or not such lands should be exchanged.

The Senate recedes from the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the amendment of the House No. 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, which is as follows: On page 1 of the bill, line 6, after the word "lands," add the following: "Situated within the States of Arizona, New Mexico, or California," the object being to limit the States in which exchange of lands can be made.

The Senate recedes from the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the amendment of the House No. 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, and which is as follows: Page 2 of the bill, line 1, after the word "select," add the following: "Within a period of three years after the approval of this act," the object being to limit the time in which such applications for exchange can be filed for consideration.

The Senate recedes from the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the amendment of the House No. 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 2 of the bill, line 3, after the word "vacant," strike out the rest of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Nonmineral, nontimbered, surveyed public lands of equal area and value situated in the same State as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of the Interior, provided that the total area of land that may be exchanged under the provisions of this act shall not exceed 3,000 acres in Arizona, 16,000 acres in New Mexico, and 5,000 acres in California." The object being to specially specify the exact nature of land to be exchanged and to limit the number of acres that can be exchanged in each of the States mentioned.

The Senate recedes from the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the amendment of the House No. 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, amending the title by adding after the word "lands" the following: "In Arizona, New Mexico, or California." The object being to have the title conform to the substance of the bill.

The bill as agreed upon will read as follows:

An act for the relief of Indians occupying railroad lands in Arizona, New Mexico, or California.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to request of the present claimant under any railroad land grant a relinquishment or reconveyance of any lands situated within the States of Arizona, New Mexico, or California passing under the grant which are shown to have been occupied for five years or more by an Indian entitled to receive the tract in allotment under existing law but for the grant to the railroad company, and upon the execution and filing of such relinquishment or reconveyance the lands shall thereupon become available for allotment, and the company relinquishing or reconveying shall be entitled to select within a period of three years after the approval of this act and have patented to it other vacant nonmineral, nontimbered, surveyed public lands of equal area and value situated in the same State, as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the total area of land that may be exchanged under the provisions of the act shall not exceed 3,000 acres in Arizona, 16,000 acres in New Mexico, and 5,000 acres in California.

JNO. H. STEPHENS,
CARL HAYDEN,
CHAS. H. BURKE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

LOANING OF TENTS.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on Senate joint resolution 143, authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for use at the meeting of the Imperial Council of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, to be held at Dallas, Tex., in May, 1913, and ask that it be agreed to. The report is very brief, only three or four lines.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the conference report as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1590).
